Easter Flowers.

(Contributed.)

If we look at flowers superficially, we see only external beauty and sweetness. If we apply our reason, we detect the deeper beauties of construction and purpose. If we add to reason the eye of faith, we see in each flower a beautiful type of the law of our Redemption.

Take the history of a flower. The seed is first buried in the earth, then forces from without act upon the latent powers within it, and it sends up shoots, and they in turn bear flowers and fruits, but the seed itself is lost in that which is so far more complete and beautiful.

This is the history of each Christian soul: it is buried with Christ in Baptism. Then comes the power of the Holy Spirit, with His seven fold gifts, and develops the life within till it bears flowers and fruit.

The seed that remains a seed always, loses the power to germinate, and fails to fulfil the purpose for which God made it. It must become subject to the law of sacrifice to fulfil that purpose, and itself rot while the new creation springs from it. So with man. Sacrifice is the law of his being; either he must, like the seed, sacrifice himself for the new life, or he must sacrifice the new life (the life eternal), that he may remain a mere seed to the end, and thus use his free will to frustrate the purpose for which he was created.

So flowers at Easter point us to the law that there is no glorious resurrection unless there has been the previous burial with Christ, and the sacrifice of self.

Easter.

Only the Sick man prizeth Health;
Only the Poor man needeth Wealth;
Only the parched Earth welcomes Rain;
Only the Sufferer, Rest from Pain;
Only Repentance, Peace can bring;
Only from Lent doth Easter spring.

After the Ice, the Waters flow;
After the Storm, the glorious Bow;
After the Dronght, the gentle Dew;
After the Cloud, the Sky's clear Blue;
After the Darkness, Morning Light;
After the Fast, glad Easter bright!

Heavenly Sorrow brings true Joy;
Heavenly Love knows no Alloy;
Heavenly Washing saves the Soul;
Heavenly Food will keep it whole;
Heavenly Light shows Christ in the East;
Heavenly Fast gives Heavenly Feast!

Various.

DR. NICHOLSON, the Rector of S. Mark's, has decided, after due consideration, to decline the offer of the Bishopric of Indiana, made to him early last month. We regret that he found himself unable to accept the position, but many of his parishioners, who dreaded the thought of losing their much-esteemed Rector, will rejoice at his decision. S. Mark's, however, which has so lately lost the services of Mr. Hibbard, is shortly to say farewell to the Rev. G. McClellan Fiske, who goes to Peekskill on the Hudson, as Rector of that parish, and who will, we are sure, take with him the hearty good wishes of the parishioners of S. Mark's. We wish him God-speed in his new work.

THE Workingmen's Club has now a roll of 178 members. A Collender billiard table has been purchased, and will shortly be in use.

A SPECIAL service for the Guilds and Confraternities of the parish, was held on Thursday evening, March 29th. The Procession of Guilds was one of the most beautiful sights we have seen for a long time. All the banners were used, and among them, the banner of S. Christopher's Guild, which is very handsome, and has been much admired. A most successful parish Tea was held immediately afterwards in the Sunday-school room.

B. F. HOLL, Accounting Warden.

Easter Tuesday, March 27, 1883.

The Accounting Warden desires to congratulate each member of the Parish on its prosperous condition, as shown by the above report for the past year.

Parish Notes.

AT the Confirmation held on Friday, March 9th, 73 candidates received the "Laying on of hands," from the Bishop of the Diocese. Of the number 7 were men, 24 women, 26 boys, and 16 were girls. We all have to thank God for this blessing, and we trust that many of the candidates will find reason to bless God all their lives for this great gift.

THE collections on Easter Day amounted to $1274.20. Included in this amount $709 were contributed as special offerings.

ON Easter Day 473 persons made their communions. At the 11 o'clock and Evening Services the Church was unpleasantly crowded, and the ushers had very hard work to maintain due order among those who had come chiefly as sight seers. The music at the High Celebration was admirably rendered, and reflected the greatest credit upon Mr. Kirchner's ability in training and leading the choir. The altar was glorious with the lovely and tasteful floral decorations, and the many gleaming lights; its magnificent white frontal, its festal dossal, and the six tall standard candlesticks, presented to the Church this Easter; all of them, we believe, being memorials of some dear departed friend. They were designed by Mr. Vaughan, of Boston, the architect who built the new Chapel for the Sisters of S. Margaret there. The light wooden screen surrounding the choir is the design and handiwork of Brother Maynard; without obscuring the view of the altar, it gives a certain dignity to that part of the church. It is of late English design. If it remains as a fixture, it will probably be slightly decorated with color and gilding. A row of gas jets running along the cresting gives additional beauty to it at night.

THROUGH the liberality of one of our most active churchmen, electric wires have been attached to all the gas jets in the Church. These are connected with a battery which generates the electricity. The wires leading to each jet are controlled by a button, which, when pressed, allows a current of electricity to pass along the wires and light the gas. By this arrangement as many or as few jets as may be required can be almost instantly lighted, and much gas and much time also will be saved. The new improvement came into operation for the first time on Easter Eve.

AN Erratum occurred, we regret to say, in the article in the March No. entitled "A Visit to the All Saints Convalescent Hospital, Eastbourne." In the fourth line, for "Sister Susanna" should be read "Sister Serena." The former is an unknown quantity to us, and we doubt if there is a Sister of that name in the community; but "Sister Serena" is a name that speaks to many of our hearts.

WE have an interesting letter from F. Osborne, dated from Prince Edward's Island, giving an account of a Children's Mission which he held there. We are sorry to have to hold it over until next month from lack of room.

"THE Calling of a Christian Woman, and Her Training to Fulfil It," is the title of Dr. Morgan Dix's Lent lectures, recently delivered in Trinity Chapel, N. Y., and now published by D. Appleton & Co., New York; price 50c. The wholesome truths enunciated have naturally met with some resentful opposition, which chiefly shows that there are social sores which needed to be probed deeply, that, if possible, they might be thoroughly healed.

A VERY handsome Stole for use at Holy Communion was presented to the Church by a lady this Easter. It was designed to accord with the Festal frontal, and was embroidered at the School of Art. Another beautiful Stole, for use in preaching, was presented by another lady. Both are hereby gratefully acknowledged.

A SMALL Tract, intended to help persons in the devout observance of Maundy Thursday and Good Friday, and entitled "With Jesu in His Passion," was put forth by the Guild of S. John the Evangelist; the first, it is hoped, of a series which will appear from time to time; all the members of the congregation who desired it, received a copy on the 5th Sunday in Lent. The Tracts or Leaflets will be of such a size that they may easily be carried in the covers of the Treasury of Devotion.

F. SHEPPARD begs to acknowledge, with thanks, the following sums for the work at Darlington, Indian Territory, among the Indians and Cowboys, for which the Sunday School gave their Lenten offerings: $10 from a lady at a distance, $5 from a lady parishioner, and $2 from a little girl in the Parish. The Rev. Mr. Wicks, the Missionary, is in great need of funds to build a church as speedily as possible; he needs $1500 to be able to complete the building. F. S. will be glad to receive any donations for this excellent purpose.

ONE of the Lectures on the Prayer Book delivered by the Rector on Sunday nights in Lent will probably shortly be published, viz., that on "Confession."

THERE being a demand for copies of a photographic group of the parochial clergy, a photograph will shortly be taken of them, and we should suppose copies may be obtained by the middle of this month.

THE Altar Society received an order, some time ago, from Trinity Church, Wilmington, Del., for a white frontal, to be ready by Easter. The order has been diligently executed, to the entire satisfaction of our Wilmington friends, and to the satisfaction, also, of the fair workers, who have gained for the Guild purposes $100 by their work. We believe the burden of the work fell upon five or six of the members, who met day after day to accomplish the work in time. The frontal is of white corded silk, with fleurs-de-lis worked upon it in gold thread, and on the super-frontal there is a broad patterned band, also in gold thread.

THE Dorcas Society, which is under the charge of one of the Sisters, assisted by Mrs. Diehl, has met regularly at the Sisters' house on Tuesday mornings. There are many evidences that the influences brought to bear upon the members have been for their real good A new system has been adopted this year, by which the members were paid for sewing the materials provided. Any members of the congregation wishing to contribute money or half-worn clothing of any kind will please send it to the Sisters, 2032 Cherry street.

THROUGH the kindness of a lady of the congregation, each Sunday scholar was presented with a beautiful Easter card, immediately after the Children's Festival Service, on Easter Day.

LIBRETTOS of the music to be sung at the Choral Festival at S. Luke's Church, May 1, can be had from the Secretary, F. Sheppard. Price, 25 cents.

The Performance of "Gallia."

We invite the attention of our readers to the Concert to be given on Monday, April 30th, at Fifteenth and Chestnut Sts. Gounod's "Gallia," which has been a great success both in London and Paris, will be sung for the benefit of the French Mission of St. Sauveur. Miss Viennot will sing the solo parts, and our own choir will furnish the choruses. The concert promises to be a superior one, and the proceeds will be devoted to a most worthy object. The admittance will be 50c. and $1.

Mr. Herbert Spencer on American Life and Manners.

"O wad some fay the giftie gie us
To see ourselves as ithers see us."
BURNS.

To have the power of so seeing ourselves must always be instructive, if not always flattering to our self-esteem. Whether Mr. Spencer, who was in this country for less than two months, has really laid hold of some striking characteristics of American life and manners, and justly and fairly criticised them, we invite our readers to consider. We do not present the conversation which embodied Mr. Spencer's views, in full, but only make some quotations from it, taking care, however, to make them in accordance with the context. The conversation at full length is to be found in the Contemporary Review for January, of this year.

After speaking of the wonders of the devlopment of material civilization in America, Mr. S. remarks that if, along with that material progress there went progr ess of a higher kind, there would remain nothing to be wished. He explains that he thinks that the American people are losing their freedom, in the midst of all their material developments, and is reminded of the people of the Italian Republics of the Middle Ages, who, though they produced great works of art and architecture, and had great commercial activity, yet gradually lost their freedom.

"You retain," he says, "the forms of freedom, but so far as I can gather, there has been a considerable loss of substance. It is true, that those who rule you do not do it by means of retainers armed with swords; but they do it with regiments of men armed with voting papers, who obey the word of command as loyally as did the dependents of the old feudal nobles, and who thus enable their leaders to override the general will, and make the community submit to their exactions as effectually as their prototypes of old. It is doubtless true that each of your citizens votes for the candidate he chooses for this or that office, from the President downward; but his hand is guided by an agency behind which leaves him scarcely any choice. 'Use your political power as we tell you, or else throw it away,' is the alternative offered to the citizen. The political machinery, as it is now worked, has little resemblance to that contemplated at the outset of your political life. Manifestly, those who framed your Constitution, never dreamed that twenty thousand citizens would go to the poll led by a 'boss.' * * * It seems to me that 'the sovereign people' is fast becoming a puppet which moves and speaks as wire-pullers determine."

He maintains that any artificially devised system of government must grow into something different from that originally intended. "And it evidently has been so with you. Within the forms of your Constitution there has grown up this organization of professional politicians altogether uncontemplated at the outset, which has become in large measure the ruling power."

We would call particular attention to the next paragraphs, as expressing his belief that secular education alone is insufficient to fit men to act uprightly and justly by one another in a community, and that this can only be effected by a "certain moral sentiment," or, in other words—for nothing else can produce a right moral sentiment—religious teaching.

Q. "But will not education and the diffusion of political knowledge fit men for free institutions?

A. "No. It is essentially a question of character, and only in a secondary degree a question of knowledge. But for the universal delusion about education as a panacea for political evils, this would have been made sufficiently clear by the evidence daily disclosed in your papers. Are not the men who officer and control your Federal, your State, and your Municipal organizations—who manipulate your caucuses and conventions, and run your partisan campaigns—all educated men? And has their education prevented them from engaging in, or permitting, or condoning, the briberies, lobbyings, and other corrupt methods which vitiate the actions of your administrations? Perhaps party newspapers exaggerate these things; but what am I to make of the testimony of your civil service reformers—men of all parties? If I understand the matter aright, they are attacking, as vicious and dangerous, a system which has grown up under the natural spontaneous working of your free institutions—are exposing vices which education has proved powerless to prevent?

Q. "Of course, ambitious and unscrupulous men will secure the offices, and education will aid them in their selfish purposes. But would not those purposes be thwarted, and better government secured, by raising the standard of knowledge among the people at large?

A. "Very little. The current theory is that if the young men are taught what is right, and the reason why it is right, they will do what is right when they grow up. But considering what religious teachers have been doing these two thousand years, it seems to me that all history is against the conclusion, as much as is the conduct of these well-educated citizens I have referred to; and I do not see why you expect better results among the masses. Personal interests will sway the men in the ranks, as they sway the men above them; and the education which fails to make the last consult public good rather than private good, will fail to make the first do it. The benefits of political purity are so general and remote, and the profit to each individual is so inconspicuous, that the common citizen, educate him as you like, will habitually occupy himself with his personal affairs, and hold it not worth his while to fight against each abuse as soon as it appears. Not lack of information, but lack of certain moral sentiment, is the root of the evil."

One more "view" of Mr. Spencer's we must quote. He thinks that the American has not a sufficiently quick sense of his own claims, and at the same time, as a necessary consequence, not a sufficiently quick sense of the claims of others—that they tolerate various small interferences and dictations which Englishmen are prone to resist. He explains the latter point thus:

"The trait I refer to comes out in various ways, small and great. It is shown by the disrespectful manner in which individuals are dealt with in your journals—the placarding of public men in sensational headings, the dragging of private people and their affairs into print. There seems to be a notion that the public have a right to intrude on private life as far as they like; and this I take to be a kind of moral trespassing. Then in a larger way, the trait is seen in this damaging of private property by your elevated railways without making compensation; and it is again seen in the doings of railway autocrats, not only when overriding the rights of shareholders, but in dominating over courts of justice and State governments. The fact is that free institutions can be properly worked only by men, each of whom is jealous of his own rights, and also sympathetically jealous of the rights of others—who will neither himself aggress on his neighbors in small things or great, nor tolerate aggression on them by others. The republican form of government is the highest form of government; but because of this it requires the highest type of human nature—a type nowhere at present existing. We have not grown up to it; nor have you."

In spite of these difficulties, however, he believes that America has a great future before it: that the amalgamation of many varieties of the Aryan race will eventually produce a finer type of man than has hitherto existed; and that the nation will produce a civilization grander than any the world has known.

Child of Holy Mother! kneeling,
Where the Fontal Wave once streaming
Laved thy brow, with wet cross sealing,
Bend the head and bow the heart!
Organ tones are slow ascending,
Holy hands are o'er thee bending,
Grace and strength to thy soul lending,
Here on earth, to bear thy part.

Hear that Mother's gentle pleading;
Hear her blessed interceding,
For the Gifts, she knows thee needing,
For the long and weary fight:
"Strength from Holy Ghost be given,
Wisdom from the highest heaven,
Godliness and fear for heaven,
Knowledge to discern aright."

Strive in inmost heart to feel
Thou, this day hast come to kneel,
Where, of Holy Ghost, the Seal
Now, to thee is given.
Guard the Gift with jealous care;
Brighten it with Daily Prayer;
Nourish it, as mortals dare,
With the Food of Heaven!

Other Parishes.

The Three Hours' Preaching of the Cross was held at the following Churches on Good Friday: Ascension, Evangelists', S. Clement's, S. Mark's, Annunciation, Calvary, West Philadelphia, S. Timothy's, Roxborough, S. James the Less, and possibly two or three others. At Christ Church Chapel, and S. Jude's, the last hour only was commemorated.

The financial troubles which lately embarrassed S. Jude's Parish have been satisfactorily settled. The Church Progress Committee of that Parish in the early part of Lent distributed 3000 cards around the neighborhood, with notices of the Lenten and Easter services.

S. Chrysostom's is still struggling on in its up-hill work. The collections average only about $15 a month, and most of the support must therefore come from outside help. The Rector asks for $100 a month to cover all expenses. Ground has been broken for the Parish building, which will doubtless be a great acquisition to the Church. $300 is needed for this work. There have been one hundred baptisms since the Parish was organized, and the Pastor says that as long as the Sacraments may be administered, and the truth preached, and the indifferent sought out, so long will he remain at his post. S. Chrysostom's, by the way, is smaller than the smallest Church in England, which is at Pilkham, in the Diocese of Lincoln, and measures 26 ft. by 17 ft. 9 in. S. Chrysostom measures only 24 ft. by 17 ft. This will probably be the Sanctuary of the Church, when the time comes for its enlargement.

Mozart's Seventh Mass was sung at S. Mark's Church on Easter Day. 730 people were communicated at the four Celebrations. The Diocesan confirmed 55 persons in the evening. The Easter collections at Grace Church amounted to $6000, which entirely wipes out the debt on the Parish. At S. Matthias' Church $2500 were contributed towards the liquidation of the debt, and at Trinity Church, Southwark, the collection for the Rectory Association amounted to twice the sum asked for. Full Communion services were sung in several Parishes.

Work of S. S. J. E.

Father Osborne, after his missionary tour in the Dominion, has returned to Boston, and Father Hall and he resumed work once more in the old Church in Bowdoin street, henceforth to be known as "The Mission Chapel of S. John the Evangelist." Brother Gilbert accompanies them. Our readers are especially asked to pray that a blessing may rest on them in this re-entrance upon an old work.

On the 8th ult., Father Hall, at the request of the Bishop and clergy of N. New Jersey Diocese, conducted a one day's Retreat for clergy, at which about two-thirds of the Diocesan clergy were present.

Father Hall has been giving Bible Classes on the Fridays during Lent in New York at the Chapel of S. John Baptists' Sisterhood.

Father Sheppard spent Palm Sunday and Holy Week at Cleveland, Ohio, at the request of the Rev. G. W. Hinckle, Rector of Grace Church, giving a meditation each morning and a sermon at night, and preaching the Three Hours Service on Good Friday.

Father Field preached the Three Hours at Grace Church, Newark, N. J., of which the Rev. G. M. Christian is Rector.

Father Puller, who may possibly be remembered by some of our readers as the Mr. Puller who accompanied Father Benson in his first visit to America, has just been professed, and is about to sail from England almost immediately for Cape Town, to be Chaplain to the All SS. Sisters there, and to do what mission work comes to hand.

Those who have read the memoir of Bishop Gray, the late Metropolitan of S. Africa, will recollect that he begged Father Benson to send some of the Society of S. John out to Cape Town. At that time, thirteen or fourteen years ago, there was no one to go; now we hope a way is opened, and that others may follow Father Puller in due time.

The Nicene Creed.

Two errors are frequently made in the recitation of this Creed. 1. In the second division, treating of our belief about the Second Person, the words occur, "By Whom all things were made." Many people recite the words as if they were continuous with the preceding phrase, and expressed the truth that all things were made by the Father. This is indeed a truth, that the Father is the Fount and Origin of all created things, but this has been already expressed in the first division, where we affirm that the Father is "Maker of heaven and earth, and of all things visible and invisible." The words in the second division, "By whom all things were made," express that the Son was the personal agent of creation; in accordance with S. John's inspired declaration (S. John i. 3) that "all things were made by Him (i.e. by the Word, the Second Person), and without Him was not anything made that was made," and the declaration of S. Paul (Heb. i. 2), that it was by the Son that God "made the worlds." People have the more easily fallen into this mistake, by observing the punctuation given in the American Prayer Book, which is unfortunately wrong, since it differs from the original punctuation of the Greek, and also from that of the English Prayer Book. The words should be printed thus: "Being of one substance with the Father; By whom all all things were made, Who for us men," &c. 2. The second error which is often made, occurs in the third division of the Creed, relating to our belief about the Holy Ghost. He is there termed "the Lord and Giver of life." This does not mean that He is the Lord of life and the Giver of life, but that He is the Lord, i. e. a Divine Person distinct from the Father and the Son, and that He is, as His special characteristic, "life-giving." "He is" says S. Gregory Thaumaturgus, "the vivifying principle and creative power of all that is holy." It would be better here, too, and in accordance with the original Greek, if a a comma were inserted between the words "Lord" and "and:" so as to read, "the Lord, and Giver of life." The original of these two phrases was written as under ὁμοούσιον τῷ Πατρί·

Being of one substance with the Father:

Δι' οὗ τὰ πάντα ἐγένετο.

By whom all things were made:

and Καὶ εἰς τὸ Πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον, and (I believe) in the Holy Ghost, τὸ Κύριον,

the Lord,

Καὶ τὸ Ζωοποιὸν,

and the Life-Giver.

Perhaps while on this subject, we may also remark that the phrase which concludes the second division of the Creed, "Whose kingdom shall have no end," does not refer to "the quick and the dead" mentioned just before, but declares that the kingdom of the Incarnate Son shall be endless; the kingdom, that is, of His glory. The kingdom of His power shall cease when God (the Father) shall be all in all. The kingdom of His grace shall cease when faith shall be lost in sight, and hope in fruition, but the kingdom of His glory shall have no end, it shall last for ever. Marcellus, Bishop of Ancyra in Galatia, about A. D. 330, had taught that the office of king was only committed to Christ temporarily, and that He Himself, abandoned by the Word, which was only transiently inhabiting Him, would be reduced to nothing. The Church, on the other hand, inserted this clause into the Nicene Creed, at the Council of Constantinople, to teach that Christ, as man, should reign forever. So this dogma implies also the eternity of the Incarnation. Let us take care then, that by reciting our Creed carefully and intelligently, we set forth to our own minds and before the holy angels, a right faith.

Diocesan Choral Festival.

The second annual Diocesan Choir Festival will be held on Tuesday, May 1st, the Feast of SS. Philip and James. The use of S. Luke's Church has been kindly granted for the occasion by the Rector and Vestry, and the Rector, Rev. Dr. Currie, has consented to preach before the united choirs. There are twelve choirs in the Union this year, being three more than last year. The three additional ones are those of S. Jude's, Christ Church Chapel, and S. David's, Manayunk. Mr. Aaron R. Taylor was again elected musical director for 1883, and will conduct the rehearsals and lead at the Festival. The service will be fully choral, it may seem an odd thing to say when announcing a Choral Festival, but we mean that the responses will be intoned instead of being said, as they were at the last Festival. The Psalms will be sung to Gregorian Tones, according to Doran and Nottingham's pointing; the Anthem is by Goss, "Praise the Lord," the Magnificat by Stainer. Librettos containing words and music will be on sale at McCauley's, Hammond's, Boner's and Ditson's, price 25 cents.

Some Extracts from a Report of a Missionary Conference held in Brooklyn, Nov., 1882.

A GREAT FORCE IN CIVILIZATION.

(Extract from Speech of Archdeacon Kirkby.)

In the account of his voyage to Terra del Fuego, Mr. Darwin said that the natives were too degraded ever to be benefited by any measures. But a few years after Christian Missions had begun their beneficient work there, the English man-of-war Dreadnought went ashore on that rock-bound coast. The natives rescued the crew, whom they treated with great kindness, for which Queen Victoria sent them a letter of thanks. When Mr. Darwin heard of this he acknowledged that he had left out a great force in civilization, and at once became a contributor to the South American Missionary Society.

THE CHURCH'S WORK IN THE WEST.

(Extract from Speech of Rev. J. H. Eccleston, D.D., who had lately visited Montana.)

The Western Bishops say they despair of giving Eastern people any idea of the difficulties of their work arising from the mere extent of their Dioceses. The Jurisdiction of the Bishop of Montana stretches in one direction as far as from Brooklyn to Cleveland.

In August the speaker found the country dry, dusty and forbidding, and this condition is a symbol of the spiritual condition of the Territory. The men there are strong men, but they have every vice which strong men can get at. In most places the gambling saloons are the only places for the men to spend their evenings in. In one town, made up of three shanties and sixteen tents, all the shanties and fourteen of the tents were drinking and gambling places. The Missionaries do not reach, perhaps, more than one in fifty of these men. But if they did not reach one man there, it would be worth while to keep the Missionaries there, for when the salvation of those communities comes it will come through the influence of Christian women. The women now there, the wives of immigrants, are in a very sad condition, and spiritual help must be given to them. The society there is so bad that even some ministers have fallen under its temptations, and brought reproach upon the cause of Christ. In one place where Dr. Eccleston stopped, the people indulged in the most violent profanity on learning that he was a clergyman. Demanding an explanation, he learned that some young ministers had become notorious for their bad conduct. The people, however, knew of Bishop Tuttle and Bishop Morris, and spoke in the highest terms of them. "Send us such men," said one miner, "and we will thank God for them."

The speaker expressed his impatience at sometimes hearing Missionary Bishops visiting the East to solicit help for their work, called "beggars." They are not beggars, but our masters, and we should be thankful to them for telling us what to do.

BOYS MUST HAVE THE THOUGHT OF A MISSIONARY LIFE PUT BEFORE THEM.

(Extract from Speech of D. Courteney, of St. Paul's, Boston.)

Men are needed to exemplify in their own persons the truth of the Word, to testify from experience that it is the power of God unto salvation, and by their good conduct to show its transforming influence upon character. Men are needed to carry on missionary work, to gather new converts and to build up the old ones, and also to bind the daughter and mother Church together. The kind of men needed, and who are harder to get than money, are men who have found Christ to be all in all to themselves; who have a consuming zeal for the honor and glory of Almighty God. They should be equal to the work, both spiritually and physically, and intellectually.

In order to get such men in future, it is to be hoped that some may be selected when they are boys. Are there not Hannahs to thus consecrate their children? And we must learn to pray that God will give good men to the mission field.

GOVERNMENT WORK AND MISSIONARY WORK AMONG THE INDIANS.

(Extract from Speech of Rev. Henry Swift, Missionary at Cheyenne River Agency, Dakota.)

Mr. Swift said he had been engaged for nine years in his present work. It is difficult for Missionaries in that region to speak of the work in general, for the distances are so great that Missionaries can see or know but little of each other's work. His nearest neighbors are 150 miles away. He would therefore speak only of the work at the Cheyenne River Reservation. When he first went there, the situation seemed almost hopeless. The Indians were all degraded and idle. The women were made to draw the water, cut the wood and do all the work, even to skinning the game which the men had shot. Their dances were savage and barbarous in the utmost degree. For six months they danced about the scalp of a poor old woman they had murdered.

They had no expressive term for God, none for holiness, nor for chastity. A premium is put upon their idleness by the policy of the Government towards them. The Government gives them to understand that they will be furnished food and clothing as long as they are unable to support themselves; and the Indian is regarded as a fool who learns to work and support himself, when the moment he can do so, all Government help will be withdrawn. Missionaries among the Indians had a manifold work. Women teaching the Indian women, have to show them how to work, and must do the most menial work, in order to show them how.

Yet a good deal of progress has been made, and there are 500 Christians on the Cheyenne River Reservation. Industry centres round our Missions.

Some Indians are being educated in Philadelphia, and that is an interesting work; but it would be of little avail if the people to whom these educated Indians are to return, were not simultaneously raised to a higher level.

MISSION WORK IN LARGE CITIES, AND THE METHODS AND MEN REQUIRED TO CONDUCT IT.

(Extract from Speech of Rev. F. C. Putnam, Jersey City.)

Mr. Putnam said that the most startling feature of the present generation, is the desertion by the younger and more enterprising persons of the rural communities, for life in the cities. All capital is becoming more and more centered in few hands, and all business is concentrated into a few centres. One-fifth of the population of the whole country is now in the cities. This rapidly growing absorption into the cities, of the youth and enterprise of the country communities, implies, in a large proportion of cases, the breaking up of moral and religious ties, without the forming of new ones. A large proportion of this influx of population becomes non-Church-going, and therefore irreligious. In Jersey City, with a population of 130,000 not less than 30,000 are entirely separated from religious influence; in New York and Brooklyn, between 300,000 and and 400,000 are so situated. Thus we have in our midst a great mass of Paganism, which we have not adequate means to attack.

Mr. Putnam urged united action on the part of the Church to meet these great evils. As all great enterprises can only be carried forward by associating men of special endowments and training, by combining force and massing capital, the Church must learn the same methods.

He thought that the efforts of individual Parishes were not adequate for this work. It should be undertaken by the general Church.

Easter Day.

A CAROL.

(Contributed.)

Welcome, white-footed Easter Day!
Welcome, best balm for sorrow!
Thro' Passion-tide sadly we bide,
Joy comes with Thy bright morrow!
Glad hearts and gay this Festal Day
Carol aloud their joyful lay!
Alleluia! alleluia!

Come every soul beneath the sun!
Come lift your voices high!
Death for us done! Life for us won!
Shout Pæans to the sky!
He is not dead, nor grave His bed,
Darkness and Doubt for aye have fled!
Alleluia! alleluia!

The Choir.

While we are enjoying the grand services of the various festivals of the Christian year, it may be well for us to remind ourselves of the objects which we have in view in worshipping God in a manner so ornate and elaborate. The music, both vocal and instrumental, is intended not for the entertainment of man, but as an offering to God; and we have a right to take part in the enjoyment of it only so far as we try to enter into its meaning as an expression of our devotion. The choir of the Church consists of a body of subordinate ministers who, in the dedication of one special talent which God has given them, join with the Priests in leading the service of God.

A good voice is a gift and a talent which has been given to comparatively few persons, and therefore the dedication of this talent, to be used in leading the worship of God, can be made only by a few, yet it is an offering in which all the congregation have a part. But if there is to be that united worship which belongs to a service in the Catholic Church, rendered by Priests, choir, and people, there must be unity of feeling or sympathy between all the parts. The work of singing in a Church choir is indeed a very grand work, and it is not surprising that a place in the choir should be so eagerly sought by men and boys. This is a lawful object of spiritual ambition, and scarcely any higher office can be sought by the laity.

The improvement of the voice by singing, or the instruction given at the rehearsals, or the remuneration which in some cases may be given, or the admiration which a fine voice may excite, are not objects for which any one may rightly enter a Church choir. These are accidental advantages; but the true motive which should induce any man or boy possessing musical talent to seek admission into the choir, is that he may offer that talent to be used in God's services, and may help to express more perfectly the devotion of the congregation.

There are, then, several ways in which the members of a Church congregation may be more closely associated with the work of the choir, though they may feel quite unequal to taking any leading part in the singing.

1. The members of the choir need and should have the special prayers of the congregation, that they may sing with reverence and devotion, and that they may be kept from all evil, both temporal and spiritual.

2. When we are impressed by the beauty of a voice or the grandeur of fine harmonies, we must lift up our hearts to God, and by offering those sweet words and sounds join with the choir, and so make it a common act of worship.

3. All can contribute to a greater perfectness in the worship of God, in His Church, by reverence in worship, and by joining in the psalms hymns and responses with the choir; while some may be able to influence a friend, or a son, or a brother, who has a musical voice, to join the choir.

Bishop Magee, of Peterborough, on Prayers for the Dead.

Some aggrieved parishioners of a parish in Peterborough Diocese, a few months since, memorialized their Bishop, complaining that the Vicar had given notice of a Celebration "for the repose of the soul of Edward Bouverie Pusey;" and upon this evidence declared that he could not be a bonâ fide member of the Church of England but was a member of the Church of Rome. The Bishop replies to them thus:

"This is an accusation of the gravest kind, as it does not merely imply error of doctrine, but deliberate and systematic dishonesty and treachery, such as I am unwilling to believe any clergyman of our Church could be guilty of. I greatly regret, therefore, that such an accusation should have been brought by the memorialists against Mr. M. on grounds so manifestly insufficient as that which they advanced in support of it. Prayers for the dead are not necessarily a Roman rite, nor does their use necessarily imply belief in any Roman doctrine, still less membership in the Church of Rome. There is a doctrine respecting the state of departed souls, and there are prayers for these, founded on that doctrine, which are distinctly Roman—namely, the doctrine that the souls of the faithful departed pass through the cleansing fires of purgatory, and that remission of these pains may be obtained for them by masses and prayers offered in their behalf by the faithful on earth. This our Church distinctly condemns in her Articles, and this Mr. M. expressly assures me he neither holds nor has ever taught. On the other hand, there is a doctrine as to the state of the faithful departed, and there are prayers for them founded on that doctrine, which are not Roman but primitive, and which our Church has never condemned. The belief was undoubtedly general in the early Church that the souls of the faithful, though free from all suffering, were capable, while awaiting their final consummation and bliss, of a progress in holiness and happiness, and that prayers for such progress might therefore lawfully be made in their behalf by the Church on earth. Accordingly, prayers for the 'rest and refreshment of the departed' abound in the early liturgies of the Church, and especially in connection with the celebration of the Holy Communion. To say, therefore, that such prayers imply a belief in Roman doctrine, and that a clergyman who invites his congregation to offer them must, therefore, be a member of the Church of Rome, is not only unjust and uncharitable as regards him, but, also, as regards the controversy with Rome, extremely rash and unwise. We cannot afford to make a present to the Church of Rome of nearly all the Early Fathers nor of the ages of the Church which they represent. Nor can we safely give her so great a help in the controversy with us as to identify her doctrine of purgatory and masses for the dead with the doctrine of the Early Church as to the intermediate state and the primitive commemorations in the Eucharist of the faithful departed.

Was the Wine used at the First Eucharist True Wine?

Again and again, we find in the speeches of intemperate promoters of temperance, suggestions or assertions that the wine used by our Lord at His last Passover, when He instituted the Eucharist, was not a fermented or intoxicating wine, in fact, was not true wine; and this has even been used as a ground for celebrating the Holy Eucharist with water instead of wine—so dishonoring the Blessed Sacrament, and making it partially invalid.

Canon Bright consulted Dr. Edersheim about this. Dr. Edersheim is rector of an English parish, and, we believe, is of Jewish descent. Certainly he is an authority in all matters of Jewish rites and customs. His two best known works, "The Temple at the time of Jesus Christ," and "Social Life in Palestine in the time of our Lord," are full of interest and information on such matters. Dr. Edersheim writes in reply:

"Dear Dr. Bright:—The wine used at the Paschal Supper was undoubtedly fermented and intoxicating. In point of fact, it did intoxicate. A number of instances are related in the Jerusalem Pesach, p. 37 c, &c., in which certain Rabbis (who are named) suffered in consequence. In that part of the Talmud we have the exact data about the amount of wine in the four cups; its kind, color, and mixture, and even about the size of the cups.

"Again, in Jer. Pesach, 37 d, the direction of the Mishnah to the effect that it was lawful to drink between the first and second, but not between the third and fourth Paschal cups, is explained: 'This for fear of becoming drunken;' it being added that such was not to be apprehended in regard to drinking between the first and second cups, since the wine which was drunk while people ate, rarely intoxicated, but it was otherwise with wine drunk after food.

"Similarly, in the passage previously referred to (p. 37, col. c), it is stated that the wine need not be emptied at one draught, as this might more easily intoxicate, and that, to avoid it, each might be emptied in several draughts. In fact, to avoid intoxication, the Paschal wine was almost always 'mixed' (as was the common custom in drinking wine), the ordinary proportion being two parts of water to one of wine. * * * And finally, to prove this practice, in the Mishnah (Pes. vii. 13) it is directed that if two companies eat (the Paschal Supper) in the same place, the one turns its face to the one side, the other to the other, 'and the kettle' (for mixing the wine with water) 'stands between them.'"

He then goes on to prove that any wine produced by other than natural fermentation would be interdicted for use at the Paschal services.

"I hope," he concludes, "I have sufficiently established that the wine used at the Paschal Supper and during the week was the ordinary fermented and intoxicating wine.

"May I venture to add that, in view of the many and gross misstatements connected with Biblical antiquities and Jewish law, especially in their bearing on the Gospel narration and the history of our Lord, it would seem to me of the greatest importance that some means were devised to give to theological students accurate information on what so generally affects the proper understanding, not only of the Old, but of the New Testament?

"Believe me, dear Dr. Bright, yours very sincerely, ALFRED EDERSHEIM."

General Church News.

New buildings for the General Theological Seminary are needed. It has been decided to procure plans for these, and to erect them as the money is contributed. There will be required: For building for lecture rooms, etc., $40,000; for two dormitory buildings, $30,000; for fire-proof library building, $40,000. Total $110,000. Of this amount $60,000 have already been pledged, $40,000 of which, however, is only conditionally subscribed.

No new Secretary to the Board of Missions has as yet been elected to succeed the late Dr. Twing.

Five of the buildings of the S. Augustine Normal School for colored students at Raleigh, North Carolina, were destroyed by fire recently. There is a loss of $12,000.

The Rev. Dr. Ingham was consecrated Bishop of Sierra Leone on S. Matthias' Day. There are now 5000 communicants in this district. The climate is pestilential, and the brave missionaries embark with death staring them in the face. During the first twenty years of the mission, fifty-three priests died at their post, and for the first twelve years there was not a single baptism. In 1823 fourteen missionaries entered the field, eight of whom died within six months after their arrival.

The new building of the Church of the Advent, Boston, is constructed almost entirely of brick and stone. The seating capacity is about 800. The altar is exceedingly beautiful, being made of Caen stone, with steps of Tennessee marble. The new Church is now open for the daily celebration and offices.

At the Church of S. Mary the Virgin, New York, the Easter services were characteristically well rendered and effective. At the Solemn High Celebration, the procession was headed by the thurifer, swinging the censer; next came the crucifer, followed by the taper-bearers, and finally the choir and clergy. Before the Eucharist, the Hallelujah Chorus was sung. The service was Haydn's No. 16, in B flat, the principal feature of which is the Incarnatus, a very beautiful quartette, and one of Haydn's finest compositions.

THE Sunday School was re-opened on Sunday, September 16th. After school, Service was held in the Chapel, when the children were asked to be as strict as possible in keeping the rules which had been given then. It is hoped that parents will help the teachers in enforcing these rules, and the children in obeying them. Education, sacred or secular, is impossible without discipline. Prizes will be given at Christmas to all children who have obtained fifty marks. Some gentlemen teachers are much wanted.

THE Quarterly Meeting of the Boys of S. Christopher was held on Tuesday, September 4th, when about fifty members were present, many members being still out of the city. Brinton Finn was elected Senior Marshal, and George Durang was re-elected Junior Marshal for the ensuing quarter. It was proposed that a boys' beneficial society and a boys' register office should be established within the Guild. These subjects will be discussed at an early meeting.

ONCE more we are beginning to come together again. After the separation of the summer there are many warm greetings, many happy reunions, many pleasant memories to recall, new friends made, new experience gained, and the comforts and peace of home seem very sweet after a few months' absence. But this is not all; there is another side to our life, another and a stronger bond even than kindred or friendships that bind us. "We are all one in Christ." Let our earliest meeting be at the Altar, that centre of unity and of life. We may, perhaps, during these months have lost some of our religious fervour and devotion. Let us come here that we may be renewed. We, perhaps, have changed. Let us receive Him who never changes, "the same yesterday, to-day and forever." Perhaps we have allowed ourselves to be argued out of our strictness and care. Yet, as we receive that Divine Presence, our arguments all fail before His unfailing love. Many persons, during those months of absence from spiritual help, in the strong presence of worldly attractions, have felt the power of religion relax its hold, and the visions of faith grow very hazy and undefined; but let them come to the Altar, that meeting place of heaven and earth, that their faith may be kindled anew. There lingers there the memories of past fervours and resolutions, earnest prayers and deep devotion; surely all that is best of us seems still there as we come back again and again after times of carelessness or neglect, and He is there Who has known us through all and watched us in every mood, and Who has never changed towards us—He Who has promised, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee."

We come to our Lord for renewal and grace, but we come not alone; others kneel there with us to whom He gives Himself also. Think as we kneel there, returning from the pleasures of the summer, that perchance there kneels by our side one who knows little of the pleasures of the great world in which we move; little of the world, perhaps, except its sorrows and its difficulties. Christ has given, it may be, to me much of this world's goods; has allowed me to know much of its brightness, while from one who kneels by me He has held it all back, and now He gives Himself to us both. Shall I not try to make some other life a little brighter for all the good things He has given me? I have had my pleasure; this poor soul has had nothing but difficulty and trouble. Does not the Spirit of Christ constrain me to part with something for those who have so little? Surely, as we kneel together at the Altar, rich and poor, sick and healthy, as we all receive the same Lord, He says to many of us, I Who was rich for thy sake became poor; canst not thou give up something for the sake of those who have nothing?

The Revised Prayer Book Before the General Convention.

The following are among the principal changes or liturgical enrichments suggested by the committee who were appointed by the last General Convention to "consider whether, in view of the fact that this Church is soon to enter upon the second century of its organized existence in this country, the changed conditions of the national life do not demand certain alterations in the Book of Common Prayer in the direction of liturgical enrichment, and increased flexibility of use."

1. Morning and Evening Prayer.—The Sentences: Several new ones inserted, and one or more special ones for Advent, Christmas Day, Epiphany, Good Friday, Easter Day, Whitsun-day, Trinity Sunday; the Sentences for these days at Evening Prayer being different from those appointed at Morning Prayer.

On week days at Morning and Evening Prayer, the Minister, after saying one of the Sentences, may either use the Exhortation, or may, at his discretion, go on at once to the Confession, or to the Lord's Prayer.

At Evening Prayer a new, attractive form of general Confession is inserted. Also, instead of the Exhortation the Minister may say, "Let us humbly confess our sins to Almighty God," and so go on to the Confession.

In both Morning and Evening Prayer a short alternative form of Absolution is inserted.

The rubric before the Lord's Prayer directs that the people are always to say it with the Minister, save at the beginning of the Communion office.

At Morning Prayer the 95th Psalm (Venite), is printed at full length, with a provision that on the Sundays in Lent the hitherto omitted portion may be omitted.

The Psalter is printed without any repetitions. Proper Psalms are appointed for the first Sunday in Advent, the F. of the Circumsision, F. of the Epiphany, F. of the Transfiguration, F. of the Purification, F. of the Annunciation, Easter Even, Trinity Sunday, F. S. Michael and All Angels', and All Saints' Day, besides those appointed in the present book. There are twenty selections of Psalms, the Psalms used being used entire.

Canticles.—At Morning Prayer a short Canticle of six verses from the Song of the Three Children, which form the introduction to that part of it which we know as the Benedicite, is inserted as an alternative between the Te Deum and the Benedicite. The Benedictus is printed entire, with permission to omit, save on Sundays in Advent, the part hitherto omitted. Psalm cxxi. is given as an alternative Canticle after the Jubilate Deo.

At Evening Prayer the Magnificat is inserted as the first Canticle, and the Nunc Dimittis as the second, the present ones being left as alternatives.

The Apostles' Creed only is printed, but leave is given to use the Nicene Creed, which is printed in its proper place in the Communion Service.

The Versicles following the Creed at Evening Praper are similar to those of the English Prayer Book. The third Collect at Evening Prayer is identical with that of the English Prayer Book, "Lighten our darkness, etc." After the third Collect at Morning and Evening Prayer a rubric provides for an Anthem. Another rubric gives permission to end the office at this point, with such prayer or prayers, taken out of this book, as the Minister shall think proper.

The Prayer for the President, at Evening Prayer, is adapted from the Prayer for the Queen and Royal Family, in the English Book.

The "Prayer for All Conditions of Men" has the clause, "Especially those for whom our prayers are desired," inserted in brackets after the words, "distressed in mind, body, or estate," to be used when any desire the prayers of the congregation; and in the "General Thanksgiving" the words, "Particularly to those who desire now to offer up their praises and thanksgivings for Thy late mercies vouchsafed unto them," are similarly inserted after the words, "to us, and to all men," to be used when any who have been prayed for desire to return thanks.

At Evening Prayer, in place of the Prayer of S. Chrysostom, is put the prayer, "Assist us mercifully, O Lord, etc."

A considerable number of Prayers and Thanksgivings are added to those in the present Prayer Book. Prayers for persons on a journey, for young persons preparing for Confirmation, for all who are dependent on the public care, for Missions, for the increase of the Ministry, for fruitful seasons (2), in the vacancy of a cure of souls, and a selection of prayers and Collects that may be said after the Collects at Morning and Evening Prayer at the discretion of the Minister. Thanksgivings for a child's recovery from sickness, for an escape from an accident, for a safe return from sea.

A new office, short but beautiful, is inserted, called "The Beatitudes of the Gospel," which may be used after the third Collect at Evening Prayer, or as a separate office. The Minister, standing, repeats the beatitudes, and the people, kneeling, respond after each, "Lord, have mercy upon us, and be it unto Thy servants according to Thy Word." This is followed by two short prayers, for grace to seek spiritual blessings, and for wisdom, and a blessing.

A Penitential office for Ash-Wednesday is provided, to be said after the prayer in the Litany, "We humbly beseech Thee, O Father, etc.," or at other times, at the discretion of the Minister. Besides what is appointed in the present Book, the 51st Psalm is to be said by all the congregation, and the lesser Litany, the Lord's Prayer, and some Versicles, to be used.

A Proper Order for Morning Prayer on Thanksgiving Day is given, which is a considerable improvement on the present one, including several new and valuable prayers.

Then follows A Short Office of Prayer for Sundry Occasions, to be used at Noonday Services, Missionary Meetings, the Visitations of Families and Neighborhoods, the Chatechising of Children in Churches or Schools, and on other like occasions for which no special order of prayer hath been appointed.

The Communion Service is considerably enriched. A second Collect, Epistle and Gospel is provided for use on Christmas Day, Easter Day and Whitsunday, for use in Churches where there are two Celebrations. An entirely new Collect, Epistle and Gospel is given for use on the Feast of the Transfiguration, which Festival is to be kept on January 18, in Epiphany-tide. Collects are given for each day in Holy Week, at present unprovided with one; also for Easter Monday and Tuesday, and Whitsun-Monday and Tuesday. When there is a second Celebration the Decalogue need not be repeated, but in that case the Summary of the Law must be used. An act of praise is inserted to be said after the Gospel, in addition to that now used at its announcement, "Thanks be to Thee, O Lord." The two long Exhortations are relegated to the end of the Service, and are to be used at the discretion of the Minister. The Exhortation beginning, "Dearly beloved in the Lord" may be omitted, provided it is said once in each month. The Nicene Creed is printed in full, and is ordered to be said at the Communion Service, on Christmas, Easter, Whitsun, Ascension and Trinity. The Priest alone is directed to sing or say the words, "Therefore with Angels and Archangels, etc.," and the Priest and people sing or say the "Holy, Holy, Holy, etc." A Note is added at the end of the Service, directing that every communicant should receive the communion at least three times in a year, of which Easter is to be one.

In the occasional Services the most important improvement is a new office for the Burial of Infants, which was sorely needed.

Just before the Psalter are placed new Special Anthems for Christmas Day, Ascension Day, Whitsun and Trinity, to take the place of the Venite, similar to the Easter Anthem, which is placed among them.

A Sometime Wish.

I sometimes wish we could but float
Adown life's stream in Pleasure's boat,
Grasp here and there a passing reed,
Our course not stayed by any need,
Until we reach the fields remote.

But, hark, a bird's sweet-piercing note!
"The fields are but a gloomy moat
To which your pleasure-voyage must
I sometimes wish! [lead."—

My bird once more with bursting throat
Entreats my fancies inchoate:
"Duty is God; and her's the seed
Whence Pleasure's barque must steer."—
I will not wish! [Indeed,

A Model Country Parson.

There is great sadness at this time in Plympton, S. Mary, one of the most beautiful Parishes in England, on account of the loss of the Vicar or Parish Priest, who has lately been killed in the Pyrenees. He had gone away for a short holiday with his brothers, and one morning started for a climb on the mountain, saying that he would return in a short time, but since then he has not been heard of. It is supposed that he fell from some cliff or into some ravine, and so died, and his people have now given up all hope of seeing him in his Parish again.

The circumstances and relations of an English country Parson are so different from anything we see here that a sketch of this Parish and its model Priest, in the neighborhood of Plymouth, may be interesting to our readers. Let us begin by taking a look at the beautiful Church, seven or eight centuries old, and capable of accommodating a thousand people. Some parts of the Church are older still, and in one side chapel, dedicated to S. Catharine, we find tombs of warriors who fought under the Conqueror and in the Crusades. It was a grand, quiet old place, and the descendants of these ancient warriors slept, as quietly as their forefathers, through many a long sermon elaborately composed and laboriously delivered by learned but not eloquent divines.

At last a day came when, the Vicar having received preferment, it was determined by the Dean and Canons of Windsor to send an active man who would stir up the people and awaken their slumbering Church life. Every one wondered who would come, the old ladies stated their opinion, but all shuddered when at last the news came that he was a High Churchman, and some said that he was even a Ritualist. The dreadful day arrived, and some went down to see him get out of the railway cars. His baggage had come down before him, and one lady had probed it with her umbrella, and the bag had opened and there was something in it scarlet, and this was of course known to be his vestments. Some expected to see him arrive in vestments, with a very long face and a whining voice. What was their surprise when a tall man, with a beaming face and a strong voice, weighing about two hundred pounds, was pointed to by the conductor as their new Vicar. His face looked the very picture of kindness, gentleness and good nature. It was impossible not to like him. In a few weeks he had gone over all his wide Parish, six miles by five in extent, had called on all his people, 4000 in number, of all creeds and opinions, had made friends with the children, had made lists of the sick, had called together his district visitors, and had organized schools, missions, lectures, parochial charities, and all the machinery of a well-ordered Parish. He then invited two other Clergy to assist him, of whom the writer of this article was one, and amid persecution, ridicule, slander, abuse and incivility, these country Clergy worked together, night and day, for the glory of God and the good of His people.

The Vicar, of course, had to bear the chief part of their abuse, and it will hardly be credited that the writer has seen members of the vestry, in public meetings, hold their fists in this good man's face. As an honest Priest he taught the doctrine of confession, which brought down upon him a torrent of abuse from the local papers. A magistrate threatened him and his assistants with a horse-whipping and cold bath afterwards. Spies came down, prompted by the Church Association, to tell anti-confessional stories and stir up strife among the people; but undaunted, this Vicar persevered, teaching fully and lovingly the whole Catholic truth, till at last his enemies turned round and learned to love a man so unflinching, who could meet abuse and ridicule always with the same radiant smile. An English newspaper says of him: "He appeared to know and be on friendly terms with every man, woman and child in his extensive Parish, a real father of his people."

He lived with his assistant Clergy in the same house, sharing all things in common with them. He lived plainly, spent little on himself, received very little from his benefice, but gave largely to the poor out of his private means, and though he had great troubles in his life, both domestic and parochial, he was always the same genial, cheerful, generous man, overcoming evil with good. Many a man who opposed him bitterly in life as an enemy will now mourn him as a friend. As a High Churchman he was coldly if not unkindly treated by his Bishop, but no man was ever more faithful to his Church, or more opposed to the unwarrantable usurpations of the Roman Church on the one hand, or the misguided aberrations of the Protestant denominations on the other. He has died as he lived a faithful Priest of the Anglican branch of the Catholic Church, a true father of his people, and a model of a country Parson. May his soul rest in peace, and may God give to his people a worthy successor in this Church.

The Beautiful in Death.

Is there any country in the world where the trees are so beautiful as in this land of ours? A few months ago, as they first came into leaf or into bloom, the forests were clothed in pink and emerald green and gold, set off by the pure white of the blossom of the cherry, or the large clear cruciform flower of the dogwood. It was the gay time of their childhood, Then came the time of their maturity, when under the warm summer sun they wore their soft refreshing olive uniform, deep shaded green. Now they are dying, and are most beautiful in death. No artist with his brush or with his pen can give the true expression of those colors, too bright to be believed if truly represented. Look at the young maple bending over the clear waters of the river or the lake. It seems as if she had blushed to see herself, and turning crimson had loitered, beauty-struck, before the mirror. It seems sad to think that in a few days that beauty will have passed and the same waters will reflect a skeleton. Look again at that Virginia creeper which has twined itself around the gray old oak. The brilliant color of her leaves seems to be the bloom of the old tree and his own topmost leaves are touched with gold. Both are dying, but as the aged father upholds with his strong arms the frail clinging daughter, they seem to promise that they will meet one another in the Resurrection Spring. There too is the mountain ash, its leaves of gold and its boughs heavy with burdens of berries of the brightest red, beautiful and fruitful in death. Look along the sloping hills and see the yellow and crimson, the dark evergreen and the brilliant red, a rich harmony consisting of every variation of color and tint; and then ask the meaning of all this. Sweet Sister Death, as S. Francis of Assisi, called her, has done all this painting, as with a frosty hand she has touched the leaves, rich with sap and ripe in their maturity. This is the secret of the beautiful in death, a type of that which takes place in the spiritual world, when death comes to crown a well-spent life, or adversity comes in a beautiful old age. Then the frost of adversity touches but to ripen and to show forth the virtue of a life replete with grace and fruitful in good works. "We all do fade as a leaf," but leaves fade differently according to the energy they have preserved against the stormy or the frosty day.

Parish Notes.

THE Night Service on Sunday is at 7.30 instead of at 8 o'clock, as during the summer months.

THERE will be an 8 o'clock Celebration of the Holy Communion in addition to the 7 o'clock, beginning on the first Sunday in October, the twentieth Sunday after Trinity, October 7th, and continued during the winter.

THE Guild of S. John Evangelist will resume its meetings in October. The first meeting will be in the vestry room on Wednesday, October 10th, at 8 o'clock. All the members are requested to be present. It will be a social gathering, and the subjects for the winter meetings will be discussed. Members may bring their friends.

THERE will be an exhibition of the magic lantern for the Sunday School on Monday Evening, October 1st, at 7 o'clock, in the Sunday School room.

THE Mothers' Bible Class for mothers will resume its meetings at the Sisters', on the first Sunday in October, at 3 o'clock.

SUBSCRIPTIONS to the Coal Club have already begun to be paid in. Subscribers are reminded that the payments must be made regularly each week. No names will be received on the list after November 1st at the latest, but all who intend to subscribe should do so without delay.

FATHER MATURIN'S Sunday Bible Class will re-open on the second Sunday in October, the 21st.

No. 6 of the S. Clement's pulpit series, a sermon on Ritualism, by F. Maturin, has gone to press and will be ready in a few days.

No. 7 of the same series, a sermon preached on last S. Clement's day, by F. Hall, "The Christian Addition Table," is also nearly ready.

The sermons of this series may be had at the Church; at Hammond's Book Store, 1224 Chestnut street; at 2034 Tower street; B. F. Holl, 410 Arch Street; Alonzo Tilden, 408 Commerce street; McCauley's, 108 South 12th street; Jas. Pott & Co., 12 Astor Place, New York; and at the Mission House, 44 Temple street, Boston, Mass; price 5 cents each.

THE new organ is hastening to its completion, and we hope, before the present month is out that it will be ready for use.

FOUR new sanctuary lamps have been given as memorials by members of the congregation, thus completing the seven handsome lamps which hang before the Altar. Three were given some years ago and the number was made up temporarily by very plain ones which now need be used no more.

A HANDSOME pair of five-branch candlesticks have also been given as a memorial.

THE Right Rev. Bishop McLaren, of Illinois, will preach on Sunday morning October 21st. The Right Rev. Bishop Seymour, of Springfield, will preach on Sunday morning, October 14th.

THE Rev. Canon Knox Little, expects to pay us a visit this coming winter. The exact date of his visit is not yet fixed, but we hope that it will not be very long before we are able to give him a hearty welcome, which he always receives here.

FATHER OSBORNE AND FATHER SHEPPARD, will hold a Mission at Utica, N. Y., from October 6th to 18th.

F. HALL AND F. OSBORNE, assisted by nine other clergy, will hold a Mission in Halifax, N. S., for ten days, beginning the twenty-fifth Sunday after Trinity, November 11th. Prayers are asked for God's blessing on these Missions.

FATHER SHEPPARD is staying in Boston at present, but he has not been transferred from this Diocese, nor has his connection with this parish been dissolved.

NUMBER of Communions made: August 20–September 20, 521.

The New Altar.

A description of the new Altar of S. Clement's Church, used for the first time on Friday, Sept. 21st, S. Matthew's Day, may be interesting not only to the parishioners, but to our many friends in other places who may not have an opportunity, very soon, of seeing it.

The front, which is ten feet in length, and three feet in height, is divided into seven panels, rounded at the top and separated from each other by an upright, composed, in appearance, of three rounded pieces forming one. These panels are covered by a vine in relief, springing from the centre panel, and extending over the others on each side.

The top of the Altar is two feet in depth, and back of it are two retables, on the first of which are the Eucharistic lights, with two candelabra. On the second is the handsome new Altar Cross, with the three high tapers on either side.

The new Cross is, strictly speaking, thirty-four inches in height, standing on a base or pedestal of twenty-five inches, making the top of the Cross within one inch of being five feet above the retable.

At the intersection of the arms and the shaft is the Agnus Dei. At the foot of the shaft is a winged man, the representative of S. Matthew, and at the four ends the emblems of the Evangelists.

Every one of these emblematic representations of the four Evangelists is in bas relief, and has a nimbus above it; and the space between them is covered with a raised vine. Around the arms and shaft there is an enrichment of open brass work of a very ornamental character.

The eight candlesticks are four feet in height, and have been given as memorials of the departed. The seven new lamps, which hang before the Altar, are also memorial gifts.

The Reredos is composed of seven plain panels, the tops of which are richly decorated with tracery and crockets, surmounted by a pierced foliage, above which, again, is a delicate cresting. The centre panel is large, and nine inches higher than the others, and is just four feet above the Altar.

To complete the description we might add that the Altar and Reredos are made of oak, and the Cross, Candlesticks and Lamps are made of brass. The Altar, Cross and Candlesticks were designed by W. Henry Vaughan of Boston.

A Visit to the Rev. S. F. Green, for Twenty Months a Prisoner in Lancaster Castle, for Conscience' Sake.

[An English clergyman who recently visited this country, contributes the following account of a visit to the Rev. Mr. Green, during his incarceration:]

Being in the Northwest of England in the month of June, 1882, I determined to pay a visit to the Rev. S. F. Green, who had already been imprisoned in the Castle at Lancaster, since March, 1881. Mr. Green had for several years carried on a remarkable work in a poor parish in the suburbs of Manchester. His people were singularly attached to him, appreciating his work thoroughly.

An attack was made upon him in the courts of law by the Church Association, a society which has its headquarters many miles away from Mr. Green's parish, and which therefore might be considered to be little aggrieved by what he did in his Church. Upon the priest's declining to admit the authority of the civil courts in spiritual matters, he was sent to the prison at Lancaster, as already described.

I arrived at the castle about midday on the 30th of June, 1882. In due time a gaoler appeared with his bunch of keys, and conducted me to the cell occupied by the faithful priest. The room in which I found Mr. Green was very large, being in fact the hospital of the prison. The walls were whitewashed, and the iron-barred window could only be reached by a process of climbing, so that a person sitting in the cell could have no view whatever. Mr. Green's eyes had suffered from the whiteness of the walls around him.

Mr. Green is tall and finely built, and behaved with a quiet dignity. Indeed, his Christian calmness, combined nevertheless with firm determination, was noticed by many in England during those long, weary months.

After spending about an hour and a half with him, I rose to take my leave. Before my departure, however, he knelt down and requested a blessing, which, he told me, he has always asked at the hands of any priest who chanced to visit him. I then bade him farewell, remarking that I was going back to my work, to do the very things for which he was a prisoner. He answered, quite humbly, that he was sure that I would have done just as well had I been in his place.

I confess that when I found myself outside the prison I felt as if there was something wrong in the enjoyment of one's freedom, since this devoted man was suffering at the same moment that hundreds of us were doing exactly as he had done. Outside the castle I encountered an intelligent and courteous official, with whom I entered into conversation. He assured me that they did not seek for more prisoners like Mr. Green, for he had so many visitors that the doors were constantly being locked and unlocked for their accommodation, which, of course, added to the work of the gaolers. He said that Mr. Green gave them no trouble personally, but that at the previous Christmas his friends had sent him so many cards that they had to be conveyed to his cell in a two-handled clothes basket.

I may add one or two more particulars. Mr. Green, standing in need of recreation, and growing weary of the little means of taking exercise at his disposal, helped with his own hands to carry the coals for the supply of the prison.

One of his children was delicate, and, humanly speaking, could not have lived in the dull, unhealthy parish of Manchester. During Mr. Green's incarceration, Mrs. Green and the children were supported by the English Church Union (of which all good Churchmen should be members), and lived at a seaside place near Lancaster. In the good providence of God this was the means of the child's restoration to health; in other words, the child's life was saved by the father's imprisonment.

We, in England, believe that Mr. Green's imprisonment has helped forward the great Catholic movement, the effect of which has been felt in the United States, as elsewhere. At the same time, it must be remembered that at present Mr. Green has no parish, and that his people at Moreheth are undergoing a severe and prolonged trial. So far they have shown wonderful faithfulness, the more remarkable because they are poor in this world's goods.

It will not be too much to ask the prayers of American Church people in behalf of the faithful priest and his much-enduring flock.

Other Parishes.

THE opening service at General Convention will be held at Christ Church.

OWING to the generous foresight of one of our young lady communicants, the priest in charge of S. Chrysostom's has been enabled to take a month's vacation, the first he has been permitted to enjoy for three years. The hard-worked incumbent has been obliged to do the sexton's work as well as his own, and asks for contributions towards hiring a man to perform the menial duties of the Parish.

ANOTHER Church, S. James the Less, has inaugurated a Parish magazine. The regular publication of a paper of this sort is now regarded as one of the indices of an active Parish life.

S. LUKE'S CHURCH, Germantown, has extended a call to the Rev. Mr. Upjohn, of Augusta, Me.

THE Church of S. John Baptist, Germantown, originally a mission of S. Luke's, has been a thriving, self-sustaining Parish for a number of years. Under the Rectorship of the Rev. C. H. Hibbard the choir has been enlarged and improved, and the attendance has become so great that it is frequently hard to accommodate the congregations. So much for well-rendered Church-like services.

General Church News.

CHURCH life in Denver, judging from the able little Kalendar, is in a healthy stage of growth. There are early celebrations at the Cathedral and the two other Parishes; large sums of money are being contributed towards the enlargement of Trinity Church; and the work of the Mission of the Good Shepherd, which consists of visits to the hospital and the poor of the neighborhood, is being actively carried on. The Cathedral organ will compare favorably with many of the best instruments in England; it is very large and powerful. Two stained windows, which are pronounced to be exquisite, have lately been placed in this noble building. The subjects are Christ blessing little children, and S. Thomas, of Canterbury, baptizing the infant son of Henry II. Emmanuel Church, which lies in the midst of 10 000 working people, is badly crippled on account of the lack of workers and money. The Church at present accommodates only one hundred and fifty people, but it was erected with a view to ultimate enlargement.

THE Bishop of Springfield has provided a place where his Clergy may spend their vacations. He has secured a tract of land, of more than eighteen acres, stretching along the shores of Green Bay, in a region unsurpassed for salubrity of climate, fertility of soil and beauty of scenery. It is the Diocesan's endeavor to give each Parish and Mission a portion of the reservation, and to secure for each clergyman in his jurisdiction a house and home thereon, where he may spend a quiet vacation at the least possible expense. The plan is a novel and beautiful one, and there is nothing to prevent its success.

THE Bishop of Manchester, it is believed, will resign his See and accept the Deanery of Exeter. His lordship is well-known as Mr. Green's diocesan.

THE Rev. Rector of Grace Church, New York, wishes to make that building free, and a home for the many. Although the immense congregation at present represents the highest social circles of the metropolis, almost exclusively, Dr. Potter believes that the "uptown movement" will eventually separate these people from the present Church. It may then, he hopes, be the centre of a large work among the poor. Not that this important Parish does not now look after the poor. On the contrary, its charities are very extensive: the Day Nursery, the "Junior Century Club," the Girl's Friendly Society, a dietary kitchen, a mortuary for strangers who die in the city, with a resident physician attached (who last year made three hundred and sixty-one visits among the needy), being among the best known. There are also a Mission in the hospitals and prisons, an industrial school, a "Fresh Air Fund Charity," under which "Grace House-by-the-Sea" has been established, and $1300 spent in sending the sick and helpless to the shore, the "Ladies' Benevolent Society," and the S. Luke's Association. The spiritual necessities of the poor are administered to in Grace Chapel, on Fourteenth street, which is the centre of a vast charitable work. (The Italian Mission has its services there.) The German work of the Parish is conducted at the Church of the Nativity, under several missionaries. Notwithstanding this Dr. Potter believes that the present Grace Church, with its magnificent accommodations, must finally be the chief home of the poor classes of the neighborhood.

THE Stewart Memorial Cathedral, at Garden City, Long Island, has been finished, and will soon be consecrated. It is, perhaps, the grandest building of the sort in this country. Its total cost was $2,000,000. An additional $1,000,000 were spent on the erection of S. Paul's School, which is adjacent to the Cathedral. The Diocesan's residence will cost $80,000. A description of these buildings will probably appear in our next issue.

DR. EWER'S "Open Letter" has been widely read. The very large edition of the Living Church containing the letter has been exhausted, and it has been found necessary to issue it in a more permanent form, together with the same gentleman's article "What is the Anglican Church?"

AT S. Saviour's Church, Bar Harbor, during the past summer, five services were held every Sunday. Bar Harbor is a favorite resort for our Clergy, and Churchmen predominate among the summer guests.

S. PAUL'S CHURCH, BURLINGTON, has introduced a vested choir, the first one in the Diocese of Vermont.

We would call attention to list of sermons advertised on back cover of this magazine. All orders by mail sent to Mr. Alonzo Tildon, 408 Commerce Street, will receive prompt attention.

TO THE PARISHIONERS OF S. CLEMENT'S:

Your Rector wishes to urge on you the duty and privilege of helping the Mission work. Try this Lent to have the savings of your acts of self-denial increase what you give to Missions. Say with more devotion the prayer for Missions. During this month some ladies will be in the Sunday-school Room every Friday, from 10 to 12, to cut out the work and give it out. Any woman can come and do some of the work there at that time if they wish, and as the work we are now doing is for a hospital, it is such that it can be easily taken home, and the work can be done there if any prefer it. No one is required or expected to give the materials; they will be furnished. This is not said to stop people from contributing either material or the money to buy it with, if they want to give it. But it is not a requisite. The Missionary Society has not done as much as was hoped. It has not kindled the zeal and enthusiasm for the blessed work of Missions as was expected. Yet may the future atone for the past. As we follow week by week this Lent the footsteps of our Lord, we must remember that He endured it all for souls, the very souls we try to reach and help by our missionary efforts. "He shall see of the travail of His soul, and shall be satisfied." May we bring prayers, work and gifts to help unite those two things intended for each other—the blood of Christ and the souls of men, and contributed something to that satisfying of the longing of his living soul.

B. W. MATURIN.

The Altar Guild has finished a beautiful black frontal for our church altar, the gift of one of the parishioners.

Parish Notes.

The new choir stalls are in their places; while the material and the work is all one could wish, they were, unfortunately, made too high for the boys.

The plain panel which temporarily filled the centre of the reredos has been replaced by a fine specimen of wood-carving, representing the Madonna and the Holy Child. Nothing could be more beautiful and pathetic than S. Mary's face. It was the gift of a parishioner.

The congregation at the Missionary Meeting on Quinquagesima Sunday evening was smaller than that on an ordinary Sunday night. The moral to be drawn is that we should all pray more for Missions, read more about them, talk more of them, unless we would lose our part in carrying on the Mission of the Church, which is but the Mission of Christ; unless we would lose our part in converting others to Jesus; unless we would lose our Catholicity and be dwarfed into a miserable, narrow, selfish congregationalism. Who will say a prayer for Missions daily this Lent?

On the evening of the Confirmation, the women and girls who are to be confirmed, can go to the Sisters any time after six o'clock and say their prayers and join in litanies and other devotions, preparatory to the blessing they come to get from the Bishop. Similarly the men and boys will find the chapel open for them on that evening after six o'clock. All the women and girls must be in the Sunday-school room not later than 7.30.

The Bishop of the Diocese will come to the Parish for Confirmation on Friday, March 20. Any who want to be confirmed and have not yet given in their names are asked to do so as soon as possible.

The classes will be held as follows: For young girls, at the Sisters' on Saturday afternoon at 5; for young unmarried women, Monday evening at 2051 Cherry Street, at 8; and also on Thursdays at the Church, at 7.30; for married women, on Sunday afternoons at 3; for boys, on Friday evenings, in the Chapel at 7; for men, on Fridays at 8 o'clock. General Confirmation Class, on Tuesday in Chapel, at 8. On Monday evenings during March, there will be a class for married women at 7.30.

After the Confirmation on Tuesday evenings (the 24th) at 8 o'clock, the newly confirmed and any others who may wish to come, will meet for a class to prepare for their Easter Communion.

At 2029 Carlton Street, there is a bin of coal opened, at which the parishioners can get their coal in small quantities at reduced figures. They will have to get tickets signed by one of the Sisters or of the clergy to certify that they belong to the Parish, to get the reduced rates, otherwise they will be charged the usual market price. When they have these tickets they can get the coal at six cents a bucket.

Lenten and Easter cards, especially brought out by the clergy, may be had from Father Field, the Sisters, or at Mr. Hammond's book store, 1224 Chestnut Street.

A branch of the Iron Cross is to be formed at Troy.

The first number of the Iron Cross, a paper in support of Temperance, Reverence and Purity, will be issued very shortly.

Some members of the Men's Guild attended the meeting of Guilds at S. Jude's Church, and were most hospitably entertained by the Rector.

On Sunday, February 22d, a deputation from the Guild of S. John and the Iron Cross, attended the same Church and much enjoyed the solemn and hearty Guild service.

We would remind our readers that the magazine year begins in November. Those who have forgotten to renew their subscriptions, will please do so, as the life of a parish paper largely depends on the support obtained in this way. Perhaps some can send us the name of a friend who would like to subscribe.

Mr. Duhring, 1226 Arch Street, has a fine assortment of sacred pictures, suitable for devotional books. Persons desiring anything of this kind would do well to call.

The following statement and appeal of Mrs. Spalding is printed as being more complete than her letter to F. Convers about the Hospital. It is of special interest to us as the Missionary Society is now working for this object.

St. Luke's Hospital, Denver, is, I think, the youngest namesake of the noble institution in New York, founded by the saintly Dr. Muhlenberg, and is also, I fear, the poorest. It was opened a little more than three years ago, and supplies one of the greatest needs in this city where invalids resort from the world over, being the only Protestant institution of its kind. If a Church Hospital is needed anywhere, it is surely in Denver, for as has been well said, Colorado is the common meeting ground of the whole country. There is not probably one of our Dioceses which is not represented, either on our ranches, in our mines, or by invalids. It is for this reason that our Hospital may well claim a place in the hearts of church people everywhere. Since it was opened more than 1,000 patients have been treated, and we hope in time to make it self-supporting from those who are able and glad to pay for the good care which they receive. But there are many sad cases constantly occurring, of invalids who exhaust all their means on the long expensive journey, seeming to think they will recover as soon as they breathe Colorado air. Instead of this they arrive here hopelessly ill, among strangers, with no money to pay for nurse, doctor or medicine. Often they come from refined homes commended to our care by loving friends. There is now in the hospital a respectable, middle-aged Englishman, a communicant in the Church, at one time well established in business in New York city, who arrived in Denver last October, far advanced in consumption, with only $2.50 left of all his money. He was refused admittance to the county hospital, not being a resident and they being overcrowded. They offered to send him back to Pueblo, but the poor man could scarcely walk. He applied for admission at St. Luke's, but our one Free Bed was occupied. Money was obtained through the offertory on St. Luke's Day to pay for him until he could receive the benefit of the Free Bed, and he is now spending his last days in a Church Home, comforted by the thought that he is not forsaken in his hour of need by the Church of which he is a member.

It is hard to turn away a single worthy case for lack of means, but we still owe $3,200 on the land, and our receipts are far behind our expenses. We have only one Annual Free Bed, supported by a generous layman of Pennsylvania, and this expires at Easter. Who could invest $300 where it would bring in a richer return than by giving all the comforts of a free bed to these moneyless, suffering strangers? We have not a single permanently Endowed Free Bed. For two years the "Easter Free Bed" was supported by Easter offerings from about thirty schools and Sunday-schools. This proved to be so successful that a ten-fold effort is now being made to raise $3,000 and make it perpetual. God has blessed the work, and through the kind offerings of many friends, $2,500 has been secured. We earnestly hope and pray to complete it this Easter. Our friends in the East appreciate the fact that our Hospital belongs to them as much as to ourselves. How many aching hearts turn longingly to Colorado where loved ones are making their last struggle for life. If health and strength are given them, can they not return a thank offering which may give hope to those who would otherwise have none? Or may we not expect memorial gifts from those whose dear ones have gone to the "better country?" Scattered far and wide over our ranches and in our mines, are sons from many of the first families in the land. What mother does not feel an inexpressible comfort in the thought that if sickness or accident overtake her boy, a Church Home is ready to receive him? Will they not help us bear the burden which we are not able to bear alone? "Then shall the King say unto them, I was a stranger and ye took me in, I was sick and ye visited me, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these my brethren ye have done it unto Me."

Any offerings, no matter how small, will be most gratefully received and acknowledged by

The Workingmen's Club.

Recent matters of general interest in the Club have been the forming of a "United Flour Club" after the model of the "United Coal Club" by which those interested can buy from Samuel Bell & Sons two grades of flour, the better at $5.75 per barrel, the other at $5.25. The flour is to be delivered to any part of the city in lots of one-eighth of a barrel or upwards, until May 6, when the contract will end. Mr. L. W. Bitting of S. Jude's is the general treasurer.

A call has been issued by the Employment Committee, for a meeting of representatives of the Clubs to try to form a labor bureau to find employment for the members now out of work.

On March 4th a meeting of delegates from each Club will be held in the house of S. Mark's Club, corner Seventeenth and Kator, to organize a central association of all the clubs in the city. We want the strength which comes from unity in our co-operative features; the advantage of each other's experience and ideas.

We have advocated before the social side of the Workingmen's Club, and it should never be forgotten that the club is a place of recreation and social intercourse; a common meeting ground of men of many occupations and positions, and an exchange for thought between men who know things practically, and those whose time and advantages have given them opportunities to form theories.

Hard times have brought before the clubs questions which affect the permanence of the club, as a club, and the permanence of the membership of the individual in the club.

It has been asked, are the Clubs useful only in brisk times when all are fully occupied? And are they a luxury to be dropped when work falls off.

If they are no more they certainly fail a man just when he most needs encouragement and when he can least afford to lose their influence. We believe the Club should be something more than a luxury and that it should stand to a man as a friend, useful in prosperity but doubly so in adversity. Affording him at all times the advantages which may be had better by association, and in hard times helping him to hold his own.

We are glad to say that in one matter at least, the advantages of association and co-operation have become very evident. The Coal Club is an undoubted success and there seems to be no reason why the Groceries Club, now in its infancy should not be equally so. But both these pre-suppose the power of buying for cash and so apply to flush times only. Can not their usefulness be extended to periods of depression also?

We believe that it can, and the suggestion has been made that the money saved by this co-operative buying, be considered as a sort of sinking fund, and that in flush times the amount so saved, or such part of it as each individual may choose, shall be put by and deposited to the credit of the buyer, to be drawn again by him in slack times.

A member of one of the oldest Clubs in the country, who has worked the matter out, advocates the receiving of small sums by the Club, which, when they amount to five dollars, shall be deposited by the Club in one of the large Savings Banks. The account to be opened in the name of the individual depositor, who may take his book or leave it with the Club. The Club will then continue to make deposits whenever the amount paid in by any one reaches the sum of five dollars, so that there will never be much money remaining in the hands of the Club.

In slack times these deposits can be drawn again for coal and groceries, the purchaser still getting the advantage of the co-operative rates, and by sending his order to the Club, he will have his bill paid and the amount charged against his deposit.

This would certainly make the Club of paramount use to the members. So that in bad times they would continue to enjoy the advantages of the Club House, the opportunity of obtaining work through the Club's Employment Bureau; and the saving effected by the co-operative rates of buying would be an undoubted gain to their families in saving money and anxiety, and in removing the temptation of buying poorer qualities of groceries when money is scarce.

Letter from Fr. Sheppard.

15 Sir Lowry Road,
Capetown, December 21,
S. Thomas' Day.

My Dear Fr. Maturin:

You will like, I know, to hear something of our life and work here; and it is pleasant for me to put myself in communication in some way, through you, with so many I know and love at S. Clement's, and in Philadelphia generally. You may be helped to realize the distance we are from England by the fact that now by the last mail, two days since, we are beginning to receive answers to the letters which we mailed on our arrival, October 23d, or rather a week later, as the homeward mail left the day before we came in. With you it takes about three weeks to get an answer from England; with us nearly seven weeks. It has been very difficult to realize that we have been passing through the season of Advent, and are now close upon Christmas, in the midst of summer weather, cloudless skies, and daily increasing heat; and to go through Lent and Easter when leaves are falling, and the cold increasing, will be another strange experience, and one which seems to rob Easter here of all the deep analogies in nature, which the Springs of the Northern Hemisphere suggest; and one is almost tempted with S. Francis Xavier to pray the Church that the time of Lent and Easter may be translated for us to another part of the year. Christmas Day is often the hottest day of the year here. Christmas holidays are observed by picnics, and by going away (for some) to seaside places. We are just now going the round of several schools to witness the prize givings. We find the rooms made gay with flowers and creepers, and sometimes creepers straying in at the open windows. Fans, too, are much in vogue among the ladies.

Sir Lowry Road, where we live, so named from Sir Lowry Cole, a quondam governor, is half street, half road; it is the great highway out of Capetown leading to a number of suburban villages, and then to the interior. Consequently, the traffic over it is very great and very noisy; in this respect, I think, it may compare with Cherry Street. Our house, at least, may compare with 2026; for as you have Cherry Street, Tower Street, and Twentieth Street, so we have Sir Lowry Road in front, Russell Street at the side of our house—a corner house—and Newmarket Road just below, running parallel with Sir Lowry Road, which also leads to the interior. Eastwards, early wagons, bringing produce from the country, rumble by in the small hours of morning, and rumble out again at night—long heavy wagons drawn by ten or fourteen oxen, or else by eight mules or horses driven in hand. Hansom cabs are continually passing—Cape carts, with two wheels and a pair of horses—sometimes three or four horses. The Cape cart is the ordinary carriage of the country—two strong wheels, a deep body with a seat in front and a seat behind, and a white canvas-head, which can be put up or down. Just now, too, we often have bodies of troops passing; sometimes an infantry regiment marching out from the barracks in the early morning, with band playing; sometimes a troop of cavalry (Iniskilling Dragoons) going out to the camp at Wynberg, about eight miles from here. Our house is about one mile and one-quarter from the centre of Capetown—east of it. As we look out on the town, or part of it, from our windows, it gives me the impression of being very oriental in appearance, from the low flat-roofed houses, almost all white or yellow washed, a little foliage cropping up among the houses here and there, a palm or two in some streets, and a blazing sun. The costumes, too, add to this impression. The Malay men wear either a red fez, or a red and yellow handkerchief turban-wise, or sometimes (especially the coachmen and drivers) an umbrella-shaped hat, very good for keeping off sun or rain, only a little less broad than the Chinese hats. The dress of the Malay women is most picturesque, and could not fail to delight an artist's eye. The head and part of the forehead is covered with a yellow silk handkerchief, so tied that it covers the chin and hangs down on the neck; the bodice is tight-fitting, and generally of white cotton or linen; over this, round the shoulders, is a small bright-colored shawl or handkerchief. The waist is very high, and the skirt most voluminous, and extended after the fashion of our grandmothers, and fancy, with hoops. The skirt is sometimes of green stuff, sometimes of white or blue, and, lastly, the feet are shod with a wooden clog, having a circular button which fits in between the big toe and the next, and this is the only attachment. The men also wear these sometimes, but the majority go bare-foot. Of course, the richer Malays, men and women, wear boots or slippers. The colors of the women's dresses and handkerchiefs never fail to be harmonious and tasteful.

The language of the street,—i. e., of the whole lower class, more than two-thirds of Capetown—is Dutch, of a very debased type—Kitchen Dutch they call it here, but this is the language we must learn, and are trying to learn, for the large majority of the people of our district speak it, and all the colored people whom we shall have to do with, and all the Malays. Many know a little English, but Dutch is the language they commonly use and think in. There is a great deal of poverty here; a great deal of ignorance and sin. The Malay's religion is more a hereditary clinging to Mohammedism than any intelligent or intellectual hold upon it. Many assert that their religion and ours is the same. They seem to have no objection to hear about Christianity, and acquicese in all one says, but there have been, in Capetown, very few sincere and lasting conversions yet. They have two mosques in their quarters of the town—surmounted by the crescent, of course. Occasionally one meets their Irnaums in wonderful flowing blue or green robes, white pants and large white turban. The colored people here are scarcely to be distinguished (in the main) from the colored people of America. I preached a few Sunday evenings ago to Canon Lightfoot's congregation of colored people, and from the types of faces before me, I might easily have fancied that I was speaking to the congregation of St. Mary's, Baltimore. The only building we have in our district at present to hold any service in, is a little one-roomed cottage up on the hill-side, under the mountain wall. There is a small population of colored people and a few Malays round it, and here on Sunday afternoon there is a small Sunday-school, conducted by three ladies, of about forty colored children. Here, for the last two or four Sundays, we have held a short service after school for any adults who would come, and we have had from ten to fifteen generally. It is a wild, bare sort of place, with huge rocks scattered about, and a large crop of small stones. The gully or valley in which the school-house stands goes by the name of the Dry-dock. Above towers the mountain—the Devil's Peak and Table Mountain—and, turning round, you look down upon the blue bay, with its fringe of surf and its gleaming edging of white sand, and hills and mountains beyond, with probably five or six ships riding at anchor or within the shelter of the Breakwater, and many more whose masts are just visible in the docks. The children are all shoeless and hatless, and with very ragged clothes, most of them, but I hope they are learning something.

Canon Peters is at the head of the native College for Kaffirs, which is only about one-sixth mile off. The College is called "Zonnebloem," or, Sunflower. There are about fifty or sixty young Kaffirs there, big and little. Most of them can speak some English, and understand more. I am going to sing even song in their chapel this evening, and preach to them. The clergy here are all very friendly, and are making a good deal of use of us, so that we have preached in most of the churches in or near Capetown. Fr. Puller is preaching at the Cathedral this morning, and I have been giving a course there on Tuesday evenings in Advent.

Our house is a one-storied building, with seven rooms and a kitchen. All the rooms are very high, some of them thirteen feet. One which we are going to subdivide and use half for an oratory, is twenty-one feet by twenty, rather different to the little cells at Temple Street, Boston. All the windows have Venetian shutters, which we keep closed for the greater part of the day, and always at night, as they are the only protection from thieves, of whom there are plenty about. When we first came into the house, we found that the only provision for cooking was a huge open chimney-place, with a rough iron stand, three or four bars, and this was all that Brother Clement had to do his cooking with for six or eight days, until we got a stove. There is a tank in the yard from which all our water is drawn. No gas; no bells. I have put up a door-bell since. For this house we pay £7 a month, and this is a reduction of £1.10 from what the last tenants paid.

We are gradually getting our furniture; but as it is being made at the Zonnebloem Kaffir College, and they are desperately slow, we shall still have to wait a good time before we get our oratory fitted and our book-shelves. Our books meanwhile rest on the floor in what is to be the common room. No description of Capetown or our life here would be complete without mentioning the terrific south-east winds. They rage on and off all through the summer, and have the violence almost of tornados; the dust and sand is swept up in clouds, and driven against one like hundreds of needles; the dust wifts into the house everywhere; the floor is gritty and grimy. Shut the windows as you may, it finds its way in. The wind is always presignified by a table-cloth of white cloud covering, and pouring over the edge of Table Mountain; and as long as the storm blows it remains there; the rest of the sky is cloudless and bright. It is very distressing, and its tendency is to try the nerves and depress one. But, on the other hand, it certainly carries off the bad smells, of which there are not a few, there being no such things as underground drains. The curious thing about this wind is that it is so very local; it only blows fiercely on this side of the mountain; directly you turn the corner, going south-east, it becomes only a pleasant breeze.

There seems to be every probability of war with the Boers in the Bechuanaland, unless Lord Derby becomes faint-hearted at last; and unless there is a successful war, the English power out here will have lost all prestige in the eyes of the Boers and the native tribes, and the English flag may as well be hauled down. A number of young gentlemen volunteers have come out from England and are to form some pioneer corps—mounted, I believe. Their equipment is a brown corduroy jacket and pants, brown gaiters and a white helmet or a brown slouch hat Their arms, a rifle and revolver. Some of them who have landed here and gone on again to Port Elizabeth are said to be a very fine set of men. Colonel Carrington is to lead them, I believe, and a Colonel Methuen. The state of trade here is most depressed, and numbers of men, white and colored, loaf about unable to get employment. I spoke to a nice young fellow this morning as I came from the Hospital, working with a pickaxe on the road, who is the brother of an English Priest whom I know well, and who asked me to look after him; he seems to have come to this through no fault of his own. He makes twenty-seven shillings a week and has to pay two pounds seven shillings a month for his house. We have a plot of ground not far from here for our Church and house. As soon as the Father Superior sends us some money we shall begin to build. We expect it soon, and the sooner the better, for just now labor and materials are both cheap.

Please tell Fr. Field that, as yet, I have had no opportunity of using my magic lantern, as we have no room; but I look forward to its being of the greatest use.

On the 23d of November, as I went to bed, about eleven o'clock, I thought of you beginning to prepare for your high Even song on S. Clement's Day. We are about six hours east of you here; one hour and twenty minutes east of Greenwich. A few weeks ago we had a peep of Fr. Shaw, who was on his way back to S. Augustine's, Ladybrand, Bloemfonteen, to rejoin Fr. Douglas; and about a fortnight ago Fr. Simeon came through Capetown, and dined with us. He was on his way to Grahamstown, where he hopes to do some mission work. With him was a young priest named Dudley, who was really going to work with Payne and Perry at Baltimore.

Thanks for S. CLEMENT'S MAGAZINE. When we reach the high pitch of ecclesiastical civilization of having a Magazine, we will send it you; till then, an occasional letter must do instead. With love to the Fathers and Br. Maynard, and to all friends, believe me to be,

Your affectionate brother,

G. E. SHEPPARD.

THE CHILDREN'S PAGE.

A few years ago, there lived in an English village a little girl who was persecuted at home because she was a Christian. She said not a word, but went on quietly and bravely, going to the Holy Communion and telling about her troubles, and receiving strength to bear them. At last she fell sick and died, and they found on a slip of paper sewn inside the front of her dress the words written, "He opened not his mouth."

A poor mother talked to her sick child about heaven. "It will be so bright and full of light, and all the faces of the angels shine." But the little child replied: "I should not like that, mother; the light hurts my eyes so now." Then the mother talked of the beautiful singing and the harpers harping with their harps the voice of many waters and the new song; but the child said: "Mother, I cannot bear any noise." The poor mother was troubled, and took the little sufferer in her arms, and then the child said: "Mother, if heaven is like this, may Jesus take me there?"

What a dreadful fire that was at Blockley! If we had not taken poor little Christopher he might have been burned in the fire, but let us be very glad that our little boy was in a better home.

Several of our children have been sick lately, and we wonder if they have tried to be like a poor little orphan girl in an Orphanage. Little Prissy came down to breakfast with her face all swollen and the other little girls said she had been "crying dreffull under the clothes." The Sister asked her why she had not called, or sent one of the girls for her. Prissy hung her head, and said: "Sister, I didn't want to disturb any one, so I tried to keep quiet, and said over and over to myself the verse you learnt us:

'Tis Jesus sends us sickness,
So when I'm weak and ill,
I'll try and bear it patiently,
Because it is His will.'"

"Tom, are you going to be confirmed?"

"I don't know; are you?"

"Yes."

"So am I."

Tom is not a strong Christian yet, but we hope he will be after Confirmation on March 20th.

Three things we children can do in Lent.

1. Say our prayers carefully and reverently.
2. Try not to make a noise.
3. Abstain from eating candy, and give the money to Missions.

The Suffering Saviour.

On Friday in Passion Week we are going to sing a piece called "The Suffering Saviour," and the pictures of our Saviour in His life of suffering from a boy till He died on the cross for us, will be shown with the sciopticon. One evening Father Field took our sciopticon and pictures to show the children at the Burd Orphan Asylum, and on another evening to the boys at the Educational Home. The Indians enjoyed the pictures as much as we do, and we are very glad that others can enjoy our things. Some of the Indian boys are 6 feet 4 inches high.

Our Missionary boxes are like little churches, and we will try to get them full.

On Sunday at our 9 A. M. Eucharist, we are going to offer our mites for a little Church near Milwaukee, under the care of the Rev. Joseph Francis, who used to be in our Sunday-school, and was an Acolyte.

EVERYBODY knows quite well, "That work is always scarce in winter." Everybody knows, "The times are dull." Everybody knows, "The mills and factories are all closed now, or else are running on short time." Everybody knows, "This changeable weather has given every one a cold." Everybody knows, "That there is much sickness about." But everybody does not realize what intense misery and suffering these common places cover. The want which has come to many is from no fault of their own. But few of those who are themselves comfortable seem to have set themselves to imagine what life is to others of their fellow-creatures just now. When we asked for some coal not long ago, there was one generous response, but only one response. And the want is great. One case comes to mind; a famly numbering thirteen, of whom at one time eleven were ill! One young girl kept well! One to do the work of a family of that size! One to be the nurse of that number! One young man, and yet he is hardly that, for it it would be truer to call him a half-grown boy—to work alone for them. That number to look to the wages of one poor boy for house rent, for fuel, for food, for medicine, and all other needs. And this state of things to last for weeks. Such a case is what we mean by "want." Such a case is not alone. Were it the only one, there would be no need to say a word; but it is not the case. We believe in self-help as much as any one, and so have our schemes to buy by co operation coal by the ton or by the bucket, boots and shoes and groceries; but how can these help those out of work, out of money, and out of health? What is wanted? To have work for men or women, for boys or girls. The Sisters would be glad to know of ordinary sewing, washing, or other work for which they could send some women. The Sisters would be glad to have some volunteer to make and send soup or beef tea, or even nourishing food for the sick. We want clothing (second-hand clothes will help us, if heavy, for cold weather), boots and shoes, food, or money to buy them with. Send them to the sisters or to the Clergy House. Speedy help is double help.

Co-operative Buying.

We have been surprised lately to find that quite a large number of the parishioners have been in ignorance of even the oldest of our schemes for cheapening some of the necessaries of life. A list is given below. Except in the matter of boots and shoes, it is not absolutely necessary that the buyers should go to the stores. For the others to send the order with the cash to Room No. 1 on Thursdays, between 10 and 12 A. M., or 7 and 9.30 P. M., is all that is required. Of course, if any one wishes to go to the store for groceries, they can do so. To buy on our arrangements at the stores will require tickets, which can be had on application at Room No. 1 on Thursdays from 10 to 12 A. M., or 7 to 9.30 P. M. Coal (any size) can be ordered at $5.45 per ton delivered. Coal, at the bin, 2029 Carlton Street, 6 cents a bucket. Boots and shoes, at J. W. Saunders, 1836 Market Street, at 12½ cents on the dollar below their one fixed cash price. Flour, from S. Bell & Sons, at $5.75 or $5.25 per barrel, or it can be ordered with the groceries. Groceries, from Horace A. Doan, Eighteenth and Chestnut, at 10 cents off on the dollar from his printed price list. Families can get the price lists (new each month), and send their orders by mail, having the goods delivered by the wagon at their own homes.

Tardiness at Church an Unnecessary Evil.

Should not all thoughtful churchmen and earnest Christians, strive to avoid the habitual or frequent practice of going to church to unite in public worship after the appointed hour of service? Does not general tardiness at church, on the part of well bred Christians, imply either an almost inexcusable thoughtlessness, or a manifest lack of reverence due to the Lord whom they profess to meet and worship in His holy temple? where all the Christian world, at least, should "keep silence before Him." If the President of the United States was announced to personally deliver an official message before the Senate, at a stated time, what would be thought of the Senator who came bustling into his place, during the reading of it, after the appointed hour? Would not such conduct be regarded as a grave offence, if not a gross personal insult to the nation's Chief Magistrate? or, at best, a vulgar manifestation of disregard for the proprieties and usages of polite society? not to speak of the special obligations due to his colleagues assembled?

Yet, Sunday after Sunday, persons, who profess and call themselves Christain ladies and gentlemen, habitually go to God's House to join in common prayer after the commencement of the office, even that of the Holy Communion; and with the most supreme indifference go tramping in while God's priest at the altar, it may be, is proclaiming the Law to people now humbly kneeling and asking mercy; and, sometimes even later, while the Gospel for the day is being read; or, possibly, as priest and people together are repeating their common faith before God. It matters not, the habitual late comer seems utterly oblivious of the slightest impropriety in entering at any time; although, by church usage, no one can be regarded as having truly and properly attended a celebration at all, unless present before the Gospel.

Yet, frequently, after the commencement of the sermon, such persons will presume to go to their pews; sometimes with an ostentatious flurry, and often when the congregation is much crowded; yet, always appear to expect their places will remain unoccupied, though strangers may be standing. Almighty God insulted, and numbers of his people distracted, and all who happen to occupy sittings anywhere near them, greatly annoyed.

Yet, because for the most part, these persons are well dressed, sometimes liberal givers, and commonly pride themselves of their "blue blood," abuses of this kind are too frequently tolerated by parish authorities. Thank God, the poor and lowly as a class, are not often guilty of this offensive, but by no means uncommon practice.

In most cases, no doubt, mainly due to thoughtlessness. Still, none the less, an unnecessary evil.—Selected.

Parish Notes.

We hope that before long the Bishop of the Diocese will be sufficiently restored to health to fulfil many of his engagements before the summer. In his absence the Bishop of Maine confirmed the candidates of this parish on Wednesday evening last. There were 72 confirmed. We hope that we shall be able to have another confirmation, as we had last year, before Whitsuntide, as there are several candidates who were not ready to be confirmed last Wednesday.

The confirmation class will be continued on Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock, as usual, till further notice. Any persons desiring to be confirmed are requested to send in their names to the clergy as soon as possible.

On Thursday evenings the instructions will be in preparation for Easter Communion. All those who were confirmed on Wednesday are requested to be present at these instructions.

On Easter Day admission to the Church will be the same as last year. Parishioners only can enter by the Cherry Street door, which will be open at 9 o'clock. The general public can enter by the Twentieth street and Tower street doors, which will be opened at 10.30. None can go to the gallery without special tickets. Ticket-holders can enter by the school-house door from 9.30 to 10.30. The gallery doors will be closed at 10.30.

The music on Easter Day will be Gounod's S. Cæcilia Mass, with full orchestra.

On Maunday Thursday night, at 8 o'clock, the Stabat Mater will be sung, with short addresses on the Passion. The doors will be opened at 7.15. Seats will not be reserved for pew-holders after the choir enters the church.

During Holy Week the special services will be celebrated at 7 and 9.30 on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday; at 7, 8, and 11 on Maunday Thursday; and at 9.30 on Easter eve.

Monday: Meditation, 12; "Way of the Cross," 4; Meditation, 8 P.M.

Tuesday: Meditation, 12; "Way of the Cross," 4; Confirmation class at 8.

Wednesday: Meditation, 12; "Way of the Cross," 4; Meditation, 8 P. M.

Thursday: Sermon, 11; "Way of the Cross," 4; Stabat Mater and Addresses on the Passion, 8.

Good Friday: Morning Prayer and Meditation, 7 A. M.; "Way of the Cross, 9; Children's Service, 10; Litany and Reproaches, 11; Preaching of the Cross, 12–3; Evening Prayer, 5; Preparation for Easter Communion, 8.

Easter Eve.: Celebration, 9.30; Meditation, 12; Evening Prayer, 5; Vespers of Easter, 7.30.

In Easter Week, there will be no Bible Class on Monday; no Meditation on Friday; no Mothers' Meeting on Thursday evening.

After Easter all the week-day sermons and addresses will stop for the summer, except the Bible Class on Monday, the Confirmation Class on Tuesday night, the usual Thursday night Address, the Friday Meditation, and the Preparation Service on Saturday night.

The Guild of S. Mary will have their annual day of Retreat on Thursday, the 15th.

The Guild of S. John will have their annual day of Retreat on Palm Sunday; they extend a hearty welcome to any men of the parish to take part in it. Meals will be provided in the Mission House, so that those who attend can stay the whole day.

The procession of the Guilds will be as usual on the Friday in the octave of Easter, at 8 o'clock. Members of the different Guilds are requested to be present as soon after 7 o'clock as possible. Women and girls in the Sunday School room; boys and men in the Chapel and Vestry.

On Easter Monday the annual election of the Vestry will be held in the Vestry room from 10 to 12 o'clock. The newly elected Vestry will hold their first meeting on Tuesday evening, at 8 o'clock.

Tickets for admission to the gallery on Easter day will not be given out before Palm Sunday. No tickets are given for admission to any other part of the Church.

Parish Tea, with music, and review of the year by the Rector, on Tuesday in Easter week. Tickets can be had from the clergy or Mr. Downing, or at 2035 Cherry street.

The new Manual of the Iron Cross Guilds has just been published, and we do not hesitate to recommend it as a complete work of its kind. It is bound in paper and cloth, making the price 5c and 12c respectively.

Subscribers are kindly requested to be prompt in paying for the MAGAZINE. April and November are the dates upon which subscriptions commence. Some few are quite delinquent. We shall consider it a favor if all will attend to this matter.

S. Clement's Dispensary.

The work goes quietly on. The lawyers have been investigating the legal questions touching its incorporation. On Saturday, March 27th, the Druggist put up prescription number 814. The number of new cases we have had has been as follows:

December, 62.

January, 80.

February, 73.

March 1–27, 71, and these have paid 776 visits.

We should be glad have any interested in it, go in to see the rooms. There is generally some one there during the day who will gladly show it.

We shall be glad to have empty bottles for medicine.

THE New York Herald knows everything. It tells us what we never knew before, which may amuse, if it does not interest, our readers:

"Much of the altar plate at S. Clement's Church is of silver and gold, and some of it is splendidly adorned with precious stones. It comprises among other things a communion chalice of silver, inlaid with gold, and studded with gems. It was presented to S. Clement's By Father Benson, head of the Order of S. John the Evangelist, and one of the few survivors of the English tractarian movement. An Indian prince gave the jewels to Father Benson's wife. (?) The latter died and the gems came into the hands of her husband, who, entering the monastic order, devoted them to the purpose they are now fulfilling!!!

"A chalice of silver and gold, adorned with diamonds and sapphires, has been presented to the Church by a wealthy member of the congregation. These treasures, it may be observed en passant, are kept in a big iron vault, carefully guarded, and are brought out only on special occasions."

THE following extract in regard to the Mission given by Father Maturin and Father Torbert in Milwaukee, is taken from the Wisconsin Kalendar, the official organ of that diocese:

"As the Mission went on the interest increased, not simply day by day, but hour by hour. The interest was not mere excitement, nor enthusiasm; for while preaching of a stirring and reviving character is a characteristic of the Mission, it is by no means all of the Mission. The work at the Cathedral was largely that of personal counsel, followed by confession and heart-searching preparation for the Holy Communion. It is true that many who were living careless and irreligious lives were awakened to better things, but that which was most apparent during the Mission was the increase in faith and spirituality of those who were already professed disciples; and so, at the service on Wednesday evening, March 3, the last of the Mission services, there was a renewal of Baptismal vows on the part of those who had been baptized and confirmed. It was a most impressive and solemn service, when, in the crowded Cathedral, a large number arose and made response in unison to the question in the Confirmation Office, and to the three questions in the Baptismal service. Many who did not arise were kneeling reverently at the same time. After the renewal the Bishop, preceded by the dean bearing the pastoral staff, went from his seat to the altar, and the missioners, Fathers Maturin and Torbert, standing on either side, he said to the congregation which filled the Cathedral:

"A very marked and blessed season in the history of this congregation, nay, of the Church in the city and in the Diocese, will close tomorrow morning with the administration of the Holy Communion at seven o'clock. Weeks of special preparation among the members of the Cathedral congregation preceded it, but that preparation would not have been what it was had not years of discipline, sore and grievous at times, and years of faithful teaching gone before it. God has greatly blessed the labors of these pious missioners, but we all have realized that the Mission has, through Divine mercy and grace, sealed and verified the faithfulness of the pastors who for fifteen years have ministered at this altar. I cannot give utterance to the thankfulness which is in my heart to-night, to see, as we all have seen day after day, yes, hour by hour, the deepening of spirituality, bringing all hearts closer and closer together, making all realize their oneness to CHRIST, and giving grace and strength to be more earnest and persevering in service and discipleship.

"Members of other congregations in the city and beyond the city have attended these services, and have carried with them, we trust, for work in their own parishes, an increase of devotion and piety. Devout people of other Christian bodies have been gladly welcomed to these services, and have realized, we hope, the Scriptural and evangelical nature of the teachings of this Mission. The doctrines of the Church, the practices of the Church, that which in its comprehensiveness is our precious heritage in the Catholic kingdom, has been unfolded with marvellous clearness in the instructions and sermons of this Mission, and all this has been brought home with mighty power to the hearts of a multitude. And now, in a spirit of prayer and devotion, with gratitude to GOD for his great goodness during these days of intercession, all, with one heart and one mind, are to unite in continuing and deepening this work. It only remains now to give expression, as I do most gladly, to the love and thankfulness of many souls to these dear brethren who have held this Mission, and to say good-bye. May He who has abundantly blessed their labors reward them with that recompense which is eternal."

The missioners then knelt down before the Bishop, who commended them to Divine protection. After the singing of one of the Mission hymns, the Bishop used the final prayers and pronounced the Benediction. It was a long time, however, before the vast congregation left the Cathedral, many remaining to speak with one another and with the clergy of the great things God had done for their souls.

On Thursday morning the Mission culminated in the early Celebration in the Cathedral at 7 o'clock. About 350 were present, and 235 received the Holy Communion. None who were present will ever forget this blessed and refreshing service. In the chapel and in the Cathedral the Eucharistic lights were used for the first time at these services. One feature of these Communion services was the signing, at this time, of the resolution cards, by the persons who had received them during the Mission. These cards, signed by one of the Mission priests, are given upon personal application to any one who desires to make a resolution of a definite nature; as, being regular at Communion; faithful in private prayer; abstaining from profanity or drinking liquor; being more patient, etc., etc., thus securing some practical end. About 370 of these cards were given out.

Letter from Fr. Sheppard.

15 Sir Lowry Road,
CAPETOWN, January 16, 1886.

My Dear Brother:

Your letter dated from Boston, which was most welcome, quite took me back again for the time to that famous city, and, as it were, into the circle of my many and dear American friends once more. . . . I regret very much that I had not the opportunity when I was in the States of crossing to Canada and seeing something of it. I was once at Buffalo, within ten miles of Niagara, but as I was hastenining home from the West to be in time for S. Clement's festival, I could not go to see the famous Falls. What did you think of the elaborate and strong criticisms of the Church Times upon the Book Annexed? At any rate, it is good to get light thrown upon such an important subject from any quarter, and especially from one who writes, I imagine, with a good deal of liturgical knowledge. There will be no harm done, I think, if the question is again left to simmer for another three years by the next General Convention, always provided the whole question is not shelved.

We have just received the December number of the Magazine, and I have read it, as I always do, with the greatest interest. The Iron Cross Guild reems making way and doing a good work. I find also that another Guild has come into existence, S. Martha's, but I don't know its object. The S. Clement's Dispensary is quite a new departure. I wish it all blessing and success, certainly it is wonderful that so many well known medical men are giving their services. I am sure it is a great thing to show the poor that the Church interests itself not only in their spiritual but also bodily wants and diseases and seeks to remedy them. I am very glad also to see that the Parochial Missionary Society is going to help the S. Mary's Orphanage, Baltimore—a work which I have very much at heart and there is no charity which more requires a helping hand.

Now perhaps you will be interested to hear something of our work and prospects here. The foundation stone of our school chapel was laid in July, last year, and now for a month or more the building has been architecturally complete, but we have not been able to open it, because the chairs, benches, lamps and altar hangings have not arrived from England. It is to be a school on the week-days and a church on Sundays, and we shall be able to use it also for classes and evening services on week-nights. It is not a very large building, but it is calculated to accommodate about 350 children in school, and about 400 when arranged churchwise. The sanctuary can be completely cut off from the body of the building by a large wooden shutter, which is hung with weights and runs in grooves, and fits exactly into the chancel arch. When not wanted, the top part, which is hinged on to the main part, falls over, and the whole is pushed down into a pit 11 feet deep, with cemented sides, and entirely disappears. The altar is well elevated and is itself a handsome piece of work of teak wood; it was made at the native college (Kafir) near here, from the designs of an altar in England by Mr. Bodley.

The whole length of the building is 92 feet, and breath in the widest part 35 feet. It is all of rough, dressed, buff sandstone from the Table Mountain, which towers up nearly 4,000 feet, overshadowing Capetown, the whole of which, almost, lies on the lower slopes of the mountain, as it trends towards the sea. The 500 or 600 feet of its height presents on the side a sheer wall, broken and rough, but quite precipitous, and the summit is like the straight line of a wall with a few breaks. Nearer to us, however, is the Devil's Peak, a detached mountain, with jagged peaks. When the south-east wind blows, the whole summit is covered with an intensely white cloud, which keeps drifting and pouring over the face of the cliff like a cloud water-fall, and evaporates when it reaches a certain point; the rest of the sky is perfectly clear and intensely blue, without a cloud. The south-east wind is extremely violent, and whirls the dust about in clouds to the great annoyance of passengers—and not only to them, but it also drifts into the houses through every smallest cranny. Every door and window rattles and creaks unless they are well fastened, and the effect of the wind is to produce great irritability and nervousness. Still it helps to keep the town healthy.

To return to the Church—one unusual feature will be the baptism tank for adult baptism by immersion. It has been constructed under the floor—11 feet x 3 and rather more than 3 feet deep. It is, of course, leaded, and there are steps down into it. We have now about seven Kafir men preparing for baptism, and they will be the first to be immersed. A very nice young Kafir has just been sent to us from the Kafiaria to work here as a catechist among the Kafirs in Capetown, of whom there are a good many; they work chiefly at the docks, and some in domestic service. For the last eight or ten months we have carried on a night school for Kafirs, to which fifteen or twenty come each night, some who are in service in a suburb coming by train every night, paying five shillings a month out of their wages for their school ticket.

I should say that in this country there is no reason at all why persons should not be immersed, and without doubt it is the much more primitive way, and is much more teaching than Baptism by affusion. The Kafir catechist, John James, is hoping eventually to take Holy Orders. He speaks English very fairly, and has been two years at a Theological School at Umtata, in Kafirland. Now I must only add my kindest remembrances to all friends who would wish to hear of me, especially the members of S. John's Guild, whom I know. . . . I must not forget the Fathers and Brother Maynard. With every kind wish . . . I remain,

Yours very truly in our Lord,

G. E. SHEPPARD, S. S. J. E.

THE present number of our Magazine contains the year book or report of the various organizations of this church. The Rector has been absent during nine months of this year and it was feared by many that this would have a depressing effect upon the congregation and finances of the parish. These fears have not been realized and the work has gone on steadily, smoothly and successfully.

The Parish is in a most hopeful condition, the organizations are more consolidated, and in more efficient working order than at any previous period. The Vestry is reorganized. The Guilds have been multiplied and are a well-known and most important feature of our church life.

Six retreats have been held during the year, three for men, two for women, and one general.

122 persons have been baptized, 11 adults and 111 infants; 79 confirmed.

Of the communicants, 77 are new; 10 have been received; 13 have died, and 64 have removed to a distance. The list as corrected contains 943 communicants.

There have been 8 marriages and 34 burials during the year.

The Clergy have conducted Retreats in Washington, Baltimore and Newark; a Mission of ten days at Waverly, Baltimore; a Mission of two weeks in Camden, and other Mission work in different States.

The amount received from subscribers to the Dr. Stewart Fund was $235. The amount paid him from May 4 to Dec. 1 was $300; the difference, $65, was charged to charity account.

Of the loans due by the Parish for money advanced for current expenses there have been paid, one of $1,000, one of $215.49, and a balance due the late Accounting Warden of $5.95. There is still outstanding a loan of $1,000, contracted during the current year.

The mortgage against the chapel has been reduced to $8,000 by the funds received from the Bazaar, the holders of the mortgage against the clergy house having declined to accept anything on account.

The debt of $1,600 on the organ has been settled in full.

The Easter offering of $2,550.28, nearly half of which was contributed by one person, has enabled the Parish to cancel a large amount of back indebtedness. The new year opens with a balance in cash of $31.09; unpaid bills, some running back to 1885, amounting to about $200, and an unpaid loan of $1,000. To this must be added the fact that under the new by-laws the fiscal year ends March 25, 1888, before Easter.

The thanks of the Parish and Vestry are due to Mr. B. F. Holl, the late Accounting Warden, for his indefatigable labors, and for the generous way in which he has devoted his time to the interests of the Church.

S. Clement's Sunday-School.

The number of members in the school remains about the same (300). More teachers are wanted in order that the school may be worked efficiently.

During the year great improvements have been made in the school-room, and some handsome presents have been received. Mr. Moro Phillips sent from England for use at the children's services a beautiful set of scarlet cassocks for the acolytes and a purple cassock for the crucifer at the children's services. A set of stoles and cottas have also been given. The Lenten and Easter offerings, $47, were applied to furnishing new books for the library which greatly needs replenishing. Several presents of books have been gratefully received.

A spiritual library was opened in Lent and has been well used. There are now about 200 books of good devotional reading and more are wanted. The library is open on Saturday afternoons at 4 o'clock. The attendance at the children's Eucharist at 9 A. M. has been better than last year, and the general behavior of the children is improved, but some of the classes are too large, and more teachers are greatly needed. Sunday-school teaching is often troublesome, and thankless work and the thanks of the whole parish are due to those who undertake it. The assistance of two more gentlemen in the library is greatly needed.

The Sewing School.

The sewing school under the charge of one of the Sisters assisted by several ladies, has met regularly each Saturday afternoon, from October to April. The average number in attendance has been about sixty.

The little ones have made a patchwork quilt for the missionary box, the elder ones pinafores, etc., for their own use.

The expenses have been about $10. The ladies in charge of the classes have provided gifts for their several classes and for their entertainments at Christmas and Easter.

The Guild of S. John the Evangelist (for Men).

The Secretary reports a present membership of 38; new members elected 7; average attendance at the ten meetings held during the year, 19. One member has died. Lectures have been given by Rev. Fr. Convers, "On the Revision of the Prayer Book;" Rev. H. R. Percival, "Infidel Objections;" Rev. N. F. Robinson, "Is the Human Race Descended from Adam?;" Henry Flanders, Esq., "Canon Law;" William H. Klapp, M. D., "The Roman Basilica;" Rev. Fr. Longridge, "The Authenticity of the Four Gospels." The Warden, Rev. Fr. Convers conducted the Annual Retreat for the Guild on Passion Sunday.

The Guild also collected from among its members between one and two hundred dollars that was presented to Fr. Maturin on his departure last September. The Treasurer is unable to include this in his report as neither the money nor a memorandum of the amount was ever furnished him. The Guild has assumed the responsibility of paying for rebuilding the Parish Bier and for the music at the Easter procession of Guilds.

PHILADA., April 22, 1887.

The Guild of the Iron Cross.

This Guild, originated by twelve workingmen and their chaplain in the Vestry of S. Clement's Church, in the year 1883, has developed in a surprising and unexpected manner.

There are now six Bishops and 112 Priests associated with it, and about 1500 members. The second General Convention was held in S. Augustine's Church, Holy Trinity Parish, New York, on S. Paul's Day, January 25th, 1887, when the sermon was preached by the Right Rev. Bishop Huntington, of Central New York, on "the Church and the Labor world." The Pledge of the Guild which is the basis of membership is threefold, including Temperance (not total abstinence), Reverence and Chastity.

The Organization has issued a large number of Church Publications, especially adapted to the needs of men for their own instruction and for their use in teaching.

	Number.

Retreats for men have been held in S. Clement's and in Churches at Newark and New York.

The meetings have been well attended during the year. During last summer the chaplain and some of the members of the Guild, took a party of working boys, each Saturday afternoon to the country.

At the meeting on the eve of S. Paul's Day, a service was held in S. Clement's Church, and at the meeting afterwards, speeches were made by Mr. Furman Sheppard, Mr. Fletcher Budd and Mr. Henry Budd. About 350 men were present.

Regular meetings have been held twice in each month with an attendance of about forty members.

The following is an abstract of Treasurer's report which, however, does not include $357 paid by the chaplain for printing and $47 for Holiday Fund, and $138 towards the expenses of the General Convention.

These sums were paid by the chaplain for publications, railway expenses and expenses of the Convention, amounting in all to $523.47.

About $100 is still due for unpaid bills, etc., from the various Branches, and there is a good stock of books and publications in the hands of the editor of the Iron Cross, 408 Commerce street. The Guild is, therefore, in a flourishing condition financially, and anticipates a large increase of Branches in the coming year.

The Guild of S. Christopher.

The Guild of S. Christopher continues to meet on the last Saturday in each month at 10 A. M. Several of the members have become members of S. Vincent's Guild, but the work of S. Christopher's Guild has been quietly carried on. The boys have tried to keep their rules, which are strict, and have done a good deal in charity for others.

Presents of books have been sent to poor children. Little Christopher has been provided with clothing and a new crutch.

The Guild of S. Vincent.

This Guild is newly started, but promises to be one of the most useful in the Parish. It consists of Acolytes, who are all communicants, and give their time in helping the Clergy in the arrangements of the Church and the Services.

It meets on the 1st Wednesday in each month, at 7.30, in the Clergy House.

There are twenty-five members. They held their Retreat on Palm Sunday. Twenty members observed the day.

Guild of S. Michael and all Angels.

Members of the choir are admitted to this Guild after three months' probation. The rule is extremely simple, and refers to the private devotions of the members, and their reverence in the sacred services of the church.

There are 24 members.

The Altar Guild.

April, 1887.

We are glad to report that since last Easter the Altar Guild has still been actively at work.

The Linen Department has been able to provide many needy parishes with Altar linen. We hope to report next year that we have also provided wafer bread. We are quite ready to do this.

The work accomplished this year has been:

FOR S. CLEMENT'S CHURCH.

4 Lace albs.

FOR OTHER CHURCHES.

7 Albs.
4 Chasubles.
5 Maniples.
7 Amices.
4 Girdles.
12 Cottas, priests.
16 Cottas, boys.
8 Sets of altar linen.

We only wish that all the members of the Guild and those interested in the work could see the letters of heartfelt gratitude we continually receive from those to whom we send gifts. It would certainly convince them that their labors, gifts and prayers had not been in vain.

The Guild of the Holy Cross.

This Guild was inaugurated on All Saints' Day, 1885. It consists of young unmarried women, communicants of the Church. It provides a rule of life for its members, is entirely self-supporting and without any temporal benefits or social gatherings. A special service for the Guild, is held on the afternoon of the first Sunday in every month, when admissions take place. It now numbers forty-eight members.

The dues are $3 a year. Any surplus funds which remain after paying the expenses are devoted to some charitable purpose. This year the funds are to be given to "Our Country Home." Several ladies of the Guild have formed themselves into a committee to promote the welfare of this work.

S. Martha's Guild.

The Guild of S. Martha is composed of girls over fourteen years of age, who have been confirmed and who are communicants or desirous of becoming so.

In November, of 1886, two lady associates took charge of the Guild which was then composed of twelve girls. There are now twenty-two full members, two probationers, and two associates, in all twenty-six.

The Guild meets the third Sunday in every month at the Sister's house where they have a service in Chapel and tea afterwards. They also have a social gathering one evening in every week when they sew and read, etc.

The Guild is self-supporting.

Guild of S. Mary.

This Guild for women can record a year of growth. Its object is to help women live a Christian life themselves and influence others to do the same. It began the year with five probationers, sixty-one members and twenty-four associates; it ends the year with ten probationers, seventy members, and thirty associates; besides there have been four expelled and two suspended and one has resigned; therefore there were twenty-seven admitted during the year. Their picnic this year went to Burlington. Their Retreat on Thursday in Passion Week was attended by nearly twice as many as came last year. The statement of the Treasurer is as follows:

Guild of the Holy Child.

The Guild of the Holy Child is for girls, who are received as a rule under the age of twelve and prepared for confirmation. The members of the Guild and the probationers meet once a month for a service and tea, and on every Saturday afternoon for an hour's needle work and recreation.

S. Barnabas' Guild for Nurses.

This branch was started November, 1886. Its object is to promote the spiritual life of its members, and provide for them the benefits resulting from association with each other, and with other women, as friends, who are interested in their noble work.

The meetings are held monthly in the chapel where there is a service and afterwards a social meeting.

It has nine members and six associates. The general plan of the Guild which is represented in Boston, Brooklyn, New York and Chicago, as well as here, contemplates various works of a beneficial and benevolent character as well as the spiritual end which is, however, the most important. Those in the parish who are interested in the Guild and would like to forward its objects whether as members or associates, should speak to the officers, or come to the meetings, which are usually held on the first Tuesday of each month.

The Guild will receive any Christian woman and is not limited to communicants of the Church.

Chaplain.—Rev. Fr. Convers.

Secretary.—Mrs. A. W. Kilgore, 2033 Locust street.

The Hospital and Dispensary.

Since last Easter several important steps have been taken in our medical charity. On July 12 the Dispensary was incorporated under the above title. The charter gives general powers to open and carry on every form of medical charity which we may be able to undertake, not only general and special dispensaries, but also an infirmary for incurable cases, hospital for acute or chronic cases, or for special forms of disease, or a convalescent home for those recovering. Our plans will not be limited by our charter but by our means. It has been settled that besides "life members" all who contribute $10 or more in a year, whether in or out of the Parish, can vote at the election of the Board of Directors. Membership of the Board is not confined to those who belong to S. Clements; and the present Board has for its members some who belong to other Parishes.

The plan of work is unchanged. The Dispensary is open every week night to all comers without distinction. The plan of having the patients visited and preventing those who are abusing the charity from continuing to come, is one which the medical profession heartily approves. The work done in the eleven months since last Easter, is as follows:

MONTH.	NEW CASES	TOTAL VISITS.

November 24 was the Annual Donation Day, when many generous gifts of clothing, bed-clothing, hospital supplies and money were received.

There have been two changes on the medical staff. A. Douglas Hall, M. D., has resigned from the Eye Dispensary; Martin H. Rively, M. D., has resigned from the General Dispensary, and his place has been taken by Walter A. Chrystie, M. D., 113 S. Sixteenth street.

The Treasurer's Report will show how liberally the Dispensary has been supported.

For the future, the patients have so increased as to require that some plan be adopted to provide help for the physicians during those months when there is most sickness. Probably the Board at their next meeting will take action in this matter. It is too much to expect a single doctor to see over thirty patients in the one hour during which our doors are open.

As a means to provide a house and stop the chief outlay, or to open in the Hospital Department, should that be deemed wise, a fair is contemplated. It is hoped that many out of the Parish as well as all in it, will spend a part of their summer in working for this sale, in order that we may realize enough early in the autumn to get a "local habitation."

The Workingmen's Club.

To the President and Directors of S. Clement's Workingmen's Club.

GENTLEMEN.—The Club during the past year, which was the fifth year since its organization has been successful; the board has held its regular monthly meetings and one meeting of the whole club was held in June.

Radical and important changes have been made in the Constitution and By-laws, since the last annual report, of which the following are the most important:—

Changing the mode of selecting the Directors from being appointed by the President, to being elected by the members of the club; and the formation of a legal department, enabling any member to have the advice of skilled and competent counsel in any legal matter free of cost.

The library remains about the same. The club gave its annual excursion to Atlantic City, on August 28, which was highly enjoyed by those members who spent a day at the sea-shore.

During the past year great interest has been manifested by the members in two pool tournaments among the members of the club.

The Mothers' Meeting.

While the number of names on the roll has slightly increased this year, yet there has been a much better attendance and as a result the meeting has outgrown its former quarters. Now instead of crowding the Choir Room uncomfortably on Thursdays, they meet in the Sunday-school Room, for buying their dry goods, practicing their music, and enjoying their cups of tea.

The Women's Benefit Club.

MEMBERS. Any member of the Guild of S. Mary, or any other woman who is a member of the Parish, can become a member of the club.

Any one becoming a member must then be in good health.

Members can subscribe for their children, provided they are in good health and over five years of age, by paying 25 cents a month for each.

DUES. The entrance fee, paid but once, is $1. Dues, 25 cents each month.

Dues must be kept promply paid up during the weeks for which benefits are received. If not, they will be kept back out of the benefits paid.

Dues must be paid to the Secretary at the Sisters' House, or at the meeting of the Guild of S. Mary, on the first Monday in each month.

BENEFITS. Members are entitled, during sickness, to $3 per week for six weeks; after that time to $1.50 per week for six weeks more; after which time benefits for that sickness will stop.

Benefits will be paid only on the written certificate of the attending physician, countersigned by one of the Sisters or the Clergy.

Members are entitled to benefits as soon as the entrance fee and one month's dues have been paid.

No benefits will be paid for fractional parts of a week.

LEAVING THE CLUB. A member removing from the city, or ceasing to belong to the Parish, will cease to be a member.

Members can be expelled at any time for disorderly or immoral conduct.

A member who ceases to be in good standing in the Parish or in any of the other parochial societies to which she may belong, will, ipso facto, be expelled from this Club.

Members who fall three months in arrears will be dropped.

A member expelled from the Club, or voluntarily withdrawing, can in no case get back her money.

Application for boys to the Choir should be made to the Rector or Choir-Master.

The pews in this Church are rented. Strangers and others not renting sittings, will be assigned places by the Ushers. Information in regard to the renting of pews may be had of the Accounting Warden, or of the Ushers.

Strangers and persons wishing to be visited are requested to leave their names and addresses in the letter-box on the vestry door, or at the Clergy House. The Clergy are always glad to visit those who desire it.

This MAGAZINE is published monthly through Mr. Samuel Williams, 201 S. Thirtieth St., Philadelphia. Subscriptions, exchanges and communications may be sent to this address.

Parish Notes.

The Bishop of the Diocese will hold a Confirmation in this church on Friday evening, March 16th at 8 o'clock. All persons desiring to be Confirmed are requested to send in their names to any of the clergy or sisters as soon as possible.

The first General Confirmation Class will be held on Tuesday evening, January 3d, at 8 o'clock, in the chapel.

The Accounting Warden calls attention to the fact that most of the desirable pews are rented. Any persons wishing to have sittings should apply to him without delay.

Father Convers would be very glad to hear of places where employment can be had at laundry work, plain sewing, house cleaning, and office work for a stenographer and type writer.

Father Convers' class for men will begin on the first Sunday after the Epiphany (January 8th), at 3 P. M., in the Dispensary building, 110 Friedlander street.

CHRISTMAS DAY occurring this year on Sunday was more religiously and devoutly observed than is customary, when the secular observance of a holiday is mingled with the proper commemoration of a Holy day and particulary with one celebrating the birth of Him "Who for us men and for our salvation, came down from heaven, And was incarnate by the Holy Ghost of the Virgin Mary, And was made man."

The great proportion of the attendants at the various services during the day seemed to have come to worship rather than to gratify the senses of hearing and seeing. We do not think we have ever seen more reverent behavior among the strangers present. None left during the celebration—a great improvement upon some former occasion, when, after listening to the music and sermon many turned their backs upon the Altar and distracted the devotions of the faithful by leaving the church after having seen and heard sufficient to gratify their curiosity.

There were celebrations at 6, 7, 8, 9 and 11 o'clock. The number of communicants, though larger than usual, was not as many as should have been present at this festival when every parishoner should make his Communion unless unavoidably prevented.

At the 11 o'clock celebration, Haydn's "Imperial" Mass was finely given by the choir with full orchestral accompaniment, under the direction of the choir master and organist, Mr. Baker, Mr. Oram playing the organ. The music was beautifully rendered, and it was very effective. At this service Father Longridge was Celebrant, Father Maturin, Deacon, and Father Field, Sub-Deacon.

THE FAIR.

"How much money did we make at the Fair for the Hospital?" is still a conundrum to which we cannot give the exact answer. Some of the articles left over at the various tables have been sold at private sale since, some more will no doubt be sold, and returns made when the holidays are over; and the full returns cannot be made before the early part of January, and perhaps not even then. But we give here the returns received by the Treasurer up to the present time It is very encouraging to find that in spite of the many drawbacks and the strong competition of four or five fairs going on at the same time in the same part of the city, we cleared $2,250.77. There is more yet to come in, just how much we cannot say, which will bring up the sum total a few hundred dollars. In one or two instances in the following statement some little ticket money is included in the "receipts from the tables" which could not be separated from the other funds.

From S. Barnabas' Guild Table,	$33 15
" The Fish Pond,	12 80
" Mrs. Brown's Table,	155 00
" Mrs. Fields' Table,	180 00
" The Holy Cross Guild Table,	161 32
" The Candy Table,	30 00
" The Lemonade Stand,	18 00
" The Cake Table,	103 00
" The Restaurant,	72 01
" Mrs. Roberts' Table,	155 55
" Publication Table,	137 94
" Mrs Wright's Table,	108 51
" Mrs. Moore's Table,	138 39
" S. Mary's Guild Table,	162 00
" Children's Dep't of S. Mary's Guild Table,	56 59
" Mrs. Neill's Table,	288 17
" Mrs. McIlvaine's Table,	456 95
" Embroidery Exhib'n,	20 65
" Sale of Tickets,	256 35
	$2,546 38
Expenses,	295 61
	$2,250 77

The sale of tickets nearly paid all the expenses. The success of the Fair has insured our ability to make our first payment on the property. The Board of Managers is very thankful to those who have worked so hard and done so well for the Hospital. But with all now on hand there will not be enough to make up the $3,000 hoped for; and so all who have articles on hand must try to sell them at private sale—not sacrifice them—that we may get finally that sum.

Offerings from November 20th to December 20th, $605.29.

The Iron Cross Festival.

The Annual Festival and Convention of the Guild of the Iron Cross will be held on S. Paul's Day, January 25th. The first service will be a celebration of the Holy Eucharist at S. Mark's Church, Sixteenth and Locust streets, at 11 A. M. A short address will be given on the "Workmen's Offering," by Bishop Starkey, of Newark, who was one of the first Honorary Chaplains of the Guild.

The General Convention will be held at S. Clement's Church at 1.30 P. M. At 6 o'clock refreshments will be provided for all the Chaplains and delegates.

In the evening at 8 o'clock the office of the Guild will be sung by several choirs combined; the sermon on "Labor and Life" will be preached by the Right Rev. Hugh Miller Thompson, Bishop of Mississippi.

The offerings at both services will be for the Guild, which is spreading rapidly and extending its various good works in the West and North.

Owing to the limited space men only will be admitted at the evening service, but it is hoped that all will attend the service in S. Mark's Church in the morning.

Diocesan Notes.

Bishop Howe, of Central Pennsylvania, has accepted the invitation of the Standing Committee to preach a memorial sermon of Bishop Stevens.

Rev. W. H. Graff, of S. Jude's Church, has accepted the Rectorship of Christ Church, Williamsport, and will assume charge next month.

Spohr's entire work, "The Last Judgment," was sung Thursday evening, Dec. 8th, at the Church, by S. Mark's Choir, under the direction of Mr. Pine, the organist.

At a meeting of the Standing Committee held Dec. 6th, Mr. James A. Montgomery was recommended to be received as a candidate for Holy Orders.

Rev. Johnson Hubbell (of the R. E. Church), and Mr. Arnold H. Ord, applied to be recommended for Holy Orders.

Mr. Richard C. McMurtrie was elected member of the Standing Committee to fill vacancy caused by death of Mr. Edward Olmstead.

The Parish House of the Memorial Church of the Advocate was occupied for the first time on the first anniversary of the establishment of the Mission. It has three stories, the first story containing eight class-rooms, which will accommodate 650 children. In the second story is a hall capable of seating 550 persons, and the third story is to be fitted as a gymnasium, etc. It is hoped that the chapel will be completed by Easter, and work on the church building commenced soon after.

The House of S. Michael and All Angels, for young colored cripples, has just issued its first annual report. This most deserving charity originally started in a small eight-room house, and moved last July into its present commodious house at the corner of Forty-third and Haverford streets. It now contains twenty-one inmates. Its object is to diminish or remove the deformities of the body, improve the mind and teach the hands to work, so that its beneficiaries may in time become self-supporting and cease to be a burden upon society. Their religious instruction is not neglected, and they are taught the principles of the Church without dilution. A small room is fitted up as a chapel and furnished in a churchly manner. There is to be a celebration of the Holy Communion each Sunday at 9 A. M.

The Treasurer's report shows a remarkable result financially. Out of $6,168.55 they have paid towards the purchase of the house, repairs, insurance, etc., $4,692.60. Printing press, type, etc., $334.86. Artificial limbs, surgical appliances, etc., $288.21, leaving for household expenses only $657.78, of which $294.17 was paid for rent of the temporary house. They commenced the new year with $195.10 cash and no debt except the mortgage an the house, which they hope that their friends will see paid before the close of their second year. This is the only house devoted to colored cripples, so far as is known. Rev. Dr. Nicholson, of S. Mark's, is Chaplain, and Sister Sarah, Sister in Charge.

General Notes.

The Rev. James Steptoe Johnston, is to be consecrated Bishop of Western Texas, in Trinity Church, Mobile, Ala., on the Feast of the Epiphany, by the Bishop of Alabama, assisted by the Bishops of Kentucky and Michigan.

The "Argument of the Purse" has failed, we are happy to say, so far as the Chinese Mission is concerned. Bishop Boone, relieved from the thraldom of the Bible House, substantially sustains Messrs. Partridge and Graves, and they have been vindicated from the unjust aspersions to which they were subjected. The Bishop seems, however, hardly to have fully recovered from his timidity, as he allows a "reverent Celebration, including the use of plain linen vestments, such as you now wear, with a Canterbury cap or zuchetta." "Provided this allowance does not hold in the province of Kiang See." The Chinese League is also allowed, but with the warning sign "No Chinese need apply." No wonder one Evangelical Church paper is in doubt "whether to laugh or mourn over the littleness of these terms of agreement."

THE SISTERS OF S. MARY have recently, with the full approval of the Bishop, established a house in Chicago. They have taken up their abode near S. Clement's Church in that city and avail themselves of the privilege of worship there, though not officially connected with the parish.

THE Diocese of Delaware have again failed to elect a Bishop to succeed the late Bishop Lee. The mode of procedure in that Diocese is for the clergy to nominate a candidate, subject to the approval of the lay delegates. Two-thirds vote of each is required to elect.

The clergy made four nominations, as follows:

Rev. Jos. D. Newlin, D. D., Rector of the Church of the Incarnation, Philadelphia; Rev. G. H. Kinsolving, Rector of the Church of the Epiphany, Philadelphia; Rev. Boyd Vincent, Rector of Calvary Church, Pittsburg; Rev. Joseph Carey, D. D., Rector of Bethesda Church, Saratoga Sp'gs, N. Y., all of whom were rejected by the laity.

It is generally understood that a large number of the laity favored the election of Rev. Leighton Coleman, D. D., Rector of the Church of the Redeemer, Sayre, Pa., and that as they could not vote directly for him, adopted the course they did to induce the clergy to nominate him.

It seems to us that for a small diocese, and one not in the "troublesome belt," they are not easy to please. One thing is certain, the next Bishop will be a more advanced churchman than the late Bishop.

Current Discussion.

REV. MR. GRISWOLD, of Ilion, N. Y., Diocese of Albany, read before the Clerical Union at Utica, N. Y., recently a paper on "Confession—what position should Parish Priests take concerning Auricular Confession," which, after a very full and harmonious discussion, was unanimously requested for publication. We regret that we have not space for the whole article, not because it is definite in its teaching, but because it shows that the Church is awaking to its mission, and that the old fear of Romanizing is subsiding, and an earnest inquiry is made as to where are the old paths. The paper states the positions taken by different classes in the Church and analyzes each.

1st. Those that hold that auricular confession has no place in the Protestant Episcopal Church, and that it is essentially "Roman, recent and wrong."

2d. Those that hold that the general confession is sufficient in ordinary cases. [We presume these belong to the P. Episcopal wing in contradistinction to Protestant E.]

3d. Those that hold that confession is a part of the Catholic heritage of the Church, very helpful and ought to be in more general use, but as it is not obligatory it would better suit pewholders if not alluded to publicly.

4th. Those that hold that confession is a necessary part of repentance, and that it and the ministry of reconciliation is such an important part of the system of the Church that in all honesty it must be urged upon the people and its use restored to our branch of the Church.

5th. Those that perceiving the great need of discipline are inclined to insist upon the use of the Sacrament of Penance almost as if it were of like importance with Baptism and the Holy Eucharist.

His conclusions are that as no Priest has the moral right to systematically refuse to hear confessions, so he has no moral or legal right to compel any to resort to it. He then answers the positions of the first and second classes in the negative. As to the other three classes while he concedes that it may be questionable if it is expedient to arouse too much prejudice, on the other hand, he says, when we know so well the great benefits of sacramental confession it does seem that we ought to preach it without let or hindrance. He asks how can we restore the so much needed discipline of the laity otherwise than by the restoration of the Sacrament of Penance, and in conclusion says. But though there is much that is doubtful is not this the safe as well as the true and honest position to keep before the people, the fact that the power of absolution is vested in the Church, and to urge constantly upon them the need of confessing their sins unto God, and also if need be they may open their grief to their priest.

THE STANDARD OF THE CROSS AND THE CHURCH in a long article entitled After Methodism Mannerism commenting upon Bishop Boone's agreement with Messrs. Partridge and Graves, says that the importance of all this is that it helps to make Ritualism a matter of Documentary History, and indicates something of the strength that has been claimed for it, that it is as much or more of a strain upon conservative church people to acknowledge the place of Ritualism in the Church as it was one hundred years to acknowledge the place of Methodism, that it is time for conservative churchmen to be as openly pronounced in adjusting themselves to the situation as the Ritualists are in asserting themselves. It concludes as follows:

"In the humility that is forced upon us what shall we confess? That the manners of Ritualism afford a wider expression than that to which we have been wont for the sentiment of reverence. To satisfy our conservatism we must still insist that these manners are too apt to be superficial; we must scan them with some distrust as to their spirit. But we will admit that reverence and devotion, seeking to go beyond a sober demeanor and dignified speech and plain apparel, are learning a savoir faire from these aggressive Ritualists or Mannerists. "To be specific," as the Bishop of Shanghai says—for it is of the essence of the thing to compel us to descend to details—the Ritualists should have the credit of abolishing pews that it is impossible to kneel in; of multiplying convenient opportunities for Holy Communion; of facilitating reverence generally in the performance of Divine worship. They have given zest to a taste for improved architecture. They have cultivated a certain perspicuity of language in the discussion of sacred things. They have given attention to the decency and beauty of ornament in the service of God. There is indeed a per contra account to every one of these items. Fussiness and tawdriness of ornament, technical and partisan nomenclature, formalism and insincerity in behavior, have not been wholly avoided; but it were too much to say that these are the practical and most obvious outcome of the new Mannerism that we are wont to call Ritualism.

In a word, Ritualism is with us, and we are all affected by it. We need not scorn to learn whatever of true reverance and convenience and beauty it may have to teach. We may even be cordially thankful for the better observance of rubrics and of the proprieties of worship which it often enables us to render. What we are to condemn and guard against is the exaltation of the thing into partisanship, with its danger of sectarian division, and the mistaking of its external forms for conclusive evidence of a devout and obedient spirit."

BEETHOVEN'S MASS IN C, composed in 1807, has not been sung in this city during recent years, under circumstances dissociated from strictly religious surroundings. And yet a real comprehension of the music can scarcely be gained when the mind is centered chiefly on the greater matter which the music was intended to enshrine. It must, of course, be confessed that the music is put to a great test when separated from the surroundings for which it was composed, and when rendered, merely as a work of art. It is, however, an opportunity for study, score in hand, and of undivided attention to the music and its composer's method of expression. Nor need such a performance be irreverent. The reiterated Kyrie from all the voices, then one and again a few, and then all the multitude, culminating in one long yet trustful and subdued cry for mercy, has a meaning more special than the mere formal approach to the mysteries of the celebration. And so the repeated Credo is seen to be more than the first word of the Creed; it is the strong, though subdued, yet swelling confession of faith, soon to burst our with a great declaration of his Sonship before all ages.

The recent introduction of a large and powerful organ under the stage of the Academy of Music, has also removed a serious objection to the singing of this music in a public hall. In a building especially and successfully constructed for hearing, with a larger body of singers than usual in the most enlarged choir, and especially chosen solo singers, this great Mass will seem grander than ever before. Sung in Easter week of this year (on Thursday evening, April 5th, 1888), with the music of our own choir still ringing through the memory, the contrast between the two Masses cannot but interest. The soloists will be named in February. THE CECILIAN will compose the choir, and many faces in the orchestra will be familiar. Reserved seats can be selected by giving name, address and the price to Mr. John Bethell Uhle, President of the Cecilian, on Tuesday evenings, at the Northeast corner of Eighteenth and Chestnut streets, and during the week at Room 13, No. 212 South Third street.

Lent.

ON FEBRUARY 15th we enter upon another Lent. It comes with its call to some to turn away from sin and to turn to God with all the heart; to others, to break more entirely with some one sin—the sin that doth so easily beset us; to all, to deeper repentance for the past and to draw more closely to God.

Each person should endeavor at the beginning of Lent to make a definite rule for himself and to observe it faithfully throughout. In making a rule two dangers should be avoided:

I. It ought not to be too strict. Earnest people sometimes overestimate their own strength, the six weeks of Lent is a long time, and what seems easy in the fervor of entering upon Lent often becomes intolerable before the season is over. Do not, therefore, undertake anything that you cannot persevere in to the end.

II. It ought not to be too easy. The rule must be felt as a distinct discipline. It would be useless to make a rule that involved no effort. "I will not offer unto the Lord my God of that which doth cost me nothing." Let it be something that you feel every day and that needs some trouble on your part to keep.

You may put your rule under the heads of the three great Christian duties, Prayer, Fasting and Almsgiving.

1. PRAYER. You ought to pray more than at ordinary times. There will be three Celebrations every day at 7, 8.15 and 9.30. Try, if possible, and be present at one of these. If you cannot come every day, settle with yourself to come so many times in the week. Most people can manage to come in the early morning, if they try.

Before Lent there will be printed a list of the services and instruction. Select what you feel will be most helpful to you and keep to them throughout. Make your rule as a minimum not a maximum, that is to say, if you feel sure you can come once in the week, and think it most likely you can come twice, make it your rule to come once, and try to come oftener.

Then in regard to private prayer. Try to get some time each day for intercession. Come to church five minutes earlier or wait five minutes later. Make a list of subjects, or of persons for whom you wish specially to pray, so that you may not lose time. If you cannot meditate, at least read some spiritual book every day, or a certain number of times in the week.

2. FASTING. The Prayer Book calls every day in the week a fast day. Fasting means doing without sufficient food. Every day in Lent (except Sundays) we ought to fast, that is, not to eat as much as we would at ordinary times—besides this, Wednesdays and Fridays are days in which we should not eat meat. Make a rule for yourself, therefore, in regard to the quantity of food, such as, to take one full meal, and at other times only a certain fixed quantity. Remember that doing without things that you like does not take the place of doing without meat.

Then in regard to amusements. Arrange with yourself what you mean to give up and what you do not. Don't leave it to be decided in some moment of temptation. Decide whether you intend not to go to the theatre under any circumstances; whether you mean not to go out to any entertainments, larger or smaller receptions, sewing parties, etc. A great deal of harm is often done by a person going out against their conscience, when, if they had made up their minds beforehand, they would have gained no harm.

3. ALMSGIVING. Look out in a Concordance and you will be surprised to find what great spiritual power the Bible attributes to almsgiving. Try to give more in Lent than at other times. Put into a box each day, or each week, what you have saved from luxuries or pleasures. If, for instance, you have been in the habit of going to the theatre once a week, or once a fortnight, and you give that up through Lent, put the price of your ticket at the end of the week into your alms-box and offer it at Easter, or on Sunday, or give it to some poor person. Make it a rule to walk at least once in the week when you would have taken a car, and put the money by. If you do this regularly for every self-denial, you will be surprised to find how much it will amount to.

And lastly, it is earnestly hoped that every communicant in the Parish will make his or her communion on Easterday. A card will be given to each communicant with the request that they will write on it the name and hour at which they mean to make their Easter Communion. Hitherto the communicants on Easterday fell far short of the number of names in the Parish Register. We earnestly hope that this may be corrected at the coming Easter. And with the earnest prayer that God will bless the coming Lent to all, both Priests and people, and that while we pray for our people they will not fail to pray for us, I am your friend, in our Lord Jesus Christ,

B. W. MATURIN.

Parish Notes.

THE BISHOP of the Diocese will hold confirmation in this church on Friday Evening, March 16th, at 8 o'clock. The confirmation classes will be as follows:

General class (open to those already confirmed), Tuesday evenings at 8 o'clock.

Class for mothers, Thursday evenings at 8 o'clock.

Class for men, Friday evenings at 8 o'clock.

Class for boys, Wednesday evenings at 7 o'clock.

Class for children at the Sisters' House, 2032 Cherry street: for younger girls, Wednesdays at 5 P. M.; for elder girls, Mondays at 7 P. M.

Class for young women, beginning February 10th, Fridays, at 4 P. M.

All persons desiring to be confirmed are requested to send in their names without delay to any of the clergy or sisters.

ASH WEDNESDAY (February 15th), will as usual be kept as a day of retreat open to any (men and women) who desire to attend. There will be addresses at 9, 4 and 7.30. Refreshments can be had in the choir room at 8, 1 and 6 o'clock. There will be an offertory after the last meditation, when any who so desire, will have an opportunity of giving towards the expenses of the retreat.

ON THURSDAY evening, February 23d, at 8 o'clock, the choir will sing Gaul's Passion Music—the church will be open to all at 7 o'clock.

THE ANNUAL retreat for ladies will be held as usual in the Sister's Chapel, at the beginning of Lent.

HOLY CROSS GUILD will meet on Quinquagesima Sunday (Feb'y 12th), instead of the first Tuesday of the month.

THERE WILL be an address to the Altar Guild on Thursday, February 9th, after the celebration at 9.30.

A FEW WEEKS ago some of the outer sisters decided upon a plan to provide certain supplies weekly for the sisters. The plan has been most cordially taken up and carried out without difficulty, several ladies who are not associates desiring to help.

The ladies who have had the matter in hand desire us to return their hearty thanks to all who have so liberally assisted them. Many have been glad of the opportunity to show their love and gratitude to the sisters.

FATHER Maturin will preach a course of sermons to men only on Sunday afternoons during Lent at 4 o'clock. All men, whether members of the parish or not, are cordially invited to attend.

FATHER Maturin is holding a mission at S. Mary's Church, Castleton, Staten Island, Rev. A. G. Mortimer, Rector. The mission commenced on Septuagesima Sunday.

ON ACCOUNT of the many items of interest, we have been compelled to print this number of the MAGAZINE in smaller type, and to increase the number of pages so that there is nearly double the amount of matter usually published.

S. CLEMENT'S MAGAZINE should be worthy of the parish, and in order to make it what it should be, we ask the hearty co-operation of all parishioners. If the MAGAZINE had the proportionate support within the parish which it has outside, it could be at once improved and made more acceptable to all. We ask every member of the parish who may see this copy to immediately subscribe for the MAGAZINE. Subscriptions can begin with any number, and every subscription will be acknowledged by postal card Anyone wishing the MAGAZINE mailed to their address can have it so sent by enclosing the postage (12 cents in addition to the subscription price per year of 50 cents.

We ought to have at least two hundred additional subscribers in the parish. As soon as the parishioners show their desire for a better magazine by giving us the means to print it, their wish will be gratified.

Will not each parishioner exert their influence in extending the circulation?

Directions for Communicants.

1. Come up to the altar as soon as the server moves; do not wait till the Priest turns round.

2. At the altar rail kneel as closely as you conveniently can. This is important when there is only one Priest administering. Sometimes he is forced to come once more to the rails than would have sufficed had the communicants knelt closer.

4. Hold the hands well raised to receive the Blessed Sacrament. Remember that you are kneeling on a lower level than the Priest is standing, and if you hold your hands low down he is forced to stoop very awkwardly to place the wafer in your hands.

4. Hold the head straight up when the priest communicates you from the chalice, otherwise he cannot see whether you had received the Precious Blood or not; take hold of the base of the chalice, and guide it to your lips. Do not wipe your mouth after receiving.

5. Do not suddenly bow or prostrate yourself after receiving in either kind. For there is danger of knocking the paten or chalice out of the Priest's hands.

6. Remain kneeling till the person next to you has received from the chalice, then go back to your place. If you get up while the person next you is being communicated there is danger of your shaking him or her, and so of upsetting the chalice.

Effort to Pay the Church Debt.

EARLY in December at a Vestry meeting, presided over by Father Maturin, a plan was adopted to pay off the debt of the Church, a debt contracted in the organization of the parish, long before the Fathers took charge, and when few of the present members were connected with it.

This plan was at once presented to the individual members of the congregation, and their voluntary assistance asked for, especial care being taken to prevent any from considering that there was any obligation either to join in it at all, or to contribute more than their means would permit.

We are now able to announce that this plan has been received by the congregation with the most hearty concurrence, and has elicited an expression of love for our Church, accompanied by a self denial on the part of very many of its members, that is beyond all praise. A maiden lady who supports herself by her needle, and whose means do not allow her to contribute, proposed to give up her comfortable single room and hire a smaller one in order to take part in an object she has so much at heart. Another who occupies a pew, but who has recently met with severe losses, offered to give up her pew, though continuing to pay the rent in order that the pew, which is in demand, might be rented to some one else, and thus enable her to contribute the amount. It is needless to say the offers of these noble women were declined. These are but two instances of the many touching evidences of devotion to our church which have been called forth, but space will not permit us to refer to more.

With rare exceptions, everyone has contributed to the full extent of their means. Already $23,000 have been subscribed, to which may be added $3,000, either promised, or which, from the well known dispositions of the parties, can be relied on, and there are still many to be called upon and heard from. Others again, who while they have expressed their entire sympathy with the undertaking, from unavoidable circumstances and entirely satisfactory reasons can not join us at present, have given us their assurance that they will do so later. God has blessed us most signally in thus inclining our hearts to such united action in this undertaking.

This is not a spasmodic effort. It is one supported by the whole congregation, and which has now progressed so far that we are able to assure you it will not be dropped until the entire sum is obtained, and our beloved church free from all debt. You will never again be called upon for this object and all the contributors may rest assured that their money has not simply been absorbed in an unsuccessful attempt, resulting in a mere reduction of the debt, to be taken up again, to their discouragement, at some future time, but has accomplished the object dear to their hearts. In our next issue we have little doubt we shall be able to announce that the whole $35,000 has been provided for.

S. Vincent's Guild.

This Guild composed of the acolytes of the church, made their corporate communion on Sunday, January 22d, S. Vincent's day, every member of the Guild being present except two, detained by sickness.

After the celebration they partook of a breakfast in the choir room, given them by the vestry as a token of their appreciation of their services.

During Advent season the members of the Guild subscribed and collected $135.56 towards a new altar and pulpit for S. Luke's Church, Whitewater, Wis., of which Rev. J. M. Francis, formerly an acolyte of this parish, is rector. We publish below the correspondence.

PHILAD'A, PA., Dec. 12th, 1887.

REVEREND AND DEAR SIR:—I send you today, per Adams Express, one hundred and thirty five dollars and fifty six cents, subscriptions raised for the altar and pulpit for S. Luke's Church, Whitewater, Wisconsin, by the members of S. Vincent's Guild, acolytes of S. Clement's Church.

It has given the boys great pleasure thus to assist in his work, one who was formerly an acolyte in this parish and who served at our altars.

Hoping you will remember, at the altar, the members of the Guild and those who contributed toward the altar and pulpit, and wishing you every blessing in your work, believe me,

Faithfully yours,

W. B. REED, Sec'y,
For S. Vincent's Guild.

The Rev. J. M. Francis,
S. Luke's Church, Whitewater Wis.

S. Luke's Rectory,

WHITEWATER, WIS., Dec. 18th, 1887.

DEAR SIR:—The express package containing one hundred and thirty five dollars and fifty six cents was received a couple of days ago. It is hard to find words with which to express my appreciation of the kindness of the members of S. Vincent's Guild in thus helping me in a difficult work. The appointments of our church are wretchedly poor and at present the parish is in no condition to do more than provide for the running expenses and the reduction of the debt. Please express my thanks and sense of appreciation to the members of S. Vincent's Guild and assure them that they and all who have helped in this work will be remembered at the altar on Christmas day. Praying God to bless you one and all, I am

Faithfully yours in Christ,

JOSEPH M. FRANCIS.

Mr. W. B. Reed,
Sec'y S. Vincent's Guild.

Dispensary Matters.

Since the third year commenced the work has been growing. In November 132 new cases paid 488 visits; in December 143 new cases paid 397 visits. These figures are larger than we have had in the corresponding months of former years. Probably most of our readers do not quite understand how they compare with other charities. They hear that last year we had 1350 patients, who made 3611 visits; and that seems like a large number, and so it is. It was slightly more than were treated in the "Medical Dispensaries" at the Pennsylvania Hospital, or at the Woman's Hospital, and more than in both Dispensaries at the Presbyterian Hospital, and about four-fifths as large as the "Medical Dispensary" of the University Hospital. Yet such a comparison is not absolutely accurate, for we include a few cases which in any of these institutions would be sent to a "Special Dispensary," but the number of these is not large. We have met a need which was greater than any one expected when we began.

And we are trying to provide more fully for it by "Special Dispensaries." The one for Diseases of the Throat, Nose and Ear, will begin on the first of March, to be held on Tuesdays and Fridays from 11 to 12; now Dr. Bliss is treating them on Tuesdays and Thursdays. The one for Diseases of Women is just opened on Wednesdays and Saturdays from 11 to 12, and is under the care of Dr. B. C. Hirst. Patients so seriously unwell as to be unable to quit their rooms, can now be visited by a District Physician, when some of their friends apply for them at the Dispensary whenever it is open.

Further, the property at the corner of Claymont and Cherry streets has been purchased for $12,000. We have agreed to pay at least $4000 by April 1st, when we will get possession. Of this we have paid now $200, and so need provide only $3800 by that time. But there will be something more, perhaps $500, to be spent in fitting it up for our purposes; it will cost us something to move and prepare our present building for rent; and we must provide for our current expenses during the year. We have on hand about enough to make our first payment and fit the building up; and we must look to those who care for the Charity to help us meet these other outlays.

The net proceeds of the Fair have risen, until now they are a little over $2400. Will all who have any more money that belongs to the Fair, please send it in as soon as possible?

The coming year is likely to be one of the hardest we shall have, and we need all the help we can get. Whatever else you can do, will you not say your prayers for the Charity?

O, Lord Jesus Christ, who didst lay Thy hand upon the sick and they did live, bless, we humbly beseech Thee, our effort to continue Thy work of healing: and grant that the Hospital may bring a blessing to those who help it and to those who are helped by it, for Thy mercy's sake, Whom with the Father and the Holy Ghost we worship as one God. Amen.

The Guild of the Iron Cross.

The Guild this year held its General Annual Festival on S. Paul's Day, January 25th, in Philadelphia. A choral celebration was held at S. Mark's Church at 11 A. M., when Merbeche's service was sung by the choir of S. Mark's, and some of the members of S. Clement's choir. The sermon on the Workman's Offering was preached by Bishop Starkey. The members of the Guild marched into church at 11 o'clock and joined heartily in the singing of the Church of England's Workingmen's hymn. The Bishop congratulated the members on their work, and said that he was anxious that the Guild should have as decided a church tone as possible.

The members of the Guild and their friends then came to S. Clement's Parish Building where a feast was provided. The Bishop said grace, and as many of the members had left New York without breakfast early in the morning, it was not surprising that all the dishes prepared for lunch and supper soon disappeared at one time. By the great kindness of some ladies of S. Mark's and of this Parish the tables were most plentifully supplied and refurnished with provisions. After the business meeting of the Guild in the building bought for S. Clement's Dispensary, the members returned to the Parish Building for supper, there were about 300 at lunch and about 400 at supper. At 7.30 the members fell into line, the procession was formed, and with three choirs and trumpets marched into church.

Bishop Thompson, of Mississippi, preached on Labor and Life.

The Late Rev. A. H. Mackonochie.

Dr. Butler (now Dean of Lincoln) is correctly reported to have once said that he "had done at least two good deeds in his life," when he was instrumental "in getting Church to S. Paul's and Mackonochie to S. Alban's." Just at present nearly every one seems ready to endorse the opinion that the latter was a "good deed;" and to eulogize the first Vicar of S. Alban's, however ready to blame him while alive.

Some of our readers may remember the flying visit he paid to S. Clement's six or eight years ago, and can recall the ascetic face with its look of strength. Others, no doubt, have seen him in London, where one had but to turn off Holborn up Brooke street, and in the midst of poverty, a stone's throw from one of the chief thoroughfares of the metropolis, one would find the fine, modern church which he made famous.

Mr. Mackonochie was a man of action rather than a man of thought. His name will never figure as an intellectual leader; but he knew how to translate the faith he believed into the lives of men and women. He had not the power which comes from face and manner, and the flow of words which make a great preacher. But he had character and strength, and was ready to work unstintedly. In two ways he will be remembered. One will be in the public history of the Church of England, which will tell of how he withstood every effort to tear from his people the ritual which was, in his hands, a help to them It will tell of the strength that enabled him to bear the strain of a ritual trial, which has broken physically or mentally nearly every priest who has been subjected to it.

But it will not tell of his own indifference to what the court might do. One evening, when his trial was going on, a visiting priest said, "How tired you must be after the strain of court all day?" and had for reply, O, to be sure, to-day was the day for it. I had nearly forgotten it. No. I have not been in court at all. I seldom go." When the sentence was given that he should be suspended for a time, he would pack his satchel and take the opportunity to get his vacation. And when the suspension was ended he would come back and do just as he did before. Year after year did Martin vs. Mackonochie drag its weary length along in some form or other, until some had come to regard it as a matter of course. Then came the thunderclap—"Mackonochie is going to resign S. Alban's!" In vain did some of his friends protest. The dying Archbishop had asked it "for peace's sake," and he would do for his request what all the power of the courts could never drive him into. His resolution was taken before there was any talk of his going to S. Peter's, London Docks. Afterwards his friends conceived the plan which the Dean and Chapter of S. Paul's, the Bishop of London, and the Trustees of S. Peter's, carried out. The Vicarage of S. Alban's was offered to and accepted by the then Vicar of S. Peter's, and Mr. Mackonochie was elected Vicar of S. Peter's, London Docks. Out of the matter Mackonochie's character came even more honorable than before. "For conscience's sake" he could not yield the point at issue in the trial; "for peace's sake" he would grant the old man's dying wish and resign. His Archbishop should have for asking it, what the secular power could never get.

Some call his death "sad," but his life would have been even more so. With mental powers failing fast, and with memory gone, his work was done, and it would have been sad to have him live on.

And that is what history can say; but there is another Mackonochie, "unknown to history." The man who brought the great thoughts of the faith he held into the lives of people. The work which he guided was a work which had power among the poor people of Baldwin's Gardens; but that was only half of it. At one hour the church was full of the poor who lived in the district, at another the wealthy aristocratic dweller at the West End of London was there, and the church did its double work. Only when the lives of those who worship in S. Alban's become known to all will the real Mackonochie be known, the priest whose power went far and wide.

When they brought the dead priest from his resting-place in the snow to the church he loved so well, even busy money-making London paused a moment to honor the strong man who had used his power so consistently and so long in the service of his Master. May he rest in peace.

Diocesan Notes.

Rev. H. O. Riddel, formerly assistant in S. Timothy Church, Roxboro, has accepted the position of assistant in Trinity Chapel, New York, and entered upon its duties.

Rev. Robert F. Innes has resigned his position as assistant at S. Mary's, Philadelphia, and is now officiating at S. James' Church, Hestonville.

Rev. Leverett Bradley, of Andover, Mass., has been elected Rector of S. Luke's, and will take charge some time during Lent.

Rev. Daniel S. Miller, D. D., late President of the Northwest Convocation, died at his residence, Saturday, January 14th, and was buried from S. James' Church, Wednesday, January 18th. Dr. Miller organized and was first Rector of S. Judes', and afterwards Rector of S. Mark's, Frankford.

THE SUIT of the Guild of S. Ambrose Church to obtain the possession of the Parish Building has been decided against the Guild, and in favor of the church.

THE TRUSTEES of the Diocese have received from the heirs of the late John S. Newbold $20,000 for the endowment of the Church of our Saviour, Jenkintown.

THE ADVENT Sunday-school offerings for the endowment of a cot in the Good Samaritan Hospital, Portland, Oregon, amounted to about $700 from thirty Sunday schools

THE PARISHES of S. Ambrose and The Covenant have united, and will build a church at Twenty-seventh street and Girard avenue. The church of the Covenant will contribute the name, lot, organ and furniture, and S. Ambrose will contribute proceeds of lot at Twenty-eighth and Girard avenue. The Rev. J. J. Joyce Moore, Rector of S. Ambrose, will be the Rector of the united parishes.

REV. FATHER OSBORNE will preach the seventh sermon in the special course of sermons at S. Mary's Church, West Philadelphia, on Quinquagessima Sunday evening, February 12th, at 8 o'clock.

"THE EVANGELICAL Prayer Meeting will meet every Monday at the Church of the Holy Trinity" We are glad to have any church open for prayer, even one day in the week. Probably it would not be considered "Evangelical" to have it open for daily, morning and evening prayer.

"THE QUIET DAY for Women" will take place February 29th, at S. Stephen's Church, and it will be conducted by the Bishop of the Diocese. We hope many from our parish will attend.

THE ANNUAL Conference of the Church Women of the Diocese will be held in the Lecture Room of Holy Trinity Church, Thursday, March 1st.

General Notes.

A SPECIAL Convention of the Diocese of Ohio has been called to meet in Trinity Church, Cleveland, Wednesday, March 14th, to elect an Assistant Bishop.

THE CHURCH BUILDING Fund now amounts to over $121,000, an increase of $52,000 over 1886. The money is loaned, not given, to aid poor parishes in erecting church buildings. Last year some $8,000 previously loaned was repaid and again loaned to poor churches

THE CONSECRATION of Rev. Abiel Leonard, D. D., Bishop of the Missionary Jurisdiction of Utah and Nevada, took place at Christ Church, St. Louis, on the Feast of the Conversion of S. Paul. The Bishop of Kansas was consecrator, and the Bishop of Western Texas was the preacher.

DR. TOLMAN WHEELER, of Chicago, Ill., who has given away a fortune for charity during his long life-time, has added to his donations a four-story block at the southeast corner of South Water and Clark streets, valued at $150,000, which he has given to the Western Chicago Theological Seminary.

THE COWLEY S. JOHN MAGAZINE for December has a thoughtful and instructive, as well as interesting, article in answer to the objections so often made against Foreign Missions on account of what is termed their want of success. We can only give the substance of the article. The duty of Missions is in no way affected by success or failure. Our Lord Jesus Christ has left the command. It is for us to obey. There are sins enough troubling the whole condition of Christendom to make us readily believe that God withholds success as a punishment for our sins. We must wonder that Christianity makes such progress in spite of Christians than that its growth is retarded by our manifold crying iniquities. Quickness of progress is no test of truth. Successful proselytism may be rather an indication of falsehood than evidence of truth. With fallen man, falsehood, with an admixture of truth, appeals more readily to the natural man because the full truth of Christ is Divine, and therefore repugnant to man's natural reason. An heretical form of religion has advantages over the true, because heresies have generally been the upgrowth of misguided religious convictions. Men do not go wrong for the sake of going wrong, but they are led astray by some warped ideas of truth. In old times the Arian Missions were so successful that it was almost one man against the world in contending for the Catholic faith. False systems will sometimes teach and affect the masses more readily than the ways of the Church, but they do not raise them up to God.

The real victory of Divine Truth will always be what it was on Calvary, victory by rejection. It wins its way by the opposition it excites, and shows itself Divine because man's rejection does not cause its final overthrow. The great characteristic of the Church is not its immunity from corruption, but its power of resurrection. No false religion can reassert itself as a moral power. Not even any Christian sect can recover itself from a state of decay. The Church alone, as the Body of Christ, has within herself this unquenched spirit of life which is ever ready to rise up again and cope with the difficulties of a new position.

Mahommedanism in its original fervor and purity accomplished great things, but in its wider extension, its religious character rapidly decayed. Its prayers do not involve any loftiness of moral character. They are rather a confession of God's separation from man. The promised paradise is one which keeps man short of God. The work to be done and the reward to be won are both of them capable of being estimated by man, and this develops the pride of human nature, because man is never to be raised out of himself. Regularity of formal devotion is no real gauge of spiritual elevation. These devotions are the uniform of his pride. The devotions of the Christian Church, on the contrary, are based upon self-humiliation and the annihilation of natural pride. The penitent is too apt to be ashamed of confessing his Saviour by outward acts, which involve the shame of acknowledging his own incapacity.

The wonder is that Mahommedanism has not more completely triumphed in India. If its truth had equalled its self-assertion it must have triumphed. Hinduism has largely impregnated it with its own ideas and customs. No one expects that Islam will spread itself so as to become the faith of India.

How is it with Christianity? Whatever the taunts as to the slowness of its progress in India, the general feeling is expressed in the concentrated words of Keshub Chunder Sen, that India must belong to Christ. The Mahommedans forced themselves upon the natives as conquerors. Christians came as strangers. The Government, professedly Christian, supported all the abominations of Hindu idolatry, Hindu temples and sacrifices, and prohibited Missionary settlements in its borders. In 1814, Christianity extorted permission to conduct missionary work.

Though weak in numbers, Christianity in India is evidently a living religion among the dead and dying. Brahmoism is a rebellious child of Christianity. Though deadly hostile to the Christian Church which originated them, and detached them from the religion of their forefathers, they are as masses of rock detached by blasting from the original mountains—the power by which they were detached is the Christian principle.

Why has the progress of Christianity been so slow? First and foremost is its diluted character. The Mahommedan has a false religion, but is true to it. The Christian has a true religion, but is false to it. When we know what converts have to suffer as the price of their embracing Christianity, we must confess that they exhibit a faith vastly superior to those of Christian countries.

The Mahommedan looks with disgust upon the European Christian, because his life is not true to his profession, while the Mahommedan, though his religion does not and cannot elevate him, it does supply him with a moral code to which he feels bound. The collective character of the professedly Christian community in a heathen country has a terribly deterrent effect. For one missionary in behalf of Christ there are hundreds of missionaries against Christ. True missionary work is the radiating influence of the whole Christian community. A mission priest is really powerful in proportion to the corporate life of the community with which he is associated. The living Church in every heathen country ought to exert a corporate influence, not so much by aggressive as by attractive spiritual life. In the New Testament we find but few traces of what would now-a-days be called missionary zeal. There was something much more effective. There was spiritual fervor. They lived for God because they lived to God. If we will live to God, God will bring people to us. It may be that some persecution is at hand in India. It may be that that persecution will be accompanied by an expulsion of all Europeans from its shore. We may be expelled, but Christ will triumph. If we are true to Him, His triumph will be our glory. If we are false to Him, He will be true to Himself, and we must pay the penalty.

The Prodigal Son.

Mr. Arthur S. Sullivan notes the remarkable fact that this parable had not been chosen as the text of a musical composition until his own Cantata was written; and this, notwithstanding the pathos of the story, its thoroughly Christian lesson, and the contrast of the characters represented. In setting the story to music, the shortness of the narrative called for filling out from other Scriptures, though as sparingly as possible. In doing so the composer, deliberately departed from the usual conception of the prodigal, as one naturally brutish and depraved. This appeared to be a view taken with apparently little knowledge of the youthful impulses of a buoyant stripling tired of the monotony and narrow limits of his father's farm.

Sullivan rather conceived of such a youth going forth alike, without experience, or wicked longing, into those follies and sins which finally wrung from him the confession, "No more worthy to be called thy son." The work opens with a choral declaration of pity for repentant sinners, and then straightway raises the prodigals clamor for his portion. The father seeks to have his son honor the Lord with his substance, but the young man hastily betakes himself far from such a voice, until the chorus bursts out, "Let us eat and drink." Then a woman's voice counsels against the world and the lust thereof, until the prodigal has reached that manly stage of reflection and contrition which sends him back a penitent sinner; the chorus declaring the joy in the presence of the angels of God over one repentant. Thus is ushered in the duet where the prodigal confesses, whilst his father exclaims again and again, "My sin is yet alive, blessed be God who hath heard my prayer, and hath not turned His mercy from me." The chorus here takes up the sentiment, "O that men would praise the Lord," and the tenor and quartette urge the nearness of the Lord, until the final chorus of praise "Thou, Lord, art our Father."

This oratorio or cantata has recently been sung in part in S. James' Church, N. Y., but except once in Boston, has never been fully presented in America by a large chorus with orchestra and organ. On account of its fitness and relief after the majestic strains of Beethoven's Mass in C, and also its novelty, the Prodigal Son will be sung as the second part of the Cecilian Concert, on Thursday evening in Easter week, at the Academy of Music. The sale of seats is now occurring, and new subscriptions for this concert only are being received at the Rehearsals, on Tuesday evenings, N. E. corner Eighteenth and Chestnut streets.

Application for boys to the Choir should be made to the Rector or Choir-Master.

The pews in this Church are rented. Strangers and others not renting sittings, will be assigned places by the Ushers. Information in regard to the renting of pews may be had of the Accounting Warden, or of the Ushers.

Strangers and persons wishing to be visited are requested to leave their names and addresses in the letter-box on the vestry door, or at the Clergy House. The Clergy are always glad to visit those who desire it.

This MAGAZINE is published monthly through Mr. Samuel Williams, 201 S. Thirtieth St., Philadelphia. Subscriptions, exchanges and communications may be sent to this address. Subscriptions may commence with any number.

Parish Notes.

The Retreat for the Iron Cross will be held on Passion Sunday, March 18th, those who wish to take part in it are requested to communicate with F. Field.

The Retreat for S. Mary's Guild will be held on Thursday in Passion Week, March 22d, if any besides the members and Associates wish to attend they will please speak to the Sisters.

Retreat for the Guild of S. John—open to any men who desire to take part in it—on Palm Sunday, those who wish to attend will please give their names to A. W. Kilgore, Esq., 2033 Locust st., or to any of the clergy.

The Bishop of the Diocese will confirm in this church on Friday evening, March 16th, at 8 o'clock.

The music at the 11 o'clock service on Easter Day will be Beethoven's Mass in C.

It is earnestly hoped that every communicant in the parish will make their Communion on Easter Day, the number of communicants on that day has hitherto fallen considerably short of the number on the Parish Register. On that Festival every one ought, if possible, to communicate in his own parish church, on other Sundays it is often necessary for many to go to the church nearest them for their Communions, but at Easter all ought to communicate at the Altar of their own parish church.

A card containing the following will be delivered to each communicant in the parish before Holy Week, with the request that it be returned to the clergy if possible by Palm Sunday. The cards can be either handed to any of the clergy or put in the letter box in the Vestibule.

Easter Notice to Communicants.

FOR the benefit of those unable to attend the rendering of Gaul's Passion Music on Friday evening February 24th, we insert the following account from the Philadelphia Times:

AN INTERESTING AND IMPRESSIVE SERVICE OF SONG AT ST. CLEMENT'S.

The Passion Service by Alfred R. Gaul was sung at St. Clement's Church last evening in the presence of a congregation that crowded the large building. Mr. Gaul is one of the ablest of the younger English composers and this music shows not only musical invention and skill but an earnest and reverent spirit. He has treated the story of the Passion in six scenes, using the solo narrative, the chorus and the interspersed hymns very much as the old German composers did, the congregation taking part in the hymns, which serve to punctuate the service. It is not to Mr. Gaul's discredit that his treatment, especially of the scenes on Calvary, recalls Gounod's "Redemption," any more than that other parts of his music are reminiscent of Mendelssohn's "St. Paul." A composer of to-day could not and should not escape these great models. The work is for the most part simple and direct, the solos expressive and the choruses often of real dramatic power. Unlike much modern music, it is written to be sung, while the elaborate organ accompaniment, which Mr. Baker played very skilfully, is full of strong and well-arranged ideas. The music was exceedingly well executed, the strong choir of boys and men in the chancel being reinforced by an additional choir of ladies, who occupied the front pews. Mr. Gordon Thomas sang the leading bass part admirably, with genuine power and a clear musical delivery that was most impressive. The two boy soloists acquitted themselves remarkably well, and the tenor part, which is largely recitative, but contains some lovely passages, was exquisitely sung by Mr. Auty, with that smooth, even, finished style that distinguishes him as single among church singers. The music occupied about two hours, and the hearty congregational singing of the hymns which closed each of the six parts together with the prayers and the benediction by the rector at the close, gave it the character of a religious service.

This service will be repeated, with short addresses, on Maundy Thursday evening, March 29th, at 8 o'clock.

The Church Debt.

In our last number we informed our readers of what had been accomplished, up to the time of going to press, in the undertaking to pay off our church debt. The work has since progressed with the same zeal and enthusiasm which has attended it from its first presentation to the congregation. Many then thought we were too sanguine in our expectations, and doubted the possibility of carrying out so large an undertaking to a successful termination, but those more familiar with the heart-beating of our widely scattered congregation and who did not measure their opinion by the wealth, or rather lack of wealth, of the people, and had the privilege of knowing them personally, knew how much could be accomplished by the hearty co-operation of each member, actuated with the feeling that it was a privilege to help the Church which has been such a help and comfort to them.

We now have the pleasure to inform you that the Fund for the Extinguishment of the Church Debt has reached the sum of $31,000, and that a large part of the few thousand dollars still required to complete the full amount ($35,000) has been promised. We had hoped it would have been in our power to announce in this issue that all was secured; many of these promises come from such devoted friends of the Church, that we are sure the delay in receiving their contributions has been unavoidable, and that before the next number of the Magazine is published, and in time for our Easter celebrations, S. Clement's debt will be all provided for.

Should any of our people, who did not join us at first, now feel they could reconsider their decision, in view of our wonderful success and the fact that they will never have such a strain put upon them again, their help would come at a most opportune moment, when we are finding the comparatively small remaining sum so hard to raise. It would also be a great assistance, if others, who have the matter in contemplation, would signify their decision as early as possible.

Diocesan Notes.

REV. FREDERICK PALMER, Rector of the Church of Our Saviour, Jenkintown, has accepted the rectorship of Christ Church, Andover, Mass., and will take charge of the Parish on Low Sunday.

REV. J. R. MOSES has received, and we understand, accepted a call to the rectorship of St. Jude's.

REV. EDGAR COPE, in charge of St. Simeon's Mission, reports as the result of the first year, 170 communicants, 230 scholars in the Sunday school and a vested choir of 40. The subscription to build a memorial church to the late Bishop, for this mission is progressing favorably.

REV. DR. WATSON has been elected "President" of the Northwest Convocation in place of the late Rev. Dr. Miller.

MR. A. HARROLD MILLER has been recommended by the Standing Committee to be received as a candidate for Holy Orders.

A MISSION was recently held at the Church of the Holy Trinity, West Chester, conducted by Rev. J. E. Johnson.

A MISSION will be held at Grace Church, Twelfth and Cherry streets, March 18th to 22d, to be conducted by the Rector, the Rev. Dr. Stone.

BISHOP HOWE, of Central Pennsylvania, preached a sermon commemorative of the late Bishop Stevens, at the Church of the Holy Trinity, on Sexagesima Sunday.

THE SECOND LECTURE before the Central Organization of Church Guild was delivered at St. Mary's Church, West Philadelphia, Tuesday evening, February 21st, by Rev. Wm. S. Rainsford, D. D., of New York, on "The Church of the Future," and the third lecture on "The Best Basis of Morality," at S. Stephen's Church, Thursday evening, March 1st, by Rev. Father Maturin.

A MEETING of persons interested in Nashotah Seminary was held at S. Mark's Church, Tuesday evening, and an organization effected with the design of promoting its interests.

EPISCOPAL HOSPITAL. The annual report shows receipts of $97,368.80, of which $13,018.10 were contributions from the different churches in the city. The expenditures exceeded the receipts so that there was a deficit of $6,750, which was taken from the general fund. The daily average of free patients during the year was 165—1,809 were admitted during the year. The Dispensary patients numbered 20,033, and 59,329 prescriptions were furnished gratuitously.

THE AMERICAN CHURCH BUILDING FUND COMMISSION held a meeting at the Church of the Epiphany on Ash Wednesday evening, which was addressed by Bishops Starkey and Talbot, Judge Prince, W. G. Low, Esq., and others.

The Bishop and Members of the Commission of this Diocese have issued a circular letter, from which we glean the following particulars:

Its object is to raise one million of dollars as a permanent fund to aid in building churches in places where needed and where without such aid they probably could not be erected. It is proposed to loan for this purpose small sums on moderate interest to be secured by mortgage on the property. These loans are to be repaid in annual instalments. In some needy cases donations of money arising from the interest of the permanent fund may be made.

The Commission is composed of the appointees of the Presiding Bishop consisting of twenty members at large and two Commissioners to act for each Diocese or Jurisdiction respectively. In addition thereto an auxiliary committee appointed by each Bishop in the Diocese of which he is the head, to co-operate with the appointees of the Presiding Bishop. In this Diocese the Bishop has appointed five clergymen and five laymen.

Already, though only a small portion of the sum has been raised, it has made over one hundred and fifty loans in thirty-nine Dioceses and Jurisdictions. Many of these have been repaid and the annual instalments of others have been promptly made. The Commission will discourage the building of churches where there is little prospect of self-support and refuse loans to those who have not proved by their works that the loans would be of lasting benefit to them.

The quota of this Diocese for the fund is $84,300. About $10,000 have already been paid in.

Rev. Drs. Nicholson and Jefferis are the clerical members of the Board of Trustees residing in Philadelphia.

General Notes.

THE DIOCESE OF SOUTHERN OHIO will probably elect an Assistant Bishop at its next Convention. The continued ill health of Bishop Jagger, with little prospects of his permanent recovery, has led him, acting under the advice of the Presiding Bishop, to propose to resign his entire salary, and upon the election and consecration of an Assistant Bishop to transfer to him the entire jurisdiction of the Diocese.

THE EFFORT to endow the Bishopric of Indiana is meeting with encouraging success. Over one half of the proposed $60,000 has already been subscribed, and the present outlook is that the whole amount will soon be raised.

THE SYNOD OF NOVA SCOTIA has unanimously elected Rev. Frederick Courtney, D D., Rector of S. Paul's Church, Boston, to the Bishopric of that Province, and he has accepted. Dr. Courtney is a native of England, and about fifty years of age.

RACINE COLLEGE, Wis., met with a severe loss in the destruction by fire of its gymnasium and laboratory. The loss is estimated at about $25,000, with only $6,000 insurance. The students appeal to all churchmen for help, as a large portion of the college work is necessarily suspended.

REV. CABRAITH B. PERRY, formerly Assistant at Mount Calvary Church, Baltimore, and Priest in charge of the Chapel of S. Mary the Virgin, has entered upon his duties as Rector of the House of Prayer, Newark.

THE LATE MR. R. E. BUTTERWORTH, warden of St. Mark's Church, Grand Rapids, gave property and left by will legacies amounting to $41,600 for St. Mark's Home and Hospital in that city.

BUCKNER COLLEGE, the Diocesan School of Arkansas, is located at Witcherville, Sebastian county. For many years the diocese has needed a good Church school, but the means were not at hand to establish it. The present property, comprising seventeen acres and valued at fourteen thousand dollars, came into the hands of the Church for a nominal sum. The building has been enlarged and fitted for its purpose at an expense of some two thousand dollars. There are now forty pupils in attendance, and it is self-supporting from the start. It is expected that this school will become a missionary centre for Western Arkansas of no less importance than the Cathedral in the Eastern part of the State, and it should be liberally sustained by the prayers, patronage and gifts of Church people.

S. PHILIP'S MISSION for colored people was started at Little Rock, Arkansas, about two years ago by the indefatigable wife of Bishop Pierce. Last summer certain lots of land were sold to the Bishop and a beautiful little church erected thereon, which was opened for worship the second Sunday after Epiphany. The cost of the church was borne entirely by the Bishop's family. The land was obrained on long time and is not yet paid for. It is hoped that the Church at large, appreciating the work of those who help themselves, will furnish the money for the land. The Diocese of Arkansas says, "The Church Commission for work among the colored people, of which we read so much in the papers, has never contributed a cent to this or any other work among the people of Arkansas."

BISHOP PIERCE since his return from the East has been very ill with an attack of pneumonia. His many friends will be glad to learn of his complete recovery.

BISHOP LITTLEJOHN addressed the Berkeley Divinity School recently. "His address was particularly adapted to the times, and he struck a warning note both for the clergy and those about to take orders. His theme, the morale of the clergy, was one that in these days has had particular attention drawn to it by the secular world and press. The right reverend preacher deprecated most strongly the spirit of conformity to the fashions of this world by many of the clergy, who would, if possible, wipe out every characteristic that distinguishes cleric from layman. He feared that the clergy of the present day may, if they do not take heed to their ways, leave to posterity as reprehensible a reputation as the armorclad prelates of the middle ages and the fox-hunting parsons of the last century. He deplored the lack in these days of the heroic spirit, self-denial, self-sacrifice, which animated the Christian preachers and teachers of the early days of Christianity.

THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY has called the Pan-Anglican Synod to meet at Lambeth, in July next. It will assemble July 3d, and after four days session will take a recess until Monday, July 23d, to afford the various committees opportunity for deliberation, and will conclude its sessions July 27th.

The following are the subjects definitely settled for discussion:

First.—The Church's practical work in relation to intemperance, purity, care of emigrants and socialism.

Second.—Definite teaching of the faith to various classes and the means thereto.

Third.—The Anglican Communion in relation to the Eastern Churches, to the Scandinavian and other Reformed Churches, to the Old Catholics and others.

Fourth.—Polygamy of heathen converts; divorce.

Fifth.—Authoritative standards of doctrine and worship.

Sixth.—Mutual relations of dioceses and branches of the Anglican Communion.

Missions.

We publish the following extracts from letters published in the Cowley S. John Magazine.

FATHER PULLER writes from the CAPETOWN MISSION under date of December 28th:

"Our Kaffir Baptisms came off very happily on Christmas Eve. The eight catechumens made their confessions very thoroughly and earnestly in the afternoon, and then in the evening, in the course of the first evensong of the Christmas festival, they were baptized by immersion, with great solemnity. As each one comes up out of the water, he goes into a temporary vestry, which is curtained off, and dries himself and changes his clothes; and it is always a most touchingly beautiful sight to see them come out in single file, clothed in clean white suits, and looking most devout, and yet with a most simple and unaffected kind of devotion. In every sense they strike one as being 'clothed and in their right mind.' Of course one always looks at them with anxiety, because 'many are called, but few are chosen,' and the temptations which surround them are terrible; I hope that you will pray for their perseverence

"Christmas passed off very well. I celebrated at midnight at the Home, and we three were responsible for eleven other services during the day. After evensong Father Shepperd and I went up to Zonnebloem to have our Christmas supper with Canon Peters.

"This week there is a succession of treats. On Monday we kept high festival for the Kaffirs. We had a Christmas tree, and prizes. I suppose that there were about eighty there. They sang Kaffir hymns at intervals, and the Christmas Gospel was read in English by one of the men, and in Kaffir by another. They all enjoyed themselves immensely, in their own wonderfully quiet and gentlemanly way.

"Yesterday (Tuesday) was devoted to S. Philip's School. My arm quite ached after giving prizes and presents to 400 children. Sister Elfrida has done wonders in taming and subduing into order her immense family. Afterwards there was cake and ginger beer, Christmas tree, and magic lantern.

"This evening S. Michael's will have its treat. To-morrow the Refuge will take its turn; and on Friday the Sisters are going to entertain a few Kaffir women, whom we are very anxious to get hold of."

FATHER BLACK, of the Indian Mission, writes from Karegaon, S. Stephen's Day:

"The Mission at Mazagon, which lasted nine days, closed with such a nice service—a thanksgiving—which was very bright, and at the close of which we gave away a little memorial to every member of the congregation. We had full Church every night. Among the other experiences of the Mission a Christian lady, European, who is married to a Mahomedan, came to be prepared for Communion. The children seemed to me to form so important a portion of the parish that I divided them into a large number of classes and had five little services for the different bodies of them each day. Such a course adds much to the work, but I am more and more convinced of its importance. The Mazagon Schools are doing excellent work. The Dymonds have made quite a new thing of the work among the boys, and the Sisters' Schools are worthy of the very highest praise.

"Yesterday we had a most interesting day, and in the evening I preached to an excellent congregation, in Marathi, of course.

"It is truly delightful to see how things have grown here. I remember this village six years ago. Then there was no church here and only a small number of Christians. Now there is a tiny church, well appointed—a nice altar, lights, vestments, and a choir, and we had thirty-one communicants yesterday morning and a congregation of nearly 150. The hymns were very well sung, and some of them are very good. Marathi lends itself to devotion.

"It is beautiful bright warm weather, without a cloud in the sky, and our procession as it passed to church in moonlight so bright that one could easily read small print, looked wonderfully picturesque.

"Our surroundings are very unlike anything at home of course, and our weather must indeed be unlike yours. We had a grand feast in the afternoon, about 200 people sitting in rows on the ground in the church compound. All is thoroughly rustic, and there was an admixture of goats and cows, ponies and fowls at yesterday's dinner, which is the usual thing here but elsewhere would be very surprising.

"This part of the Ahmednagar Mission contains about 2,500 Christians in 20 villages within a radius of 10 miles. In the whole district there are about 4,500 Christian people."

FATHER SHEPPARD writes from Mossel Bay, Cape Colony:

"I am staying here with Mr. Taylor, the first missionary to the people of Tristan d'Acunha. His parish he tells me contains 2000 square miles. Here, in this little seaside town of 1500 inhabitants, he has two churches: one chiefly for the white English congregation, and a Missionary Church for the colored people, where the services are frequently in Dutch. I was a good deal astonished during the synod at a financial statement made by Mr. Taylor, with regard to money raised in the parish. The congregation of the Parish Church would be at the outside 300. The times are exceedingly bad, yet last year the white congregation raised £320 and the mission congregation £99. In 1884, when trade was not so depressed as at present, the two congregations raised £540. I think this might well excite a sense not only of astonishment but of shame among the members of other congregations if they heard of it.

Rev. Father Maturin will delive a lecture in the Sunday-school Room, Tuesday evening, April 17th, at eight o'clock, descriptive of his travels in the Holy Land. Tickets, 50 cents each, may be had of the clergy, or in the corridor of the church.

The jugs for the Hospital and Dispensary which have been put out to collect Lenten offerings should be sent in to Father Convers after Easter.

The Guild of the Holy Cross propose having an afternoon tea in the new Hospital Building, corner Cherry and Claymont streets, on Tuesday, April 10th, from 3 to 9 P. M., for the benefit of the Hospital. No admission will be charged.

Father Maturin preached a course of six sermons on the Christian Conflict in Trinity Church, New York, in Passion Week, at 12 o'clock noon.

The next number of the Magazine will contain the annual reports of the Parish and its work for the past year. Persons desiring extra copies will please give notice so that they can be printed. Heretofore, more copies have been called for than could be supplied.

The fiscal year, by a new by law, ends March 25th, so that the usual Easter offering will not be included in the report. We are gratified to say that the report is very encouraging. There is no floating debt, and a small balance on hand so that we will start the new year with encouraging prospects.

Low Sunday, we regret to say, is Mr. Baker's last day with us as Choir Master and Organist. We had hoped that his stay amongst us might have been longer. There can be but one opinion of his valuable work with the Choir while in charge of it, and his great talent as an organist is beyond praise. We shall wish him Godspeed wherever his lot may be cast in the future.

Mr. James Benton Tipton, the new organist and choir master, is a native of England, and came to this country about six years ago. While in England he received a thorough musical training under Dr. Stainer, the well-known composer of St. Paul's Cathedral, London, and Dr. Parrot, the great master of Gregorians, of the Chapel Royal, Windsor. Subsequently, Mr. Tipton served as organist at St. Barnabas, Oxford, and St. Augustine, Kilburn. After filling an engagement at Denver, Mr. Tipton came to the Epiphany, Washington City, of which the then Rev Dr. Paret was the pastor. Leaving the Epiphany he came to St. Luke's, in Baltimore, where he has been since November, 1885.

The new choir master, we hope, will be with us by the middle of May. In the meantime the choir will be under the directionof Mr. Auty.

S. Vincent's Guild duly appreciate the following letter sent them by the Secretary of the Vestery.

Philadelphia, March 10, 1888.

It gives me pleasure to inform you that at a Vestry meeting held on the 9th instant, it was resolved, that the thanks of the Vestry be tendered the Acolytes for their faithful services; and also that the Vestry desire to express their appreciation of the efficiency and zeal with which the Acolytes have discharged their duties.

Very truly yours,
J. C. BLAND.
Secretary of the Vestry of
S. Clement's Church.

Dispensary Notes.

In a few days it is expected that the necessary legal documents will have been signed, and the first payment made by which the property on the corner of Cherry and Claymont streets will have been transferred to us. The legal investigations into the title, etc., are now nearly finished.

The next step will be to alter it for our use. This will involve a complete rearrangement of the ground floor, giving a large hall in which the patients are to wait to see the physicians, the drug store, and three consultation rooms. The only change in the upper story will be the making of two rooms for the janitor's use. The contract for these changes has been let to George F. Payne & Co., who bind themselves to finish them "on or before May 1st." As soon as the work is done we can have our formal "opening." Then we can transfer the Dispensary from its present limited quarters on Friedlander street to our own building.

The Treasurer reports on hand money enough to make our first payment and pay for the alterations, but not enough to also pay for the current expenses of the next six months. To meet these we must look to what will be given us in future, to pledges made but not yet redeemed, to the Lenten Jugs, and to the sale which the Holy Cross Guild expect to have on April 10th.

As there was much sickness in February, the work at the dispensary was unusually heavy. There seems to be less this month.

Our friends must remember, however, that we have only made our first payment on the property, and until we can largely reduce the mortgage we shall be unable to put in the beds and open the Hospital. Now we must all say our prayers for this end.

The house now occupied for the Dispensary, 110 Friedlander street, is for rent. Possession can be given about the middle of May. For particulars apply to Father Convers.

THE OHIO CONVENTION.—We call the attention of our readers to the proceedings of the Convention called by the Bishop of Ohio to elect an Assistant Bishop. Never in the history of the Church in this country, has there been such an attempt to dictate the future policy of any diocese by the head thereof. Bishop Bedell charged the majority of the clergy (more than two-thirds of whom voted against the Bishop's candidate) with attempting to change the policy which he had deemed wisest, and said that there must be entire concord in every Church principle between the Bishop and his Assistant; and he threatened to withdraw his request for an Assistant unless they would elect some one satisfactory to him.

The election of Assistant Bishops is all wrong and is an Americanism which should be rooted out of the Church or at any rate essentially modified. By our canons the Assistant Bishop is the Bishop of the Diocese after the death of the Bishop. By Bishop Bedell's argument every Bishop who is too old or infirm to properly discharge his duties can demand an assistant who is in "entire accord in every Church principle" with him and thus perpetuate his peculiar ideas though the Diocese do not accept them. If he must have assistants they should represent the churchmanship of the Diocese and not of the individual Bishop. They should be elected with the view of their becoming the Bishop of the Diocese. We are not acquainted with the peculiarities of the canon law of Ohio but we cannot understand why it only takes a majority of the clergy actually voting to elect on their part, while it is necessary to have a majority of the whole number of accredited delegates to confirm the nomination of the clergy. In other words, why only 25 out of 53 clergy are necessary to elect if four do not vote, while it requires 78 out of 122 voting lay delegates to confirm; nor, can we see, if the minority report of the Committee on Credentials was correct, upon what principle of right or justice the Bishop declared the nomination rejected because some delegates voted "aye" and "accepted," instead of "To receive." We know of no law outside of Ohio which deprives a clergyman from voting for whom he will. The Bishop himself seemed to be in some doubt and made a decision limiting them to the three names presented by the Committee and then withdrew the ruling, but when a majority of the Convention voted against the three names proposed the Bishop again changed his ruling in the remarkable language quoted in the account of the proceedings.

Rev. Mr. Nichols, in our opinion, was fairly and legally elected Assistant Bishop of Ohio, and his treatment was the height of injustice, and we are surprised that any Bishop should have allowed his personal preferences and party feeling to have so biassed his judgment as to lend himself to defeating the will of the Diocese by acts which would reflect no credit on a political caucus.

After all was over, and Dr. Satterlee was elected, the Bishop made a most feeling and touching apology for his actions, which should be accepted by all on account of his age and the fact of his weak and nervous condition after a long and dangerous illness. The Bishop personally can be forgiven, but as a warning for the future it is better not to cover up what was really a scandal to the Church. If it shall result in repealing or modifying the canon for the election of Assistant Bishops, the Convention of Ohio will have accomplished a good result and one not anticipated.

THE AMERICAN CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY. This Society has issued an address stating its objects and appealing for support because under the new Missionary Canon of the last General Convention the Bishops of the Missionary Jurisdictions have the appointment of their own missionaries and disbursement of funds appropriated to their jurisdiction. It assures the contributors that "every missionary must be approved by the Executive Committee as faithful and true to the Protestant and historic character of our Church. The statement is signed by Rev. Drs. Dyer, Goodwin and Phillips Brooks. This is sufficient evidence of the kind of Protestant (with a big P) character that would be required. No wonder they use a small h when naming the "historic character."

Diocesan Notes.

REV. FLETCHER CLARK has resigned the charge of S. Luke's, Chadds Ford.

REV. C. N. F. JEFFERY has become assistant to the Rector of S. Timothy's Church, Roxboro.

THE FOURTH lecture before the Central Organization of Church Guilds was delivered by Rev. James S. Stone, D. D., Rector of Grace Church, Philadelphia, at S. Mark's Church, March 13th, on "Christian Agnoticism."

MR. CHARLES A. HENSIL has applied to the Standing Committee to be received as a candidate for Holy Orders.

REV. HOWARD T. WIDDEMER, Rector of the Church of the Beloved Disciple has been presented for trial in the Ecclesiastical Court of the Diocese on charge of second marriage following divorce on other than Scriptural grounds. The court is summoned to meet Thursday morning, April 5th, at 11 o'clock, in the Guild room of the Church of the Epiphany.

A NEW CHURCH, costing about $50,000, is to be erected this spring by Mr. H. H. Houston, near Wissahickon Station on the Chestnut Hill Branch of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

THE SPECIAL SERVICES during Holy week at S. Paul's Church, Third street below Walnut, for the accommodation of business men, have been well attended, the church being well filled with a congregation of business men of that vicinity. They were addressed by the Rectors of S. Luke's, S. Clement's, Holy Trinity, S. Stephen's and Grace churches, in the order named.

The Ohio Convention.

The Special Convention of Ohio met at Trinity Church, Cleveland, on Wednesday evening of March 14th. An organization was effected and the salary of the Assistant Bishop was fixed at $4,000, with an Episcopal residence guaranteed for three years without cost to the Diocese.

On Thursday morning, after the celebration of the Holy Communion, nominations were made for Assistant Bishop, as follows:

Rev. Francis Lobdell, D. D., Rector of Trinity Church, Buffalo, N. Y.

Rev. Wm. S. Langford, D. D, Gen'l Secretary of the Board of Missions.

Rev. Henry Y. Satterlee, D.D., Rector of Calvary Church, New York City.

Rev. E. R. Atwill, D. D., Rector of Trinity Church, Toledo, Ohio.

Rev. W. F. Nichols, Rector of S. James Church, Philadelphia.

Rev. John W. Brown, D. D., Rector of S. Paul's Church, Buffalo, N. Y.

On the third ballot the Rev. W. F. Nichols was elected by the clergy, receiving twenty-seven out of fifty-two cast.

The lay delegates then retired for conference and an informal ballot was taken resulting in a vote in favor of agreeing with the election of the Rev. Mr. Nichols of 67 to 65 against.

At six o'clock the Convention was again called to order by the Bishop. It was ruled that a majority of all the lay delegates must vote "received" in order to confirm the election of the clergy. A majority and minority report of the tellers were made as follows:

The majority reported whole number of lay delegates 145, number of votes cast 132, necessary to a choice 73, to receive 65, to reject 68, informal 3.

The Rev. Mr. Avery presented the following minority report: Whole number of votes cast 134, to receive 67, to reject 68, "Ayes" 2, "accepted" 1.

Bishop Bedell announced the result by saying: "Gentlemen, the nomination of the clergy has been rejected by the laity."

The Convention then adjourned until Friday morning. After service Rev Dr. Atwill announced that the Bishop requested that all proceedings should be suspended until he appeared. A motion was made for a reconsideration of the ballot taken by the laity upon Mr. Nichols' confirmation. During the discussion the Bishop entered and read the following remarkable address:

"The issue of the deliberations of the special convention yesterday was a painful surprise. It has led to a careful reconsideration on my part. No other member of the convention is at all aware of the communication which I now lay before you, for it would not be proper that any one except the bishop should be held in any degree responsible for the action which he proposes. After a day spent in earnest consideration of my request for the election of an assistant bishop the convention failed to give me an assistant, but to my great surprise the opportunity was taken by some of my clerical brethren to attempt to change the policy which as your divinely appointed spiritual head, following the traditions of the past and my own deliberate judgment, I deem wisest and for the best interests of the Church in this diocese. This cannot be done during my life without imminent peril of discord and contention. It is the first time, as far as I know, that it has ever been attempted in any diocese under such circumstances. An assistant means a helper. It implies entire cordiality both in counsel and in work The relationship cannot truly exist where there is not an entire accord in every Church principle as well as in religious teaching. Constant irritation would result disastrously to both bishops as well as to the diocese. Therefore, in the present emergency, I withdraw my request for the assistant bishop, at this time, accepting the alternative of trying the effect of entire rest with medical care abroad. I shall hope that, in the providence of God, either my health may be so restored that I may be able to resume my work or that it shall become evident that it is my duty to resign. However, I have not changed my mind as to the course which a wise regard for the interests of the diocese suggests. If the convention desire to appoint a committee of conference whose report after consulting with me, shall be approved both by the convention and the diocesan, I will gladly accept that decision. Otherwise I withdraw my request for the appointment of an assistant bishop at this time, acknowledging with gratitude the cordial effort which my brethren have made to meet my wishes and anticipating the day when the request will be no longer needed."

A committee was then appointed who made the following report.

"The Committee have had under consideration the subject referred to them, and after prayer and full and free conference with each other, and full and free conference with the Bishop, it has concluded, as the best means of preserving harmony and insuring the welfare of the Church, to suggest the following: That the clergy at once proceed to ballot on the names of these three gentlemen: Rev. J Livingston Reese, D. D., of Albany, N. Y.; Rev. Dr. Atwill, of Toledo, O., and Rev. Dr. Henry Y. Satterlee, of New York City. And that when nomination is made the name of the nominee be referred to the laity for consideration as set forth in the canon. This decision was reached after Dr. Atwill had retired, upon request, and Mr King had been unanimously appointed Chairman of the Committee."

Discussion arose as to the right to vote for others than those named in report. The Bishop decided that votes must be restricted to the three names. The Convention took a recess until afternoon, when the Bishop withdrew his ruling of the morning so far as to allow any votes to be counted unless the Convention objected. The first ballot was then taken which resulted in no choice, less than a majority of the votes having been cast for all of the three persons named in the report. The Rev. Mr. Nichols having a higher number than any other person.

When the result of the ballot was announced the Bishop said:

"I am not sorry that the gentlemen who have not voted for the three candidates have had an opportunity to show their disrespect to this Convention. I am sorry that they have seen fit to do so. It is of no use to use moderate terms. If Mr. Nichols' friends persist in voting for him I will withdraw my request for an assistant Bishop. Is it right that these young me—. But I shall not contiue. However, in Gambier, in the future, the young men who have not been brought up in the Protestant Episcopal Church will find it very difficult to enter the doors."

The Bishop stated that he desired to call the attention of the Convention to the rules which provided that names be presented for nomination by the clergy and voted upon.

"Under the rules the Convention is restricted to these three names," he said: "I so decide. After the solemn deliberation and action of the committee I do not see how any one can feel differently on the subject from the way that I feel. Those who do not want to vote need not, but a vote of those present, it is stated in the canon, elects. My former ruling I made in the interests of peace and harmony, but as I did not succeed in attaining my object, I go back to my former ruling which is in conformity with all practice and custom and confines the clergy to voting for the three names in question. All votes cast for any other candidates will not be counted."

On the fourth ballot Rev. Dr. Satterlee was elected, receiving 27 votes to 21 for all others.

Bishop Bedell announced that Dr. Satterlee was the choice of the clergy. The Bishop here advanced and said with emotion:

"As a boy I was taught that when I had committed an erorr it is a privilege as well as a duty to ask pardon, and more especially when the fault committed approaches to a sin—a lack of charity. In words which I have to-day used and to which I need not refer more fully, I have committed that sin. I have already confessed it to my Saviour; I now confess it to the clergymen who are offended. Will they please forgive me?"

The laity now voted with the following results:

Total number of lay delegates 155; necessary to choice 78. Received, 111; rejected, 11.

The Bishop announced the election of Dr. Satterlee as Assistant Bishop of the Diocese of Ohio.

General Notes.

ON SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 19TH, the main altar in St. Paul's Cathedral was formally accepted and consecrated by the Right Rev. Dr. Brown, Bishop of Fond du Lac. The altar is a gift of Mrs. M. H. Galloway, to the glory of God and in memory of her late husband, Edwin H. Galloway.

Bishop Brown in the course of his remarks gave substantially the following history of the altar: "Soon after my consecration as Bishop, I was unexpectedly summoned to the bedside of Mr. Edwin H. Galloway. He was known to me as one of the leading citizens of Fond du Lac. I had heard of the singular integrity of the man. His business honor was unquestioned. For truthfulness, purity, public-spiritedness, energy and sagacity he ranked among the foremost of our men. In his home he was a most devoted and tender husband and father. His stainless and honorable character was, however, the prop and glory of the infidelity and skepticism of this region. He met me with a greeting in words much as these: 'You see,' he said, 'my physical condition. I do not expect it can be improved and probably my days are already numbered. As I lie here I have been thinking over my past life and I wish for the sake of my family and friends to correct any mistakes I may have committed so that my example and influence may be of all possible advantage and use to them. You know, probably, what my opinions and principles have been. I am quite willing to review and revise them. Let me say plainly, however, that I am not ready to weigh religion in the balance and to decide by some difference in probabilities. It will make an infinite difference to me whether I lie here an honest man, or whether for the few days before me I must think of myself as a hypocrite and deceiver. Now what can you say to me for Christianity and the Church?' One day Mr. Galloway said to me: 'I am sure that I shall surprise you. I have weighed what you have said to me. Why did not some one say it to me a long time ago? But scrutinizing as carefully as I can my past life I see with perfect clearness that I have never been a skeptic, never really lost the faith that I had in my childhood. I have always been controlled by Christian principles. I have never heard the name of God profaned without a shudder, and I have never profaned it myself. I perceive that I have simply mistaken the scope of reason. I have been trying to understand God's government of the universe and his relations with men. The subject was too big for me. I could not grasp it and thought that I was an unbeliever. I am sure now that I have never been, in fact, an unbeliever. I have been honestly mistaken as to the province of reason. I would be glad to live long enough to make my friends understand this declaration, but I say plainly that my only desire to live is that I may serve God and extend and help His Church.'

"This altar signifies in particular that God is more powerful than we sometimes believe. It is a token that men around us regarded as skeptical and unbelieving are often in heart profoundly honest and earnest. Their faith is for a while eclipsed. By and by the shadow will pass from it and then they will discern that the relations with their God were less disturbed than they thought. Such a character as Mr. Galloway's teaches us to be tender in thought and word as to the character of those who seem to be far away from us in religious principle and feeling and to be hopeful for a time when men who mean to honor Him shall be really one with each other and with Him."

REV. HENRY Y. SATTERLEE, D. D., who was elected Assistant Bishop of Ohio, has declined to accept the position.

WOLFE HALL, Denver, Colorado.—This flourishing school for girls is to be removed from its present location and a new building erected, having a frontage of two hundred and fifty feet. In 1867 the lots upon which the present building was built were valued at $100 each; four of them have been sold for $120,000, with which it is proposed to erect the new building in a more desirable location for the school.

Letter from Father Sheppard.

CAPETOWN, CAPE COLONY,
Dec. 21, 1887.

MY DEAR ——: This will not reach you in time for Christmas, but you must please believe that I have nevertheless wished you in my heart all blessing and happiness which the Feast of the Incarnation, now so near, and the New Year, with its hopes and unknown benefits, can bring you. Your most welcome letter reached me just before I left home about ten weeks ago for a holiday and rest, so I had to delay answering it until I returned, which was about four weeks back. It was a most interesting and enjoyable trip. The country I went over was entirely new, and for a considerable part of the way the mode of traveling was new, or at least unusual for long distances, being partly in post-carts and partly on horseback. The first night and morning after I left Capetown was the only piece of railway traveling I had. After I alighted at about 11.30 A. M. on the Monday, all the rest of my journeys were, as I have mentioned, except for the last twenty-four hours, when I was at sea, coasting back to Capetown from a little port called Mossel Bay. Our railway system here is very embryonic; we have one main line going up to the Great Orange River, to the Diamond Fields of Kimberly, and an extension now projected to Pretoria, the capital of the Dutch Transvaal Republic. (South Africa beyond the Cape Colony is a very republican country.) Then there is a branch line leading to Port Elizabeth and Grahamstown, the two most important places in the Colony after Capetown and Kimberly. But between that line and the seacoast all traveling has to be done by post-cart, private cart, bullock wagon, or on horseback. The Cape cart is a two-wheeled vehicle, strongly built, with either shafts for one horse or, as generally, a pole for two horses, after the fashion of the old English curricle. It has a head or tilt and will hold sometimes four and sometimes six persons; on long journeys four and sometimes six horses are used. Riding in one all day nearly, as I did once or twice, making journeys of fifty and once seventy-five miles, is rather cramping and tiring work, but still it gives me a better opportunity of admiring the scenery, when there is anything to be admired, than rushing in a railway car. Riding on horseback, however, is to my mind the pleasantest way of all, if you can limit your wardrobe (as you must) to a pair of saddle-bags. In one of these two ways the country clergy here must visit their parishioners, so that they must generally keep a horse or horses, which in this country is expensive, as forage has to be provided all the year round, there being scarcely any pasture land in our part of the colony on which horses can be fed and thrive on it. Except at one village I always stayed with the clergyman of the place, and I was most kindly entertained. In return I was glad to preach for them, as in those isolated places, where one is thirty miles or more, i. e., five hours' drive from your nearest clerical neighbor, the clergy and people seldom hear but one voice year after year, so they may be forgiven if they are glad to hear a new voice when the infrequent opportunity occurs. So in regard to preaching my outing was by no means absolute rest, as I think I spoke or preached fifteen times during the six weeks I was away.

In most of the country places here, the Dutch Reformed Church—the full title still holds here, though dropped in the States—has the chief spiritual domination, and the Church of South Africa has a very uphill work of it, quite as much so as the P. E. Church has in New England amid the sects there.

In the western portion of the colony the farmers are all Dutch and so, by hereditary custom, belong to the Dutch Reformed Church.

In one village where I spent a fortnight, Oudtehoover, there are scarcely 2,000 people, and besides the Dutch and English churches, there are churches belonging to the Wesleyans and Roman Catholics; yet the Dutch church building is a very handsome one of red sandstone, capable of holding fourteen hundred people, and four times in the year, at the quarterly communions, it is more than filled. The farmers come in from long distances, spend two or three days in the village, living in their ox wagons or in tents, while some of them have built small houses near the church, which they occupy during these festivals and which are empty for the rest of the year. The Dutch minister has the best house in the village, a fine garden, a good cart, horses and mules and £600 a year. Still, the little South African, i. e., English church, is making way slowly but surely, especially among the colored people who form such a large proportion of the community and who are very much neglected by the Dutch; indeed many of the more ignorant farmers persist in declaring that the colored people have no souls, and if it were not for their use as working people, they would be glad to see them exterminated. The whole bent of the Dutch mind is to oppress the colored race of South Africa, deprive them of the chances of an education, demoralize them by the unrestricted sale of liquor and generally treat them as a degraded race only to be trampled upon and insulted. The consequence is that the natives, both Africans and Kaffirs, look to the English as their friends and are generally very anxious to learn English and to attend English services. The rising generation of the Dutch themselves, at any rate in the towns, mostly can speak and read English, and prefer it, so that also makes it easier for them to join the English church. Then, too, the English clergy are much better house to house visitors than the Dutch ministers, so that tells in our favor. In the case of the two parishes which I visited the distance from end to end can be little less than sixty miles, and some of the roads are anything but good; bridges, for example, are almost unknown, and you must ride or drive through the fords or "drifts," if you can, and if not, wait until the flood goes down. Post carts, however, cannot wait, and many accidents happen at these fords, with the loss of men, carts and horses. The clergyman with whom I stayed at Mossel Bay is named Taylor. If you happen to have the S. P. G. book, "Under His Banner," which gives a summary of the missionary work of Church of England, you would find there an account of Mr. Taylor's work at the little rocky island of Tristan d'Acunha which lies 1,000 miles south of Ascension Town, to the people of which, ninety or one hundred in number, he was the first chaplain. He brought away with him a good many of the people about twenty years ago, and some are still living at Mossel Bay. There is still, however, a small population there, and Mr. Dodgeon, a friend of mine, is the present chaplain.

Now, in reply to your inquiry about our work here, I must fill the rest of my sheet with a very brief sketch. If you could call and see us here I would take you to our school chapel, about two hundred yards away, and show you there between 300 and 400 children, more than half of them under six, who are being trained and disciplined and taught there, you would recognize in the chief mistress, one of the All Saints' Sisters, I mean by her dress. Our school is far too small for the number, and as soon as we possibly can find the money we are going to build a separate infant school. One or other of us is there giving religious instruction almost every morning, and I also give singing lessons twice a week. Quite half the number, if not the majority, you would notice are shoeless, and you would wonder how the little creatures could run about so gaily on the roads and streets which, from the action of our terrific southeast winds, have every stone exposed in all its roughness and sharpness. On Sunday you would see the same building with the east end screen gone out of sight, and a well arranged chancel and almost stately altar and dossal chiefly attracting your attention, and the body of the building well filled. The choir seats filled with a choir of about twenty-four, many of them colored more or less. On the south side of the nave you would be struck by the mass of dark, very dark faces and wooly heads, but the faces are not of the negro type, they are from the east coast, Kaffirs, Zulus, Saikas, Galekas, Inhambane and Mozambique men, and many other tribes are represented. These are gathered through the instrumentality of a Kaffir Home and School. In the Home (S. Columba's) we have about twenty lodgers, living under simple house rules and presided over by a Kaffir Catechist, John James, who lives in the Home. A German lady of considerable teaching power and great self-devotion is our chief teacher in the daily night school, which is attended by about forty or more scholars. There is generally a baptism class going on, and on Christmas Eve Father Puller will baptize seven by immersion in the baptismal tank in the chapel. The vows will be made in Kaffir, and the questions put through John James, as interpreter. F. Puller, who is in charge here, is chaplain to the All Saints' Sisters here, who have quite a number of works.

The new Mother was the Superior here until a few months ago. They have three schools of various grades, a large Orphanage, a House of Mercy and the care of a large Hospital, so all this involves a good deal of work for the Chaplain and myself, besides the parish work which chiefly falls on me. A third priest, a secular, lives with us and has charge of the Mission to the large Malay population of Capetown under our supervision. They are Mahommedans, many of them very devout ones, and it will be a long time probably before much impression is made. It is a work of faith and prayer, but a very important work, as there are about 12,000 in Capetown alone and many more in the Colony. You could not be many hours in Capetown without being struck by the gay and oriental-looking dresses of the Malay women and the gorgeous flowing robes and snowy turbans of some of the Hadjis. You might also meet men with dark faces with regular features and smooth black hair, wearing a close-fitting single breasted black surtout and white trousers, or dome-shaped cap with peak or brim but with a gold band round the edge. Over his shoulder he would be carrying a large bundle of Indian stuffs for sale, and in his hand a white umbrella. This you would be told is a Hindoo pedlar. Probably you would also remark what a number of soldiers of different costumes you saw in the streets; for we have here and in the neighborhood about 4,000 men, engineers, artillery, medical staff, dragoons, besides two foot regiments, and there are five or six volunteer corps, each of which has its own regimentals. As you walked about Capetown you would be impressed with the grandeur of the mountain masses which engirdle and seem to overhang the oriental-looking town, while on the only open side you would delight to gaze out on the beautiful blue bay and the mountains beyond. This is a very imperfect sketch, but it must end here I am afraid. If this brief setting forth of some of our work and our needs should stir you to specially remember us in your prayers, I shall be very grateful. Please remember me most kindly to all old friends, and believe me to be yours very truly.

Parish Notes.

Holy Week and Easter were observed with the usual services. On Good Friday the church was crowded during the three hours' service, most of the congregation remaining throughout. Fr. Field conducted them at the same time at S. John, Waverly, Baltimore; Fr. Longridge at the Holy Innocents, Hoboken, and Fr. Convers at S. Timothy's, Roxborough.

The number of communicants on Easter day was large, though still short of the number on our list. It was considerably larger than in any former year, being one hundred and seventy more than last year.

At 11 o'clock Beethoven's Mass was sung with the usual orchestral accompaniment. Though the crowds were great the conduct of the people was very reverent.

On the Wednesday in the Octave there was the Parish Tea, and on Friday the Procession of Guilds with a sermon by Father Osborne.

The 7.45 o'clock Celebration will be discontinued after the Sunday in the Octave of Ascension.

The Friday Meditation will be discontinued for the summer months after Friday the 11th, the last Meditation being on that day.

The 8 o'clock celebration will be discontinued after Whitsunday.

During the Rogation days perpetual intercession will be kept up night and day from the 7 o'clock Celebration on Monday till the first Celebration on Ascension day. Any persons who have not yet given in their names and who desire to take part in these intercessions are requested to do so without delay. A paper of subjects for prayer will be given to each person who takes part.

The formal opening and blessing of the new Dispensary building will take place on Ascension day at 4 o'clock.

We hope that the new organist and choir master, Mr. J. B. Tipton, will be with us now in a few weeks, meantime the place of organist is most ably filled by Mr. Miller, and that of choir master by Mr. Auty.

The small amount of offerings is due to the fact that the Parochial fiscal year now, for the first time, ends before Easter, beginning after last Easter, and this year, therefore, contains no Easter offering.

We have paid off a loan contracted last year, of $1000; and also $338.76 for debts due before this year began. We have reduced the rate of interest on the ground-rent of the church building from 6 per cent. to 4½ per cent. We have paid every bill contracted during the year, and begin the new year free from all debt.

A summary of ordinary receipts and expenditures of the past year may be thus stated:

Receipts for the year, after deducting special subscriptions,	$10,746 13
Expenses, after deducting payments not properly belonging to the ordinary expenses of the Parish,	10,617 17
Showing an excess of receipts of,	$128 96
To which add pew rents due and unpaid,	229 40
Showing a surplus for the year of, E. & O. E.	$358 36

NOTE.—It will be noticed that this report does not contain any account of the various sums that have been received and expended through the Parish organizations, inasmuch as they have not passed through the hands of the Accounting Warden. They will be found under their appropriate heads.

The Easter offering this year was $1298.71, of which $509.27 was for special purposes.

The Financial Report of the All Saints Sisters, who work in the parish, is appended, in order that members of the parish may know how this work is supported.

THE CHURCH DEBT.

Most grateful for the generous support of the earnest and liberal members of our church, assisted by a few warm friends in other parishes, we now have the pleasure of announcing that the entire debt of St. Clement's, amounting to $35,333.33, has been provided for, and that we will very shortly have the money in hand to pay off the $8000 mortgage on the parish building; indeed it is only owing to the unavoidable delay, occasioned in drawing up the legal papers, that this mortgage has not been cancelled this month.

Our receipts during the coming twelve months will enable us to pay off the $4000 mortgage on the Clergy Home, which will also be cancelled before our next annual report is made, leaving, as the only debt existing against the parish, the ground rent of $23,333.33, which is not due, and cannot be paid for four years, say in 1892; by that time our pledged annual receipts will have accummulated sufficiently to pay off this, our last obligation.

With this heavy burden we will be relieved from an interest debt of $1582 per annum, the effect of which we will reap, in part, this year.

Let us return thanks to our heavenly Father that He has so greatly blessed us in uniting us so cordially in relieving His Church from this reproach, and drawn us together in this undertaking, in a feeling of love for one another—the rich and the poor joining, so heartily, in God's work.

TRUSTEES OF THE SINKING FUND.

PHILADELPHIA, April 21st, 1888.

To the Rector and Vestry of St. Clement's Church:

GENTLEMEN:—The Trustees of the Church Debt Sinking Fund beg to present their first statement of the new fund, organized in December last, for the purpose of paying off the debt of the parish. We take pleasure in saying that our subscriptions have been paid, as they have become due, with the most extraordinary promptness, not often equaled in any business transaction of this magnitude, and we have no doubt, knowing the character of each of the subscribers, that these pledges will be kept as scrupulously in the future.

OUTER SISTERHOOD.

The Outer Sisters, of the Sisterhood of All Saints, realizing a responsibility for the support of the Sisters who do all the work among the poor and sick of the parish, formed an organization in December to supply the marketing and groceries, weekly, for the home. This plan has met with the liberal support of the Associate Sisters, and also received generous assistance from a few other members of the parish. They have thus been able to relieve the Sisters from the anxieties and harrassing cares of their own household and enabled them to devote much more time to their appropriate work.

This organization has the cordial support and endorsement of the Rector, and has worked most satisfactorily.

The articles selected by the different ladies, as their weekly contributions, have been sent with the greatest regularity and punctuality, so that the Sisters have been able to depend upon this source for their maintenance. Twenty-six ladies have pledged themselves in this organization to furnish supplies regularly.

A fund has also been started to supply the Sisters with their coal for next winter. Further subscriptions to this fund, from those who have not yet joined, will be most thankfully acknowledged by the Treasurer, 2036 Cherry street.

OUR COUNTRY HOME.

It is with great pleasure and with the deepest gratitude for the blessings upon our work and the help we have received from our many friends, that we again send out a report of the work we were able to do during the last summer for those who applied to us, some that they might enjoy it for a short time only—a bright, happy fortnight out of the close atmosphere of the city,—others that they might recruit their strength and be more fitted to carry on their work, and bear more bravely the toilsome lot which is their portion. We secured an attractive cottage at Point Pleasant, N. J. A large part of the expense of a country home is the railway fare, but that has been kindly reduced for us by the P. R. R. Company one-third the usual amount. During the summer we received in all, one hundred and forty persons. It will be remembered that we do not confine ourselves to any special class of visitors. Last year we appropriated a certain time for children (girls and boys separately), and at all times we received adults as they were able to come and as we could make room for them. Many mothers were able to come down with their children; at one time we had a family of six. We can only hope the benefit received was equal to the pleasure which they expressed. Not only at the time did they show genuine gratitude, but throughout the winter we have been told continually, how much better some one is for her summer visit to the sea. We had two trained nurses at the Home, throughout the summer, and were thus able to give special care to those who were ill enough to need it.

An important feature of our report is the expression of our thanks for help received, which we have not always been able to do personally.

Our subscribers will be glad to know that children sent to the Home will have church influence and privileges. We could not omit speaking of the kindness shown us by those in charge of the little church, S. Mary's-by-the-Sea. To Bishop McLaren we are especially grateful for many words of encouragement, for special services and other visits, as a proof of his interest in the work, and to Mrs. McLaren, for very substantial assistance. It gives us pleasure to say, that we were welcomed in the Diocese of New Jersey by Bishop Scarborough, who visited us with Bishop McLaren. Bishop Knickerbocker also came to see us, and approved our work. During the summer, the care of the church was entrusted to the Sisters.

To our many friends in Point Pleasant, we can only repeat words of thanks already said. Dr. J. M. Taylor has been most kind and generous, and we must speak of the consideration shown us by Mr. Mangold, the chemist, who furnished us medicine at very low rates.

We hope enough has been said to show that the money has been put to good account. Our funds held out so well, that we have secured our house for the ensuing year, and feel confident that ample means will come in for the support of the work which, we hope, may now be considered a permanent one.

Several ladies, members of a Guild, have kindly offered to devote their energies to the work. A committee has been formed to receive for the Sisters donations and subscriptions.

Subscribers of $5.00 will be entitled to a card of admission, enabling them to send one person (from any church or parish) to the country, for as long a time as seems necessary to those in charge of the Home.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

The Sunday Schools remain in much the same condition as in times past. They are under the charge of Father Field, and there are now between three and four hundred children in the schools, but there are not sufficient teachers. Sunday-school teaching is very difficult work, but there ought to be many ladies who would qualify themselves and take the trouble to assist in this branch of Church work. There would be no necessity for Sunday schools if parents did their duty and instructed their children in religion as they ought to do; but as things are, Sunday schools are a necessity to supply the lack of home teaching. The children's services in church are more important than the Sunday school. They make the children feel their part in the life of the Church, whereas the Sunday school is too often looked at as something which supplies the place of Church service.

The Children's Eucharist at 9 A. M., every Sunday has been well attended and is appreciated more and more by parents and children. This is the service of our Lords appointment to which all Christian parents ought to bring or send their children.

The Sunday-School Library is in bad condition, and requires replenishing.

New Hymn Books are required for the whole school.

Our thanks are due to the Misses Vandevoort for the great trouble which they take with the Infant school. Thanks are also due to Mr. Carson and Mr. Pryor for their assistance in the library and to Mr. Dunn for assisting as usher at the 9 A. M. service. The teachers in the Sunday schools have been most painstaking in their work and the parish is greatly indebted to them.

The receipts for the year have been $505.80, and the expenditures $487.14, leaving a balance in hand of $18.66.

THE SEWING SCHOOL.

The sewing school, under the charge of one of the Sisters, has met regularly each Saturday afternoon since October.

The average attendance has been much larger this year. There are about 100 names upon the books.

The classes are in the charge of ladies who have been most diligent in their work.

Their entertainment at Christmas was a marked feature this year, and was provided for with much care by the ladies interested.

GUILD OF S. VINCENT.

The Guild was established in February, 1887. It consists of the Acolytes who serve at the general services in church and chapel.

The Guild meets on the first Wednesday in each month. At the Office there is an offertory which is devoted to furnishing vestments for Priests and altar vestments in struggling parishes.

The Offertory for the past year amounted to sixteen (16) dollars, which is to be sent to the Rev. Fr. Sheppard, at Capetown, Africa. During Advent the members of the Guild collected one hundred snd thirty-six dollars and fifty-six cents ($136.56) for an altar and pulpit for S. Luke's Church, Whitewater, Wis., Rev. Jos. M. Francis.

On S. Vincent's Day, January 22d, twenty-two (22) members of the Guild made their first corporate Communion, after which they were tendered a breakfast by the Vestry.

The second annual Retreat was held on Passion Sunday, March 11th, with twenty one (21) members present. Fr. Field conducted the Retreat.

From October 26th to March 31st, inclusive, the members of the Guild have reported for duty ten hundred and seventy-three (1073) times.

C. N. FIELD, Chaplain.

THE GUILD OF S. CHRISTOPHER.

This Guild has altered its character and now consists almost entirely of those junior Acolytes who serve and assist at the children's services. There are seventeen members and they keep the original rule of the Guild and provide clothing for little Christopher in the Home of the Merciful Saviour, West Philadelphia. A Class is held for the boys of this Guild on Saturday mornings 9 to 10 by Father Field, the Chaplain of the Guild, who will be glad to receive into the Guild any little boys who desire to serve God at the Altar.

GUILD OF S. MARY.

This Guild has for its objects to help women live a higher life themselves, to influence others for good and to aid in spiritual and corporal works of mercy. It is composed of "Probationers," "Full Members," "Members of the First Order," and "Associates." During last year two members died, whose funerals the Guild attended, singing the service; one has removed; two have resigned; three were suspended, and two were expelled, making a loss in members of ten. On the other hand, three have been reinstated, seven were received as "Probationers," and five as "Associates." At Easter, 1888, there were eleven Probationers, sixty-seven members, two members of the First Order, and thirty-five Associates.

The annual excursion last year went to Florence Heights, New Jersey. As usual the annual Retreat was on Thursday, in Passion Week.

The Guild's work has included visiting the sick and the whole, to benefit both soul and body, giving for charity $342.75 in money, besides other gifts, and giving about $1,000 to the Dispensary. It has supported and cared for the "Mothers' Meeting," with its 116 members; its "Women's Benefit Club," which has distributed $54 in sick benefits to its members. The Christmas coal this year amounted to 72 tons, costing the members $3 per ton. The cash account (exclusive of special items) is as follows:

THE GUILD OF THE HOLY CROSS.

This Guild is for ladies. It provides a rule of life for those desirous of deepening their spiritual life. It is entirely self-supporting without any temporal benefits or social gatherings. The surplus funds after the expenses of the Guild have been met are given to some charitable object. Last year it contributed $150 to "Our Country Home," besides doing needle work for the same object. Several of the members of this Guild also form a committee who collect and receive donations for the support of the Home.

There are now 51 members and 2 probationers.

THE ALTAR GUILD.

The Altar Guild has done much good work in the past year. The chief change in it has been that the hour of the monthly meeting has been altered to 9.30 on Thursday morning in the hope that the hour will suit all the members, and that we may have fuller meetings.

The Linen Department has provided many needy parishes with sets of altar linen, surplices, collars, etc., and it has also been called upon several times to supply altar breads. It has also helped many by advice and by providing correct patterns for those who wished to do their own needle work. We are not able to specify in particular all the work accomplished, but it will be sufficient to show the Missionary character of our work, when we say that besides that done for our own Parish Church, we have sent to such places as Jamaica, W. I.; Tennessee, Wisconsin, Illinois, Origon, South Carolina, Virginia and Minnesota.

S. MARTHA'S GUILD.

The Guild of S. Martha is composed of girls of fourteen years of age, who have been confirmed and who are communicants or desirous of becoming so.

The Guild meets the third Sunday in every month at the Sisters' house, where they have a service in chapel and tea afterwards. They also meet one evening in every week, when they sew, read, etc.

There are now in the Guild two associates, twenty-nine full members, and seven probationers, making an increase from last year of twelve members.

The Guild is self-supporting, and is in the charge of the two associates.

GUILD OF THE HOLY CHILD

Is for girls, who are received as a rule under the age of 12, when they are prepared for confirmation. The number of members are limited to 24. Probationers 6. It has also its Associate members who can enter at any age.

The members and Associates meet once a month for a service in chapel. The members meet every Saturday afternoon at the Sister's house for an hour's needle work or recreation.

THE GUILD OF THE IRON CROSS.

This Guild, founded in September, 1883, in S. Clement's Parish, has now fifty Branches, ten Bishops as Hon. Chaplains, nearly two hundred Priests Associate and about 2500 members. It is so well known that it is only necessary to refer to its journal, "The Iron Cross," of which five thousand copies are now printed monthly.

There are now 260 names of members on the books in the Parent organization. All the members are pledged to Temperance, Reverence and Chastity, on the basis of Catholic doctrine, and are bound to do their utmost to rescue the body of Christ from degradation by the sins of intemperance, profanity and impurity. The Guild maintains that full Catholic doctrine is the only secure basis of morality, and to this end circulates papers and books of pure literature and books of devotion of a sound and thorough doctrinal character.

The Guild has published since last May

42,000 Papers.
5,000 Kalendars (illustrated).
2,000 Sermons.
6,000 Books of Prayer.
2,000 Constitution and Office of the Guild.
9,000 Catechisms.
1,000 A Man's Thoughts in Lent.
11,000 Pledge Cards.
2,000 Books of Songs of the Iron Cross.

Many grants of these publications have been made to poor Missions.

Last summer the Guild took 1500 boys to the country.

The Annual Convention of the Guild and Festival was held at S. Mark's and S. Clement's on January 25th, 1888, at which two Bishops and many Clergy assisted.

APOTHECARY.

Mr. William G. Letzkus.

While the Dispensary continues its original plan it has been forced by its steady growth to open new departments since last Easter. The original scheme was to minister to the industrious poor rather than to the idle by being opened in the evenings, when they could come most conveniently after working hours; to visit all new and unknown patients in order to check imposition and to open the way to such further help as might be necessary; and to receive all who come without distinction as to race or religion. The growth of the clinic has driven us to open the "General Medical Dispensary" from eleven to twelve in the mornings of all week days, as well as at night. We have opened also since last Easter two Special Dispensaries; one for the Throat, Nose and Ear which Dr. Bliss attends from eleven to noon every Monday and Thursday; and one for "Diseases of Women" which Dr. Hirst attends at the same hour every Wednesday and Saturday. Both seem to be growing. Patients too unwell to leave home have been visited by a District Physician on application.

The following table of the "new patients seen each month," of "old patients returned" and "total visits" for the last twelve months compared with the like figures for the preceeding twelve months will show the growth:

This large sum has enabled the Dispensary to buy the property on the corner of Cherry and Claymont streets, consisting of a two story stone building on a lot 81 by 71 feet. On Saturday, April 7th, the settlement was made; we paid $4000 and executed bond and mortgage for $8000 to the Fidelity Trust Company at 5 per cent. interest. The builders (George F. Payne & Co.) are now at work to adapt the internal arrangements to our use.

Our future efforts must be directed towards reducing the mortgage, altering the building to fit it for use as a Hospital, putting in the beds, and finally opening it as a Hospital for the relief of that large class of chronic sufferers for whom there is now little or no provision made. May God speed the day when we can do so.

Humanly speaking it is likely to come by our interesting non-parishioners in the plan. We can appeal to them to help us as we minister to any and all the poor who apply; and we have actually had patients come to us from Snyder avenue and "the Neck," from Richmond and Kensington, from Hestonville and from "out the Darby road," and even from Camden as well as from the more immediate neighborhood. Our visitors were able to see them all. None have been turned away because of race or religion. The charity is managed by a Board of Managers elected by all the contributors, and membership in that Board is not confined to S. Clement's parishioners. For these reasons we hope for help and co-operation from others.

The Missionary Society.

This has suffered in the last year by the absence of some who were most energetic in its support. It has made up a box of bed linen, clothing, etc., which has just been sent to S. Luke's Hospital, Denver. The last meeting was held Thursday, May 31st, after the half past nine celebration, which was an effort to redeem the promises made on its behalf. Some three years ago a pledge was made of a certain sum to S. Mary's Orphanage, Baltimore, to be paid annually for five years; there is as much as one hundred dollars of this yet unpaid. Besides this, something additional was promised to Nashotah and to S. John's in the Wilderness, Camden, Arkansas. If any of the congregation wish to prevent the parochial dishonor of unredeemed pledges, let them send their contribution to the Treasurer, Mr. J. C. Bland, 257 South Fourth street, or to any of the clergy.

The Sisters' Summer Work.

The Sisters will open their sea-shore Home at Point Pleasant about the middle of this month. The house at Fallsington, "May Cottage," has again been placed at their disposal by the kindness of Miss Williams, and will be opened about the same time. Will any friends of the work send, as they have kindly done in previous years, donations of groceries, etc., for the support of the Country Homes.

They will be especially welcomed during this month.

May we ask also that subscribers will send in the names of children they desire to be received in the Home, before leaving town for the summer.

Workers for the Master.

" Whatsoever He sayeth unto you, do it."

The chief wish in those whose gifts has upheld the medical charity of the parish has been to continue in such way as was possible the work of healing which our Divine Master began in His life on earth. And so some of them have banded together under the name given above with that motto in order to do whatever is in their power to create a building fund for the Hospital. This will be needed to pay off the mortgage now on the property to fit it up for hospital uses and to eventually enlarge it, if needed.

Those who join the "workers" (and it is open to any one who will work for the Hospital) will be gathered into bands of ten each, under a leader who will settle what dues, if any, that band will pay, and what special work they will take up, all being expected to pray for it. It is intended this summer to issue to them cards of "bricks" that they may try to get their acquaintances to give them the price of one or more bricks towards the building fund; and to take up some other work for it after the summer. They will have a small cross as a badge. All who will join the "workers" or who will try to organize a band of ten to help, can get the cards and crosses in a few days. Cannot all the parishioners who leave the city for the summer do some of this work for the Hospital while away? Get a card and cross from some members of the Board of Managers.

GEORGE EDMUND SHEPPARD, Mission Priest of the Society of S. John the Evangelist. Father Sheppard will be remembered by many in this Parish. He ministered at the Church of the Advent, Boston, for some little ti previous to 1880, and afterward at Clement's, Philadelphia, for a long time. He accompanied Father H to British Columbia for mission wo in the summer of 1882, and afterwa was chosen as Father Puller's co panion in the work undertaken by t Society in South Africa. Father She pard died of typhoid fever at Ca Town towards the end of April, ag 47. Before joining the Society he w for some years curate under the prese Bishop of Wakefield, Dr. Walsha How. He was an excellent musicia and an ardent naturalist. His mic scope often afforded pleasure at our cial gatherings. His gentle courtesy a quiet devotion won for him the tr regard of all to whom he ministered.

It is remarkable that the four grav of the Society should be one in each the great divisions of the worl Father O'Neill is buried in Indi Father Coggeshall in America, Fath Sheppard in Africa, and Brother Walt in England.

We are reminded of S. Monic words to Augustine when she was d ing in Italy at a distance from h home: "Lay," she said, "this bo anywhere; let not the care of th any way disturb you. This only I r quest, that you would remember me the Lord's altar wherever you may be —S. Augustine's Confessions, IX. 2

The use of Incense in the Wo ship of the Church.

Incense was used in the worship the old covenant by Divine appoi ment. It accompanied the daily mo ing and evening sacrifice, and w offered with still greater solemnity the great Day of Atonement, when was burnt within the innermost shr of the Tabernacle, the Holy Holi

Speaking of the Altar of ncen Archdeacon Freeman says its fu tion was to carry the gr coven Sacrifice into the covena Prese Placed originally within the vail, was afterwards set just outside it, in midst; in the line, therefore, join the Altar of Burnt-offering and Mercy-seat. The incense itself was intended to penetrate into the Holy of Holies. And in it the whole of the sacrificial powers which gathered round the Altar of Burnt-offering were summed up." And again, speaking of what took place year by year within the vail on the Day of Atonement, he says, "Then, for once, the Burnt-offering and the Incense and the High-priest of the Imitative Economy, were gathered together in the full might of their conjoint and co-ordinate ministry. . . . . The perfect image was once for all seen upon earth of 'Christ entering into the Holy Places not made with hands, even into heaven itself, to appear in the Presence of God for us:' True Priest, True Sacrifice, presenting His Church Himself through His all-availing INTERCESSION." (Principles of Divine Service, Vol. II, pp. 178–179.)

Thus the incense was that which summed up the power of the Sacrifice, and gave it its intercessory value, symbolizing the merits of Christ which alone could make any sacrifice an offering of a sweet savor acceptable to Almighty God.

A similar meaning is attributed to it in the Apocalypse. In chapter viii: 3, the Angel (probably Christ Himself), who stands at the Altar with a golden censer, offers the incense "with the prayers of all saints upon the golden Altar which was before the throne." Here the incense is spoken of as something added to the prayers of the saints; and that something, by the consent of all Christian teaching, is the perpetual intercession of Christ.

Doubtless there is also another point of view in which the ascending smoke of the incense by a very natural symbolism represents the prayers themselves, as when the Psalmist says, "Let my prayer be set forth in Thy sight as the incense." (Ps. CXLI, 2.) And this may be the meaning of another passage in the Apocalypse, in which the four and twenty elders, the representatives of the Universal Church of God, the collective body of the Saints of the Old and New Testaments, are represented as "having every one of them harps and golden vials full of odors which are the prayers of saints;" (Rev. V, 8,) although in this place too it is possible, and many expositors think it is grammatically necessary, to take the relative "which" as referring to the vials not to the odors, so that here too the "odors" would be something added to the prayers. However the meaning will come to much the same either way, for confessedly it is the merits and intercession of Christ which alone can make our prayers to go up as an acceptable sacrifice to God; so that it makes little difference whether the incense symbolizes those merits themselves or the prayers of the faithful which ascend in union with them.

That the use of incense was not to cease with the worship of the Jewish Church we learn from the prophet Malachi, the last of the Old Testament prophets. The passage to which I refer is that well-known verse the eleventh of the first chapter, "From the rising of the sun even unto the going down of the same my Name shall be great among the Gentiles; and in every place incense shall be offered unto My Name, and a pure offering; for My Name shall be great among the heathen saith the Lord of Hosts."

All Christian antiquity is agreed in considering this verse as a prophecy of the Christian Sacrifice in the Holy Eucharist. Thus, to mention but one early testimony, Justin Martyr in the second century says (Dial c. Trypho, §117), "God has therefore beforehand declared, that all who through His Name offer those sacrifices, which Jesus, Who is the Christ, commanded to be offered, that is to say in the Eucharist of the Bread and of the Cup, which are offered in every part of the world by us Christians, are well-pleasing to Him. But those sacrifices which are offered by you (i. e., by the Jews) and those priests of yours, He wholly rejects, saying, And I will not accept your offerings at your hands. For from the rising of the sun even to the going down of the same, My Name is glorified among the Gentiles."

Thus the prophecy which speaks of the Christian Sacrifice of the Eucharist speaks also of incense as accompanying it. We are aware, of course, that some interpreters contend that the mention of incense in this passage is to be taken merely metaphorically for the prayers which it represents. But as the Pure Offering is, according to all Catholic interpretation, an objective entity, viz., Christ present under the forms of Bread and Wine, it seems more natural and consistent to take the incense also as an objective reality, so that it should be literally offered along with the Eucharistic Sacrifice in the Holy Communion.

Nashotah.

Apropos of the recent efforts to deepen and widen the interest felt in this Theological Seminary, we print some extracts from the "Life of Dr. Breck," its Founder, which will give an idea of its origin and life in the early days when it kindled such enthusiasm.

Our first shall be a description of a Baptism by immersion in Nashotah Lake.

"Tuesday, St. John Baptist's Day, June 24th, 1845. No recitations to-day. Morning Prayer at 9 o'clock. After the Second Lesson two adults were presented for Baptism.

"We proceeded to the lake in the following order, singing as we went, the Seventy-second Psalm in metre, to the tune of "The Old Hundredth.' Brethren and Students, two by two; the Rev. Mr. Breck in surplice; candidates for Baptism, it white robes; witnesses; congregation.

"At the Lake, where the Baptistery is moored on the north side of the pier; we opened ranks, and the Rev. Mr. Breck, with the candidates and their witnesses, passed on to the bank opposite to the Baptistery, where the Baptismal service, which had been begun in the Chapel, was continued, beginning with the questions to the candidates.

"Upon completing the Prayer of Consecration, the Rev. Mr. Breck went down into the water, accompanied by Brother Taft, who kneeled in the Baptistery, where the Baptism took place. Returning to the bank, he led in the young lady who al knelt. The mode of Baptism was, the mention of each of the Thr Sacred Names, to bend the remainin portion of the person under the wate As each candidate arose from the wate after the 'Reception' and signin with The Cross, the first verse of th Eighty-eighth Hymn, 'Soldiers Christ Arise,' was sung.

"The service was then conclude and we returned in the same orde rehearsing the Apostles' Creed as w ascended the hill, and as we moved t wards the chapel singing the remai ing verses of the hymn, concludin with the Gloria Patri as we enter the Chapel.

While the striking picturesquene and freshness of services like thi easily captivated the imagination, an gave wonderful intensity to all religio impressions, there were other sides the work, of which we find little me tion in the letters of the founder.

One of these was the comic el ment which, to any one gifted with appreciation of the ludicrous, mu have lubricated the toils of their dai life with ripples of frequent laughter.

"The Rev. B. Akerly, of Milwauke and the Rev. Dr. Bury, of Clevelan Ohio, visited us, and remained night. They assisted at eveni prayer. Supper was delayed until h past eight o'clock, to allow our visito an opportunity to go around the m sion premises by daylight. The Re Mr. Unonius arrived at a later hour.

"Tuesday, July 22d. Bell ra at 5 o'clock. After roll call we learn that the Rev. Superior sat up so l with the visiting clergy that he ov slept the hour. When the cha service was delayed, it caused no lit conjecture among us; and at half p six o'clock we came from our rooms the kitchen to learn the cause.

"There we found that there wa bare larder, and John Cornelius h been despatched to the barnyard hunt the old rooster and hen whi with one pullet, constituted our wh remaining stock of poultry. T clergy were walking along the ba of the lake.

"The Rev. Mr. Breck, seeing us congregated around the kitchen, rang the bell for morning prayer, and then went to the kitchen, where Brother Keene was engaged in preparing for breakfast. As he came out, he was heard saying to Brother Keene, 'Put in plenty of pepper,' and it was immediately surmised that the clergy were to have a dish of chicken soup.

"The Rev. Messrs. Akerly and Unonius read the service. During the chanting of the Venite the crack of John's gun was heard; and soon he came past the window where I was seated, at the west end of the chapel, bearing the old rooster which he had shot, and carried it to the kitchen. During the Te Deum, I saw him dodging around the school-room chasing the old hen and pullet, with gun in hand. Crack! and a series of cacklings, and soon he walked up to the kitchen with the old hen.

"We had an address from the Rev. Dr. Bury, recited some Psalms, and sang the forty-eighth Psalm in metre. Breakfast was ready at eight o'clock. I was the waiter at the table at which all the clergy were seated. In front of the Rev. Mr. Breck was a large tin pan, containing the chicken soup, which he dispensed to our guests, the Rev. Dr. Bury being seated on his right, and next to him, the Rev. Mr. Unonius, while the Rev. Mr. Akerly was on his left. The only virtue in the soup was, that it was hot, Brother Keene having faithfully fulfilled the injunctions he had received. The attempts on the part of the visitors to make any impression on the meat were soon abandoned. The Rev. Mr. Breck, in his usual bland and courteous manner, attended the guests, who each, with politeness, declined to be served a second time. The Rev. Mr. Unonius had been sawing away on a drumstick, and with emphasis declined to undertake any further effort, while the heat of the soup, added to the natural ruddiness of his complexion. He had evidently become very warm, and called for 'cold water!'

"Breakfast over they went out to the library, and were joined by the Rev. Mr. Breck, who accompanied them over the grounds. At ten o'clock the Rev. Dr. Bury and the Rev. Mr. Akerly drove away."

"Wednesday, July 23d. The Rev. Mr. Unonius visited us to-day, and was asked which he preferred, chicken or chicken soup? He said that Brother Keene must have poured into that soup the entire contents of the pepper-box, and that 'Brother Lloyd' gave him 'the toughest drumstick of that old rooster?'

"The root idea of Nashotah, originally, was that of a Religious House, conducted on some approximation to the principles of a Religious Order. Formally, indeed, there was no taking of the permanent vows of Poverty, Chastity and Obedience, as in monastic institutions. But the entire self-surrender took the place of 'Poverty' (they were as poor as the Mendicant Orders were at their beginning, and lived in the same way on the alms of The Church), their all being unmarried—with no thought of anything else—took the place of 'Chastity" in the monastic view; and their joint labor, under one head, was the very inadequate substitute for 'Obedience.'

"It was the actual asceticism of the working system at Nashotah which struck the sensitive chords of the Church's heart, as it always does, and produces a depth and strength of sympathy and glowing admiration and liberality the like of which our American Church had never known before."

FATHER PULLER, of the Capetown Mission writes:

March 21. I am writing in Passion-tide, and our Lord is seeing fit to cause some little measure of the shadow of His Cross to fall upon us here.

Our dear Father Sheppard is laid up in the Hospital with typhoid fever.

Humanly speaking, it is unfortunate that Fr. Sheppard should be laid up just as Passion-tide is beginning, because the work in Holy Week is overwhelming under ordinary circumstances and the withdrawal of Fr. Sheppard throws it all upon Watkins and me. Watkins has been on the verge of collapse during the last six weeks. To-day he is taking medicine which will, I hope, give him great relief. If he were to break down, I hardly know what would happen; except that of course God would enable one to do whatever He saw was good. Besides all other work there are Kafirs to be baptized on Easter Eve; about fifteen Kafirs to be confirmed on Easter Monday; about twenty-eight S. Cyprian's and S. Michael's children to be confirmed on Low Sunday; eight or nine Penitents from the House of Mercy to be confirmed some time in Easter week.

April 4. First I will speak of Father Sheppard. During twenty-four hours from the evening of Maundy Thursday to the evening of Good Friday we were in great anxiety about him. I made arrangements to have a cab sent to the House of Mercy, if he should appear to be in extremis, and I should have broken off the Three Hours in order to go to him if it had come. Since Good Friday the improvement has kept up. I quite hope now that he will recover, although I cannot say that he is out of danger. If he does it will, under God, be due to the admirable nursing which he has had at the hospital. Dr. Parsons has been most kind. He is accustomed to go away every year from Maundy Thursday to Easter Tuesday to a little cottage which he has some miles from the city. This year, however, he was so anxious about Father Sheppard that he remained at the hospital until Easter Eve, and when he went off he left his servant with his horse and cart, and gave instructions that he should be sent for at any hour if Father Sheppard should seem to be doing less well.

On Easter Eve our baptisms came off very happily. I baptized four Kafirs, and Watkins baptized a half-colored man. On Easter Day the number of communions at S. Philip's was just fifty per cent. more than last year. On Easter Monday the Bishop came in the evening and held a confirmation for the Kafirs, his address being interpreted by John James. I presented fourteen Kafir men and one Kafir woman, the first Kafir woman connec with our mission who has received c firmation. The candidates were, verily believe, all in a state of gra and they are very happy and ferve Eight of them had been baptized Christmas Eve and four on Easter E and three, including the woman been received into the Church, hav been baptized previously by Dissent

The Bishop very kindly allowed to bring as many of the Christian Ka as could come to Bishop's Court the evening of Easter Tuesday, to s some hymns and songs to him and family. We went last night, a pa of twenty-one, including John Ja and myself. The men were delight They sang very well, and were ent tained with tea and fruit and go things afterwards in the Bishop's din room. Some of the Christians w not able to come, because they w kept late at their work.

Rev. W. A. Leonard, D. D, R tor of S. John's Church, Washingt D. C., has been elected Assist Bishop of the Diocese of Southe Ohio. The Diocese is to be congra lated upon its choice. As Bishop J gar has placed in the hands of Presiding Bishop a document tra ferring all jurisdiction over the dioc to the Assistant Bishop, Dr. Leona should he accept, will be practica the Bishop of the Diocese. This cou ought to be followed in all cases.

The Church in this country met with a great loss in the death Rt. Rev. John Henry Hobart Bro S. T. D., Bishop of Fond du L Bishop Brown died May 2d, his d ease being typhoid pneumonia brou on by overwork and exposure. funeral was attended at the Cathe in Fond du Lac on Tuesday, May 8 There were two early celebrations 7 and at 8, and at eleven the fune services took place. After the read of the burial service the Holy Co munion was celebrated by the Bis of Chicago. Before the Consecrati the Benedictus was sung and after the Agnus Dei. During the ablutio the Nunc Dimittis was sung.

The excursions have begun! "Iron Cross" has twice taken working boys into the country for half day. S. Mary's Guild went 19th, to Florence Heights, enjoy their service in the pretty little ch the ride on the river and their da the country.

The Sisters have opened their H at Point Pleasant, and received first installment of their little guest

The Parishioners will be glad to that the tone of the letters rece from Fr. Maturin has been bright cheerful. Although he has had bad attacks since he landed in land yet he is on the whole b than before he sailed. He has spending some time with his bro and expects to visit some friends a which contradicts the "compul retreat" of which rumor has been s so much. It is still too early to even approximately the date of return.

Fr. Field's return passage has taken for July 25th, in the "Cit Rome."

"The Workers for the Master."

The badges of those who are banded to work for the hospital have been received and are pretty silver maltese crosses. The cards for their collecting work are in the hands of the printers. On one side there will be a cut of a stone wall and the names of those who contribute the ten cents will be written on the stones until the card is full, when it will be sent to the treasurer. On the other side will be a cut of the building as we expect eventually to use it, i. e., carried up a story higher than at present and surmounted by a roof. Around this will be printed a little history of the work and a statement of future plans and the purposes of the building fund. What the Dispensary has done is thus summed up: it treated in its first year 788 new cases, 1232 old, in all 2020; in the second 1350 new, 2261 old, total visits 3611; in the first six months of the third year, 975 new, 2129 old, total 3104. The building fund to be raised by these cards is meant to provide for the payment of the mortgage, principle and interest; to refit the house for hospital purposes; and to eventually raise it one story and roof higher. Everybody can get a collecting card for the hospital. We shall probably require some more money to end this year without debt, as the expenses of our alterations and our failure to rent the old building 110 Friedlander Street, haye entailed some unexpected outlays.

Father Sheppard.

We reprint from the Cowley Magazine for June, Fr. Puller's letter about Fr. Sheppard's death; the account of the funeral from the Cape Times and a letter, touching in its simplicity, from the native Catechist, John James.

CAPETOWN, May 2, 1888.

My dear Father—the cable will have let you know the sad-happy news that our dear Father Sheppard has passed within the veil. It was on Tuesday, the 24th of April, that he fell into a very alarming state of exhaustion. On Wednesday, I wrote to tell you that his condition was critical. There was no complication, and the fever was not high, or, at any rate, the temperature was, for a fever patient, in no way excessively high; but, apparently, the long illness of more than six weeks had exhausted his stock of strength and vitality. He slowly grew weaker, retaining his consciousness until the night before his death. Watkins communicated him on Thursday, and I communicated him on Friday, and he was perfectly conscious, though too weak to join audibly in the prayers. However, two hours afterwards he was able to whisper something to me, though it was a great effort. I slept at the Hospital on Thursday night, so as to be at hand if death seemed imminent. The doctor would not allow one to be with him for more than a few minutes, so long as the faintest hope of recovery remained; and, in fact, we did not give up hope until late on Friday evening. Moreover, opium was being administered every two hours. The consequence was that all through Friday he was very drowsy, and hardly ever spoke to the nurses. On Friday evening, when the doctor had evidently given up all hope, I came in again to see him, and he recognized me, at least I think so; and I spoke to him of his very critical state, and said prayers by his bed-side. Very soon, however, he appeared to fall into a state of unconsciousness, and he remained so all through the night, and, in fact, until his death. I sat or knelt by him through a large part of the night, and Sister Mary Agatha and I said prayers and litanies, and commendations of the dying; but, as far as one could judge, he was unconscious through it all. Twice I went to lie down for a little while, leaving injunctions that I should be summoned at once if there was the slightest return of consciousness, or if any evident change for the worse took place; but at five o'clock in the morning of Saturday (the 28th) I was again with him, and after that I did not leave him until his death, which took place at 10 A. M. Watkins arrived about an hour before his death, and we were able to say together some of the beautiful prayers for the dying; but our dear Father was quite unconscious, and he passed away in the same unconscious state.

From the beginning of his illness, he had, I think, expected death to be the issue. As soon as his illness was pronounced to be typhoid, he prepared his confession, and wrote a note to me, asking me to come and hear it. More than once during his illness he expressed a hope that he might die.

He used to be very grateful for the frequent Communions which he was able to make in the Hospital, and spoke of the love and condescension of our Lord in coming to him. The Hospital sisters and nurses were full of admiration for his patience and his absolute obedience. It was, how- of the utmost importance all along he should be kept very quiet, typhoid is an illness which prod great drowsiness, so that, from first, Watkins and I made our w short. One used to say a few pra with him, and read to him a psal a hymn, or a few verses of Holy S ture, but that was all that he c bear. Sometimes he spoke a little, speaking always exhausted him. great event in the day was his C munion, which he was able to r four or five times each week.

After his death, his body was t to S. George's Home, and lay in Sister's Chapel. The poor peopl S. Philip's, who felt that they had a most loving father and friend, c by troops to take a last look at peaceful countenance.

On Monday morning he was bro to S. Philip's which was crowded the people of the district. We had first part of the burial office, an celebration with hymns. Archde Lightfoot, Canon Peters, and Wat assisted me in the Communion of people. There were nearly 120 c municants. Then we all went to C mont by train, the body being c veyed by road, and there we bu our dear Father, in the holy gro which contains the remains of Bis Gray, and of many other good C tian people, who have served God in their generation. The feeling sympathy for his loss has been universal, and the wonderful affec of the poor people of the district our dear Father has been most to ing. A very large number of t came by train to Claremont.

I very much hope that you wil able to send us a really good prie take up his work. He has plou up the soil, and sowed it, and a g harvest is ready to be reaped. hearts are now touched, and it w be sad indeed if we were forced to l the parish work to be done scanti the odds and ends of time, which could squeeze out from one's o work.

I hope that our dear Father's tiently-borne sickness, and peaceful death, and all his earnest missionary work may be accepted by God in union with the Sacrifice of our Lord on behalf of the Society.

I hope that you will all pray for us and for our people, and for the Capetown Mission in this time of its bereavement. F. W. PULLER.

From the Cape Times.

The funeral of the Rev. George Edmund Sheppard, M. A., of S. Philip's, Capetown, took place yesterday, in S. Saviour's Churchyard, Claremont, in the presence of a large concourse of mourners. The deceased was one of the Cowley Fathers, and came to the Cape Colony about four years ago, since which time he has rendered himself beloved by his brother clergy and by the members of his congregation for his sincerity and true simplicity of character. He was prostrated by an attack of typhoid fever, contracted during his loving attention bestowed upon the sick in his parish shortly before Easter. For the sake of the excellent nursing and care obtainable at the New Somerset Hospital, he was removed there, and until a fortnight ago he was progressing favorably. However, the death of his father, of which he heard at the incipient stage of his malady, and further anxieties consequent upon the receipt of news from England after an improvement had shown itself, brought on a relapse which threw him back considerably. And, as announced in yesterday morning's issue, the end came early on Saturday morning, more from exhaustion than from any increase of the fever. The body was removed on Saturday from the Hospital to the Oratory of the Home in Keerom Street, where the members of his congregation had the opportunity of gazing upon the face of their loved pastor for the last time on earth. At six o'clock yesterday morning the body was taken from the Home to S. Philip's Church, where, at seven o'clock, the first portion of the burial service was read, and the Holy Communion celebrated. The opening sentences were said by the Rev. Father F. W. Puller, B. A., the colleague of the deceased; the psalms were chanted to Gregorian tones; and the lesson was read by the Rev. Canon T. H. Peters, M. A., the Warden of Zonnebloem. The church was crowded by members of the congregation and others who attended to pay their last tribute of respect and esteem to their departed priest. The Holy Communion was then celebrated, the Sacrament being administered to about 110 communicants, including representatives of the congregation and of several other churches in Capetown and the neighborhood. The celebrant was the Rev. Father F. W. Puller, who was assisted by the Rev. W. U. Watkins, B. A., Curate of S. Philip's, the Ven. Archdeacon T. F. Lightfoot, B. D., Vicar-General, and Canon T. H. Peters. At the conclusion of the service the body was removed in a hearse to S. Saviour's Churchyard, Claremont, whither also many hundred mourners proceeded by the 9.30 train. On arrival at the churchyard, the coffin, which was covered with wreaths and crosses, was met at the entrance by a surpliced choir, and a considerable number of the clergy. The pall-bearers were the Rev. F. W. Puller, and the Rev. W. U. Watkins, the immediate colleagues of the deceased, the Very Rev. C. W. Barnett Clarke, M. A., Dean of Capetown, the Rev. Canon T. H. Peters, the Rev. Canon R. Brooke, and the Rev. Thomas Browning, Senior Priest of the Diocese. As the procession, headed by the Rev. G. S. Gresley, Rector of Claremont, moved to the grave, the hymn, "Brief life is here our portion," was sung. At the grave, the Ven. Archdeacon Lightfoot, Vicar-General representing the Bishop, said the beautiful English Church service, at the conclusion of which were sung the hymns, "The laborer's task is o'er," and "Jesus lives." The funeral was attended by a large concourse of people, and numbers of wreaths and crosses of flowers, were placed upon the coffin, which was borne to the grave by the officers of the deceased's own Church. At S. Philip's Church on Sunday special sermons having reference to the death of Father Sheppard were preached, in the morning by the Rev. G. S. Gresley, and in the evening by the Ven. Archdeacon Lightfoot. At S. Mary's, Woodstock, similar allusion was made to the life and the death of this gentle and much-loved priest. The Sisters of S. George's Home and many of the nurses at the New Somerset Hospital were present at one or other of yesterday's funeral services.

ST. COLUMBA'S KAFIR HOME,
1st May, 1888.

Father Superior—You have never received a letter from me ever since I came to work with Father Puller and the late Father. I had of late a great wish to write to you, but had been kept back from doing so by many things.

To-day I must write to you though our hearts are full of sorrow and grief. We have been bereaved of our dear and beloved Father, who has been most beloved amongst us. We miss him religiously and socially. I have no words nor power to express how he devoted himself to his work, and the most tenderest love he displayed to those whom he had anything to do with, both in the Mission-house and outside. His love and friendship were not confined to the people whom he was working with. I mean that he was more for the Africanders, and yet he had done a great deal for Kafirs as well.

When we had tea-meetings for Kafirs the late Father used to come. I can well remember some of his words to the Kafirs, namely—"Think not that I do not care for you, for you know that I have my work amongst the other people," &c.

What can one say to express the loss we have had? Yet, thanks be to God for his mighty works. We Kafirs, before the Word of God came, thought that the spirits of the departed remained in the kraals, and waited for sacrifices. That cast a great deal of horror upon the dead bodies. On Saturday, the 28th, all (almost) our Christian Kafirs went to see body of the Rev. Father in St. George's H... The fear of spirits now is gone, an... hope of heaven is now amongst u...

On Sunday, the 29th, it was a p... sight; the Chapel was crowded, during the sermon many of the p... shed their tears.

On Monday, the 30th, the Ch... was quite full, though the weather very unfavorable. Even Malays w... present, though during the celebra... of the Holy Eucharist they were ... to withdraw. Thence after the ser... we proceeded to Claremont, where remains were interred. Malays t... carriages and were present in ... church-yard.

Our Christian Kafirs stopped f... their work and followed the hears... Claremont; and there we left ... whom we loved, to rest until the ... day.

I cannot at this present mom... express how the Father was so kin... us all. He never thought of hims... but made himself equal with us.

I remember last year he preac... on St. James' Day. He dwelt u... death as the memory of everyth... existing on earth, and called ourse... towards St. James, who was wait... for Herod's judgment; and pictu... St. James as meditating upon dea... then the Father went on to sa... "every Christian must pray that G... may be with him or her at their ... moment." He also showed that ... James was rejoicing to think that ... will soon be with his Lord, whom ... was going to die for. We hope a... feel sure that the Father was also p... pared for his death. I went to ... him when he was two days in the H... pital. He was just the same as he ... when he was well, his face beam... with love. I had no idea that was ... last day I should speak with him.

I was so sorry when he was very ... that I could not be allowed to see hi... but after his death I did see him.

I being, as it were, a representat... of the Kafirs in Capetown, send this ... behalf of us all. We Kafirs, we w... much sympathise with his friends, a... hope that they will be comforted.

We must only murmur
"Mayenzeke intando Yako."

The use of Incense in the Worship of the Church.

(Concluded.)

According to Dr. Littledale (Pamphlet on Incense) the use of incense has always been universal in the East. In the West it does not appear to have been common before the fourth century. Two reasons may be given for this. In the first place the circumstances of the early Church did not admit of much ceremonial in the celebration of divine worship. The first Christians were for the most part poor, nor had they any regular churches, but were compelled to meet for the celebration of divine service in ordinary rooms or in secret places such as the Catacombs at Rome. Naturally then an elaborate ceremonial could only grow up by degrees as a more settled and secure state of things began to prevail.

But besides this, there was another weighty reason why the early Christians should not everywhere have adopted the use of incense. It was almost universally an accompaniment of the heathen worship of the Roman Empire. Again and again, in the history of the great Persecutions, we read how Christians were required to burn incense upon some heathen altar, or to the images of the emperors, as a sign of their adherence to the Pagan religion. Many, we know, suffered martyrdom rather than comply with such a demand. We cannot wonder, then, that at least during the age of the persecutions, Christians should have avoided the use of incense in their own worship. As soon, however, as the Empire became Christian, this objection passed away, and its use soon became common in the ritual of the Church.

Perhaps the earliest notice in Christian literature of the use of incense occurs in the Apostolical Canons (Can. 3.), where it is forbidden to offer at the Altar anything "except grains of new corn, or bunches of grapes in their season, and oil for the holy lamp, and incense at the time of the divine oblation." There is also a reference in the Apostolical Constitution (ii: 26) to incense as to something in well known use at that time; "Let the widows and orphans be accounted by you in the manner of the altar, and the virgins be honoured like the censer and the incense." These references, however, owing to the uncertainty of their date, will not prove the use of incense earlier than the second or third century. When we reach the fourth century the evidence becomes clearer. S. Basil, speaking of a time of persecution, says, "The houses of prayer were cast down by unholy hands, the altars were overthrown, and there was no oblation nor incense, no place of sacrifice, but fearful sorrow, as a cloud, was over all." (Hom. xix, in Gordium Mart.) And S. Ambrose in his Commentary on S. Luke, i: 11, says, "Would that when we are censing the Altars (adolentibus altaria) and offering the Sacrifice, the angel would stand by us and even permit himself to be seen."

Another testimony to the early and wide-spread use of incense is to be found in the primitive Liturgies. Most of these, in the forms in which they have come down to us, contain prayers for the blessing of the incense. Thus, to quote from the "Prayer of Incense" in the Liturgy of S. James; "Receive from the hands of us sinners this incense, as Thou didst receive to Thyself the offering of Abel and Noe, and Aaron and Samuel, and all Thy saints." In the Liturgy of S. Mark, the priest before the gospel offers incense, saying, "We offer incense before Thy glory, O God; do Thou receive it to Thy holy and super-celestial and intellectual Altar." And again at the "Entrance" (i. e. the bringing in of the Bread and Wine and placing them upon the Altar, corresponding to our "Offertory") incense is offered a second time with the following prayer: "Lord, our God, Who hast no need of any gift, accept this incense offered by an unworthy hand, and count us all worthy of the blessing which is from Thee; for Thou art our sanctification; and to Thee we ascribe glory." And yet once more, "Incense is offered to Thy Name. Let it ascend, we pray Thee, out of the poor hands of us sinners, to Thy super-celestial altar, for a sweet smelling savour for the propitiation of all Thy people."

It would be tedious to multiply quotations from other early Liturgies. Suffice it to say that the ritual use of incense is found in almost all of them, at least from the fourth century, and that in all probability it goes back to a very much earlier date. It may, however, be worth while just to point out how closely the use of it in the early Liturgies corresponds with our present ritual. Thus we find it offered both at the gospel, and at the Great Entrance corresponding with our Offertory, and in the Liturgy of S. Chrysostom we have the censing of the altar, the oblations, and the celebrating Priest.

Incense was of course used in the English Church down to the time of the Reformation. But it is not so generally known that its use continued for a considerable period after that event, and that it has been occasionally employed even down to the revival of ritual in our own day. Censers were among the vessels ordered to be retained by the ornaments rubric, and, in addition, rubrics ordering the burning of incense were in force in the year to which the Ornaments Rubric refers. It was frequently used during the reigns of Elizabeth and James I. It was burned at the coronation of George III; and in a standing censer at Ely Cathedral, before the altar, about one hundred years ago. (Walcott's Sacred Archæology, V. Incense.) There was clearly no prejudice against its use among the most learned and pious of our divines. Bishop Andrews used it, and also Bishop Cosin.

George Herbert's Country Parson was careful to have the church at great festivals perfumed with incense (chap. xiii.). And it is said to have been a common article of purchase in the churchwarden's accounts of the period. The Ritual Committee of the Lower House of the Convocation of Canterbury declared, Feb. 9th, 1866, that burning of incense in a standing had been practiced since the Refo tion in some churches and ch cathedral, collegiate, royal, episc and parochial;" and that "inst might be found down to the midd the last century." The same comm speaks of it also as "an expre symbol."

According to the last edition Tourist's Church Guide publishe the office of the English Church U there were in 1866 sixty-six chu in England where incense was and in the present year the numbe risen to eighty-nine.

Letter from Father Maturi

BRIGHTON, June 26

MY DEAR FR. CONVERS:

I have been doing nothing since arrival in England, and am alr feeling very much better, and hope long to be ready for as much wo ever. It seems a long time to thi idling till November, but I hope t able to make up for six months' by doing a double share this wi The Roberts want me to take my sage back with them at the begin of November, which will bring me plenty of time for our festival. I not impossible that Knox-Little m in that case, come with me; he h at any rate to come out to Americ the end of November.

I have just received some clipp from the New York Herald, wh would be amusing if they were likely to upset people. Pray as any one that is inclined to bel them that I am not "going to Rom and that I was not recalled "home F. Benson to make a compulsory treat for six months," and that I not "meditating spiritual longings my Retreat"—whatever that may b but that I have been simply do nothing but resting at my brothe and have not even been to Oxford and that I look forward with incr ing hope, not to be away a year the Doctor said, but to be back November, at the latest.

Ever yours affectionately,
B. W. MATURIN

Parish Notes.

We were glad to welcome, at last his work, the new organist, who co to us from S. Luke's, Baltimore. his work there we can judge from extract from their parochial paper.

"We believe that every one in Parish regrets that Mr. Tipton finally felt it his duty to accept the invitation to take charge of the music of St. Clement's Church, Philadelphia. We have all grown so used to seeing his pleasant face among us, and have so fully appreciated his great ability as an organist and choirmaster, that it will be strange to have him no longer with us. The Rector desires to express his most cordial appreciation of Mr. Tipton's unvarying courtesy and willingness to aid him in every way in improving the service, and to thank him for the many extra services at which he cheerfully offered to officiate. Our best wishes will always follow Mr. Tipton wherever he may be, and we hope he will not forget his many friends who are by no means reconciled to his leaving us."

He would be glad to hear from boys who would volunteer to train for the choir.

In the interval before Mr. Tipton came the choir was under the charge of Mr. Auty. To his skill, musical knowledge and diligence the parish is indebted for the large amount of new music learned and sung, and for the admirable way in which they sang more difficult music than is usual at this season.

The Trustees of the sinking fund paid, July 13th, $3000 on account of the mortgage on the Parish building, and expect within the next two weeks to pay $5000 more, thus extinguishing the entire mortgage on the Parish building.

The readers of the Magazine will be sorry to learn that Fr. Osborne's right arm is temporarily disabled from lead poisoning.

Fr. Field will sail in the "City of Rome," July 25th, and may be expected to be with us by the first Sunday in August.

WE FEEL SURE that the following account of the "Memorial" to be made in England to the Reverend Mother and Foundress of the All Saints' Community, will be of interest to many of our readers.

Would that some such memorial might be made in this country, where the sisters have been working for many years. May we hope it?

Memorial to the late Mother of All Saints' Sisterhood.

By kind permission of his grace, the Duke of Devonshire, a meeting was held on Friday, 1st June, at Devonshire House to promote the erection of a children's convalescent home at Eastbourne, as a memorial to the first Mother Superior of the All Saints' Sisterhood in Margaret Street. The Bishop of Chichester presided.

The chairman said that the meeting possessed two advantages: firstly, that they were all perfectly agreed that they ought to do what they could to honor the memory of a most heroic woman, and secondly, that they were altogether resolved as to the form which that memorial should take. The supporters of this memorial had determined that it should take the form of a children's convalescent home, to be added to the existing convalescent home at Eastbourne; and it was because the memorial took that form that he was in the chair. He did not pretend to put himself forward as being greatly concerned in the projects so admirably carried out by the All Saints' Community; he would only say that during the last 38 years not less than 31 different objects of charity had all been inaugurated, and were now being carried out in every part of the world under the shelter of All Saints' Home, and it was Miss Bryon who first founded that home, and who, ever since its founding, had given herself over to its care and extension, and with a wonderful power and energy had devoted herself to its various beneficent works since its institution 38 years ago. Not the least of those works is the Convalescent Home at Eastbourne, an object which was very near to her heart. No one who has seen that building, and the happiness of its inmates, and the blessing that it is to the convalescents from London hospitals, can depart from it without having felt that the foundress of it was a great benefactress to her kind. He looked upon Miss Byron as a perfectly heroic woman; delicate in frame and spirit, subject to many infirmities, yet she went steadily forward. She set her face to do which she believed to be her duty, which she thought she had a opening from God to do, and, by help of His Holy Spirit, she mounted difficulties which to a pe far more strong and able would haps have been insuperable. O who knew her better, would spea her character; but, so far as he k her, he felt that she possessed markable combination of great q ties; she had a resolute and firm pose from which she never swerve deep and ardent benevolence w always inspired her, an absolute g for projects of benevolence, a tale organization, and that still gre talent, the power of winning and tracting fellow-workers to aid he carrying out her divers projects charity. What could they do be to honor her than to carry out and fect a work which she had so no begun? The Convalescent Hos at Eastbourne already accommod a large number from London and where, the only limitation being want of room for the patients. C dren are at present accommodated a poor cottage, which was enlarged the purpose, but which does not af the necessary accommodation; an was with a view of enlarging the ho tal, so that it might be a childre hospital as well, that the assistance those present was asked. It was a manent form and a beneficent for memorial, which would recall to all came to Eastbourne the work of H riet Byron in the best possible and he ventured to submit it to t cordial support.

Mr. Wentworth Grant read le from the Archbishop of Canterb the Bishop of Cape Town, and William Jenner, and stated amongst others Mr. Whitworth, vicar of All Saints, expressed re at being unable to be present.

The Rev. Canon Knox-Little mo the first resolution:

That this meeting considers it to desirable that an effort should be m to commemorate the work of the Rev. Mother of the All Saints' Community.

He said that there could be no hesitation in the mind of any speakers who knew anything of that great woman who had been taken from them, in commending to the most earnest attention of those present the memorial which was before them to-day. Amongst all their philanthropic efforts there could be very few which came surrounded with such an aroma of sanctity, with the brightness of such a blessed memory, and the glory of such a great and sacred character. He supposed that when it was the duty of any one to commend a memorial to the consideration of others, he, first of all, quite naturally, would go back into the personality that was before them. That personality, in the present case, brought before them a great association of gifts and forces, first of all given and provided, and then cultivated as life went on; and when they had known any one person who had greatly impressed them, in their quiet moments and their more thoughtful hours they had a way of going back and analyzing how and why it was they had been so impressed. Perhaps, therefore, he might be forgiven for telling them the first time it was his privilege to meet the Mother of All Saints, after which meeting he was forced into that kind of analytical discussion with himself as to the meaning of her personality and her power. He was at the time in miserable health, having just risen from a long bed of sickness, when the duty was laid upon him of having an interview with the Mother of All Saints on a subject not directly connected with himself, but with a person in great poverty and sickness. It was late in the evening when he arrived at Eastbourne, where she was staying for her health. When he entered the room it was dark, for the evening was getting on. In a moment or two a quiet and apparently unimpressive person entered. He stated his case shortly, distinctly, and gradually, as he developed the incidents of it as warmly as he could; she said that it was an important case, but (as he thought in a somewhat hard and businesslike manner) that there were many important cases, and the consequence was that, being weak from illness, and naturally irritable, he was a little put out and spoke more warmly than was perhaps consistent with the occasion; but, after listening to all he had to say, the Mother quietly replied, "You have said a good deal and very forcibly, but I said before there are many important cases to be attended to, and I am not sure that this is one of the most important." Just then one of the Sisters brought in a light, and they saw one another for the first time. The Mother turned and looked at him—as he had just got up from a bed of sickness he was very pale—and said, "You look very white, I beg that you will sit down." He sat down for a moment or two and refreshments were brought in; he began to state his case again, but she said with a quiet smile, "You put all that aside; you have got to have your tea first of all." He had his tea, and then she said, "Now tell me all about it, and tell me quite quietly, because it is very bad for you to excite yourself." He told her the whole thing quite quietly, and then she said, "I think the case is really a good one; I promise you this, I will attend to it." And indeed she did. He spent an hour with her after that (he had spent many hours with her since), and when he was going to walk down to the place where he was stopping, she insisted that some one should go to take care of him, and on the way, just as they reached the end of their journey, he said to the Sister who went with him, "I think the Mother of All Saints a most remarkable person, because I felt this evening that she brought me to my bearings, and it is not everybody who could do that." He recollected analyzing in his mind afterwards what it was about the Mother of All Saints which impressed him at first, and it was this, that, in the first place, he was speaking to a woman of very clear and careful judgment. Religious people, and especially religious ladies, were not always credited with the calmest judgment; but the Mother of All Saints struck him as a person with a very clear judgment; and also as being a person with a very warm heart. One meets people whose hearts are so warm, indeed, that they are absolutely explosive, and in the shower of sparks that go off from the explosion it is quite impossible to see the atmosphere around. Such was not the case with the Mother of All Saints. A clear judgment and a warm heart were great gifts; but in addition to them there was that kind of quick, incisive, sharp, and penetrating sympathy which enables people to enter into the case of others so completely that they can realize with an imaginative sympathy exactly the trials and sorrows of those before them, when their clear judgment enables them to do just what is best. He was further convinced that that very great and good woman had also one of those gifts which is most important to every one, namely, a very strong will. One meets many people in the world who are distinctly obstinate, who make up their minds without any reason whatever, but, having made them up, stick to what they have determined upon like a leech; but there are also persons of very strong will who make up their minds upon really thoughtful and reasonable grounds, and having sifted through the grounds of their determination then, because they have sifted through them, stick to their text. He was impressed with the fact, not once, but again and again, that that was the case with the Mother of All Saints. If he might venture to go one step further in this rough and sudden analysis, there was about the Mother of All Saints a simplicity of purpose, which is the most beautiful thing that it is possible for any one in this wide world of complex motives seriously to contemplate. She loved God, and, loving God, she loved those that were around her and before her in God; and, bringing to bear the force of all those powers with which she was endowed, she did quietly, unostentatiously, persistently, and purely, one of the greatest works that by God's mercy and goodness have been done in modern times in the Church of England. He therefore commended to the meeting the project that should be a memorial erected character so strong and so beaut for he ventured to think that a wo who had such a personality, and a character, deserved from the English people, by the rights of personality, a lasting and a stri memorial. If he was not trespa upon the meeting too far, he w like to say that a memorial ought to be raised, not only on the gro of her personality, but on the gro of the work that had been already d There was a time in the English Ch when the name of a Sisterhood, or name of the Mother of a Sisterho was a term of mere opprobrium, misunderstanding, for reproach. T had many sorrows still to mourn in their great and dear Church, th were many clouds still to sweep aw they lived in a world of slander spite, and they found it hard to m men see the dignity and the glory truth; but for all that there was at bottom of the character of the g English people, a vast fund of comm sense, and when they see good w they understand the great standard measurement placed before them in Gospel; that as the fruit is so is tree. Now the work of the Mother All Saints was no mean work. If th looked at that great Sisterhood in M garet street, and knew anything what it had done in London; if th counted up the different houses t had been founded by it in differ parts of the empire; if they had h the privilege of knowing just here a there some one good Sister who h worked in it, trained by that Mothe if, further, when lying on a b of extreme sickness when the memories of a past life came up w redoubled and dreadful power, wi the future lay before them with darkness and seriousness, when poor, weak frame was not only affe ing the mind, but even trying to pa lyze the forces of the soul, when th could not find physical energy, alone mental energy, to pray—if such moments they had known what was to have by their bedside a Si trained at that Sisterhood, who at the right moment, without invitation, would come and speak holy words, recalling thoughts long buried in the mind, rekindling that great virtue which they in this age of all people in the world need—the virtue of hope—recalling to them the tenderness of Christ, the merits of the Cross, and bringing to them help and hope from another world, they could realize what the work of a woman like the Mother of All Saints had been—not a mere flash in the pan that might take the popular notice for a moment, but that good solid work which is strongest in the longest day, which stands by us in our faint and weary moments, and helps us to hope again and to do right. Or if they had known (as some of them present had known in connection with the Sisterhood of All Saints), what it was to watch through the long and weary night by the bed of one who was dying, to see a man in mortal pain and to work as a priest for that man, bringing him the message of mercy, reminding him of the meaning of repentance, bringing him the strength of absolution, cheering him by the name of Jesus, and when all has been done and there has come a spasm of mental silence and the dying man has said "What can I do, what must I do," if then there rises up a woman, tender with a woman's tenderness, strong with the strength of the consecrated, self-governed, religious life, to help the priest to bear his burden, to help the dying man to face his God, then they would know what the work of that great and good woman was. He therefore appealed without fear of being supposed to speak with exaggeration or overstrained enthusiasm to those who were before him, to consider whether it was not wise and well that the memory which comes out of a personality, so real, so strong, and so tender, and out of a work, so solid, and as he hoped, so lasting, should be perpetuated. When asking for such a thing as this memorial were they not lifted from the common platform of daily life and ordinary philanthropy into higher thoughts; did they not remember that they all had their place in the great Communion that stretches far beyond the clouds; did they not begin to realize that they stood not alone but bound by the one Spirit into the one Body, and that the greatness, the goodness, the holiness, the patience, the humility, the hard work, the sincerity, and the patient bearing of affliction of each is the possession of all; did they not realize that great clause in the Creed, "the communion of Saints;" were they not brought face to face with their most Holy Master; might they not feel that as He had blessed them in their means, if they gave their money they gave it in no conventional sense to commemorate so great a memory, but they gave it with the joy and delight of children of the Church of Jesus who were realizing the communion of saints?

The Rev. Henry Arnott (Rector of Beckenham), in seconding the resolution, said it was in the year 1860 that he was first brought into personal contact with the Mother and Sisters of All Saints, who were then a very small community of some five or six Sisters, now numbering over three hundred. The one thing that struck him, more perhaps than anything else, while he had been listening to an eloquent speech of Canon Knox-Little, and his suttle attempt to analyze that wonderful character, was that, great as was that life, and great as were the works which were inaugurated and carried out under the power of that character yet it was essentially and remarkably a hidden life. When the historian of the Church movement in this century which the right rev. chairman had done so much to foster in many of its phases—is trying to find out who were the great ones who really set so many of these works in motion, he would have a great difficulty in tracing the rise and progress of religious communities in the Church of England; and yet there was hardly any institution in connection with the Church which had done more to lift the whole standard of religion in their midst than the life of religion led by men and women amongst them. It was very remarkable that one who, like the late dear Mother of All Saints did so much to promote and foster this religious life, should have been herself personally so very little known. That hiddenness of life was one of the great traits, it seemed to him, in her character. She was able to do so much, and yet to keep herself so thoroughly in the background. Still there was one point in her character to which he ventured to think that Canon Knox-Little had hardly done justice—that was that singular power of affectionate, loving sympathy with others which those who were intimately associated from time to time with the work of the Sisters in different parts got to recognise so clearly. It seemed to him that one great power which the Mother exercised was this power of a loving, affectionate nature which lay entirely beneath the surface, so much so that there were very few who knew her who would not echo what Canon Knox-Little had just said was his own feeling with regard to her, that at first, at all events, her outward demeanor was cold, if not hard. One had to know her well, and to know her work very well, and also to know those that knew her well, in order to know how underneath there lay a great and loving heart. But, for that very reason, the resolution was a very important one, because her life was not a life which could be commemorated in a memoir. There was that remarkable characteristic about the Mother, which those who knew her best would recognize, that she had not left, for instance, letters that would weave into anything like a picturesque or graphic memoir; and therefore, in order that people might not in days to come forget the name even of her who set all these great works in motion, he was greatly rejoiced to find that it had been at last determined to perpetuate her me by the erection of a Convalescent pital at Eastbourne. If he wa straying from the strict terms o resolution, he would like to say o two words in conclusion abou form of the memorial. When he in another profession, the Moth All Saints was kind enough to him the privilege of seeing the pa and determining upon their fitnes fore they were sent down to the valescent Hospital, in the first years of its comparatively humbl istence. Since then he had kn well the great and untold bless which this Hospital had brough the members of this community, b had always been the great wish o Mother that there should be special provision for the children the last time that she was at E bourne she spoke expressly as he informed, about her desire to esta and to see established, if it migh God's will, a children's branch o work at Eastbourne.

The resolution was carried un mously.

The Rev. R. Rhodes Bristow (V of St. Stephen's, Lewisham) prop the following resolution:—

That the most fitting memorial be the extension of the convales hospital at Eastbourne by erecting additional building for the recep of children.

Which was carried unanimously.

A vote of thanks to the Bisho Chichester for presiding was move the Earl of Glasgow.

The Chairman briefly thanked meeting, and the proceedings cluded.

The plans of the proposed hos from designs of Mr. A. Mardon M bray were on view.

Letter from Father Maturin

CALLANDER, August 11th, 1888.

MY DEAR ——:

Mr. Williams has asked me to wr a letter for the Magazine and I promis him that I would try, so I am going try and forget that it is for the Ma zine—for which I never could write and write to you, and if upon finishi it, any extracts will do, you can g them; first having taken what precr tions you can to secure me from th terrible historical, geographical a theological errors which were put i my mouth in what I wrote from Pal tine and which I am sure, at least have sufficient self-respect to belie never came from my pen.

A little more than two weeks ago started from London on a trip throu some of the Cathedral towns and p of Scotland, paying first, as all go Americans do, due homage at the Bir place of Shakespere. My pen is n sufficiently eloquent to describe m sensations upon that occasion. Th were, I hope, all that they ought to —in the language of England's great poet, "My feelings broke through language and escaped"—so I cannot record them.

From thence we went to Cambridge, Ely, Lincoln, York and Durham and saw the Cathedrals, none of which I had seen before. We came in for a service in most of them and had a Sunday at Lincoln which was very enjoyable. There were about fifty, I suppose, at the early Celebration. The Dean celebrated and there were three or four Bishops present. At the Midday Service the Bishop of Chicago preached. We dined with the Bishop of Lincoln and were shown over the Palace which had just been restored and the Chapel he is restoring—or rather arranging out of one building. He looks down out of his study window upon nearly the whole town which lies below; the Cathedral and the Close standing on a high eminence, and is thus in every sense of the word an Episcopos. The position and the outside of the Cathedral are the finest I have seen. The Cathedral inside loses a good deal of its effect by a heavy screen which divides the Choir from the body of the Church. I thought the Service and Choir there the most reverent I had seen anywhere.

From Lincoln we went to Durham, stopping on the way at York long enough to see the Minster and be present at Evensong. The boy voices there were lovely and I felt, as in fact I feel wherever I go in England, that I have to make a great effort not to break the tenth commandment in coveting Churches and boys. At Durham we came in for a splendid Service, the Bishop had been invited down at the close of the Pan Anglican Synod and it was also the occasion of the Festival of the Choirs. At the early Celebration, although it was a week-day, I suppose there must have been a couple of hundred present. Behind me knelt the Bishop of Aberdeen, close by, the Bishop of Springfield, and opposite me the Bishop of Pennsylvania. In the middle of the day there was a service of admission of some lay readers with a sermon by Bishop A. Cleveland Coxe. In the evening was the great Service. There were about two thousand voices in the Choir and they say there were in all between eleven and twelve thousand in the Cathedral. The singing was very good, chanting and all went without a hitch, and the vast congregation all joined in the last hymn, the Old Hundredth, which nearly lifted the roof. The Cathedral is a glorious building; the great Norman columns reminded me of what I had seen in Egypt. Behind the altar S. Cuthbert's body lies. Over it a large stone structure upon which the shrine used to stand, one of the most costly and beautiful, they say, in England. No sign of it remains! The Verger told me Henry VIII. took it to make money! Such is the judgment of history! The stone is still marked by the knees of the multitude of pilgrims that used to come to the shrine. We have now, alas! to content ourselves with the tokens of the piety of our ancestors; and Excursionists have taken the place of the Pilgrims. They write their names and take away souvenirs wherever they can instead of saying their prayers. There were eighty or ninety Bishops at Durham, the Pan Anglican Synod having closed a few days before.

From Durham we made an excursion to Fountains Abbey which is only a couple of hours by train. The Bishop of Chicago came with us and the weather was, as it has been all through, very kind to us. Fountains is one of the most beautiful ruins in England. It was founded by the Cistercians about the twelfth century, I think. An old yew tree stands by which looks like one of the old olives in the Garden of Gethsemane. That tree is said to have witnessed the building of the Monastery and to be one of the trees the Monks sheltered under when they first came and had many hardships to endure. How many lives have been lived out and fates decided while that old tree lived on! One can here trace the whole of the monastic building better than in most ruined abbeys. There it all lies, telling its story of the lives of prayer and sacrifice upon which the Church of England was founded! When shall we have that solid foundation in America?

We then went to Edinboro' where we stayed for a week. We were there surrounded by bishops on all sides. The Episcopate was represented from the far East to the far West, including that intrusive little Island which figures so largely in the population of the United States. There were in the hotel with me the Bishops of Jerusalem, Chicago, Maine, Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, Oregon and Cork! Having seen all that is to be seen in and about Edinboro', we came on here on our way through the Trosachs, by Loch Katrine and Loch Lomond, to Glasgow and thence to Oban. It is strange to hear the very broad Scotch accent and to admire their absolute indifference to, or unconsciousness of, the state of the weather. Today it has been raining almost the whole day, and in the pouring rain I saw people playing a game something like croquet, apparently quite unconscious both of rain and cold. Besides this the Doctors, who have been meeting this week in Glasgow, went on an excursion to the Trosachs. They passed by here this morning on the outside of coaches in torrents of rain and the thermometer I don't know where—not far from the freezing point! But they seemed quite happy. I presume this indifference must be gained by heredity and by the fact that if they were at all sensitive they never could go anywhere or do anything. Here we are on the high road for excursionists, and we see them in all varieties. The typical American tourist I think must be descended from the Wandering Jew. They seem unable to rest. They come and are gone like a gust of wind. No beauty of nature or anything else can restrain them for a moment. They come into some lovely place where one would like to stay a week. You see them in the evening and speak to them of the beauty of the place; "How long are you going to stay?" "Oh! we must leave in the morning!" and they are gone before you have had your breakfast. However, no one complains, the one mercy is you kn they will not stay!

There is a nice little Church h with a daily Celebration, and we sh be glad to be here over Sunday. to-morrow is fine I may walk thro the Trosachs; but we cannot dep upon the weather for an hour.

It is now getting late and I m stop. An old lady has been keepi up a steady stream of the most un teresting conversation since I h come into the room. It is for the m part a soliloquy, as no one heeds h The person to whom she addressed s first half hour got up and went awa she then crossed the room to sit ne some one else. Her tongue is of t broadest Scotch. There has been moment's lull—like a lull in a gale East wind!

I think now that I have writt enough to regain my character. T East wind has begun again! It saying, "The young Scotch minis is much nicer than the English, a people like to go to the Presbyteri (i. e., Established) Church better th to the English." She has now pass from religion to the playing of t zither!

I suppose Father Field is establish again now. I hope all goes well, a that Mr. Tipton is better.

There is a nice English couple he the man a Fellow of Magdalen. H wife asked me if I had Indians in m congregation; and he wanted to kno if California had been annexed to th States! Is it England or Ameri that is so far away? (Don't put this the Magazine.)

Ever yours affectionately,

B. W. MATURIN.

Parish Notes.

The Bishop of Nassau will visit S Clement's on his way back from En land to his diocese and will preach behalf of his work, on the third Su day in November.

Fr. Field returned from England August 2d, in the City of Rome, a will take charge of the Parish until t Rector's return.

Fr. Convers will return from St. John's, New Brunswick, Canada, on Saturday, September 9th. He has been taking the work of the Rev. J. M. Davenport, while that Priest has been away on his holiday.

The Rev. A. B. Sharpe, late Vicar of St. Agnes, Newmarket, has come to help us for a year and will take charge of the Sunday schools.

The children's Eucharist will begin again on Sunday, September 9th, and will be continued on each Sunday at 9 A. M.

The Sunday school will reopen on the same day.

The Children's S. S. Festival has been arranged to take place on Saturday, September 22d.

The Children's Home at Point Pleasant has been full all summer.

The Children's Home at Falsington has been well filled with children who have greatly benefited by the country air.

A reception was given to Fr. Field by the members of the Guild of the Iron Cross on his return from England. About one hundred members sat down to dinner and speeches were made by several clergy and laymen present.

The Iron Cross Excursions for working boys on the Saturday half-holidays have been a great success. There have been five excursions.

There are now about 75 boys on the Boys' Iron Cross register. Good positions have been found for some of the boys during the past month.

Mr. J. B. Tipton, who has lately taken charge of the organ, is already making his influence felt in the choir. More boys are wanted, and application should be made on Monday evenings before the rehearsal.

Wanted by one of the Fathers, the March number of St. Clement's Magazine for 1883. Anyone who can find a copy will confer a favor by sending it to Rev. Fr. Hall, 44 Temple street, Boston, Mass.

A private theatrical entertainment will be given in the Amateur Drawing Rooms, West Philadelphia, Fortieth and Locust Streets, in November.

The profits will be given to the local fund of the Guild of the Iron Cross, and we hope that a good many persons will take tickets, as the Guild is greatly in need of funds for its local expenses.

Our Bishops in England.

Many of the Bishops of the Episcopal Church have this summer attended the Conference at Lambeth and have been most hospitally received and entertained by the Clergy and Laity of the English Church. (One Bishop is reported to have found sixty-six invitations on his table after an absence of two days from his hotel in London.)

The object of the visit of the Bishops was, however, not for purposes of social enjoyment or of health, but for conference. There were 145 Bishops assembled, and the letter put forth by them to the Church contains a large number of plain and practical suggestions of which perhaps few are more needed than those upon the

DEFINITE TEACHING OF THE FAITH.

Recognizing thus the primary importance of maintaining the moral precepts and discipline of the Gospel in all the relations of life and society, we proceed to the consideration of the means, within the reach and contemplation of the churches, for inculcating the definite truths of the Faith, which are the basis of such moral teaching.

We cannot escape the conviction that this department of work requires great attention and much improvement. The religious teaching of the young is sadly deficient in depth and reality, especially in the matter of doctrine. This deficiency is not confined to any class of society, and the task of remedying the default is one which the laity must be prepared to share with the clergy. On parents it lies as a Divine charge. Godfathers and godmothers should be urged to fulfil the duty which they have undertaken for the children whose sponsers they have been, and to see that they are not left uninstructed, or inadequately prepared for confirmation. The use of public catechising and regular preparation of candidates for confirmation is capable of much development. The work done in Sunday-schools requires, as we believe, more constant supervision and more sustained interest than, in a great many cases, it receives from the clergy. The instruction of Sunday-school teachers, and of the pupil teachers in elementary schools, ought to be regarded as an indispensable part of the pastoral work of a parish priest; and the moral and practical lessons from the Bible ought to be enforced by constant reference to the sanctions, and to the illustrations of doctrine and discipline belonging to them, to be found in the same Holy Scripture. It wo be possible, to a greater extent tha now done, to make sermons in ch combine doctrinal and moral efficie and, by illustrating the rationale divine service, lead on the congre tions to the perception of the def relations between worship, faith work—the lessons of the Prayer Bo the Catechism and the creeds.

It is not, however, with reference the young alone, or to the recogni members of their own flock, that clergy have need to look carefully the security of definiteness in teach the faith.

The study of Holy Scripture i great part of the mental discipline the Christian, and the Bible itself the main instrument in all teaching religion. Unhappily, in the pres day, there is a widespread system propagandism hostile to the recep of the Bible as a treasury of div knowledge, and throughout society, all its ranks, misgivings, doubts, h tile criticism, and sceptical estima of doctrinal truths as based on reve tion, are very common.

The doubts which arise from t misapprehension of the due relati between science and revelation m be, and ought to be, treated with spect and a sympathetic patience; a where minds have been disquieted scientific discovery or assertion, gr care should be taken not to extingu the elements of faith, but rather direct the thinker to the realization the fact that such discoveries elucid the action of laws which, rightly co ceived, tend to the higher appreciati of the glorious work of the Creat upheld by the word of His power.

The dangers arising from the hos or sceptical temper and attitude a increased by the difficulty of determ ing how far our teaching and t popular acceptance of it can be h monized with a due consideration the views on inspiration, and especia on the character of the discipline the Old Testament dispensation whi although they have never recei definite sanction in the Church, h been long and widely prevalent.

We must recommend to the clergy cautious and industrious treatment of these points of controversy, and most earnestly press upon them the importance of taking, as the central thought of their teaching, our Lord Jesus Christ as the sacrifice for our sins, as the healer of our sinfulness, the source of all our spiritual life, and the revelation to our consciences of the law and motive of all moral virtue. To Him and to His work all the teachings of the Old Testament converge, and from Him all the teachings of the New Testament flow, in spirit, in force and in form. The work of the Church is the application and extension of the blessings of lhe Incarnation, and her teaching the developement of its doctrinal issues as contained in the Creeds of the Church.

The following resolutions were passed by the Conference upon the SANCTITY OF MARRIAGE.

"(A) That inasmuch as our Lord's words expressly forbid divorce except in the case of fornication or adultery, the Christian Church cannot recognize divorce in any other than the excepted case, or give any sanction to the marriage of any person who has been divorced contrary to this law, during the life of the other party.

"(B) That under no circumstances ought the guilty party, in the case of a divorce for fornication or adultery, to be regarded, during the lifetime of the innocent party, as a fit recipient of the blessing of the Church on marriage.

"(C) That, recognizing the fact that there always has been a difference of opinion in the Church on the question whether our Lord meant to forbid marriage to the innocent party in a divorce for adultery, the Conference recommends that the clergy should not be instructed to refuse the sacraments or other privileges of the Church to those who, under civil sanction, are thus married."

And in passing these resolutions the Bishops have given expression to the widest possible latitude of interpretation; but there are many conscientious Priests who would feel themselves unable to avail themselves of the permission accorded to them in the last paragraph.

The Protestantism of the Anglican Church.

The Romans should be the last people in the world to taunt the Anglicans with Protestantism, as they so often do. Protestant in a bad sense, Protestant after the manner of the ultra-reformers or ultra-montanes, our Church is certainly not. But in a higher or more powerful way, in an ancient and good sense, we contend that our Church is truly Protestant, and that Protestant she must continue to be.

She protests as the Eastern Churches have protested for many centuries. She protests against individualism in religion wherever she finds it, in high places or in low, in the laborer's cottage or on the Papal throne. She protests against the claims of any sect or section, imposing or insignificant, any person or persons, learned or ignorant, Pope or preacher or Inquistition daring to usurp the authority of the Catholic Church, or to tamper with or take away from or make additions to the Catholic Faith. She protests to-day, as she has protested since the time of her original foundation in this land, in behalf of the inviolability of that rule of faith, which contains the Truth, the whole Truth and nothing but the Truth, as committed to the Church by God. To this compendium of Christian Truth she clings, knowing it to be the indispensable condition of all freedom in religious thinking, and that without it all religious thinking must fall to anarchy and internecine strife. Our Church protests today as she protested long before the Reformation, in behalf of that principle of nationality which has ever been acknowledged by the Catholic Church. Protestant in this sense she has been, is, and still will be, till the unity of Christendom reflects the unity of God, so that the world may believe that the Father has sent the Son to be its Saviour.

And this protest of ours is too potent to be ignored. Rome cannot set it aside as arbitrary or capricious. It is not like the confused and often-conflicting protests of isolated individuals or opposing sects. It is the protest of a Catholic Church and Christian nation moved by the Holy Ghost to witness for that which she has been commissioned to keep. It is a part of the protest of the One Holy Church throughout all the world against the infringement of her rights, an organized and united protest, in which the poorest orphan and weakest woman joins with the Czar of. All the Russias and the Queen on whose dominions the sun never sets.

And our protest possesses the weight of antiquity as well as the strength of unity and universality. It is as primitive as it is powerful.

Of late the Romans have been in the habit of going a long way back in search of Petrine claims.

Thus the Archbishop of Paris in a recent pastoral refers to St. Paul's fortnight's stay with St. Peter (Gal. 1 : 18) to enforce modern Papal pretensions. Unfortunately for the Archbishop, the very next chapter (Gal. ii : 11) says that later on St. Paul had to withstand St. Peter to the face "because he was to be blamed." And just as St. Paul had to protest against St. Peter, so has our church, whose mission in a certain way resembles that of the former Apostle, to protest against the errors of those who say—"I am of Cephas." So ancient and even Apostolic is our Protestantism.

But this protest is not a thing glory in. It is only provisional, one day to be merged in the hi protest of the Church against world. We should rather deplo necessity than rejoice in its existe We should look forward to the when it shall oblige the Church o Peter to follow the example of Peter; the time when she shall knowledge her errors and be so firmed as to be a source of stre rather than of weakness to her sis We should look forward to the when she shall recognize their and stretch forth to them the hand of fellowship.

Moreover, while we protest like Paul in behalf of Catholicity ag sectionalism, we must not forget own weakness. "Our virtues migh proud if our faults whipped them Remembering our human feeble we shall be reminded of our di strength. It seems indeed, as if meant Churches, like individuals, work their way slowly towards ideal which He sets before them. is by reforming ourselves that we best help the Church Catholic to with the great questions of the And we have the power to do this, though we may be in some resp less than the least of all the Cath Churches, yet to our Church has b given the same grace as to her sis so that she may humbly and tha fully say with the most dogmati Apostles—"By the grace of God I what I am."

Parish Notes.

Letters have been received from Fr. Maturin, saying that he feels quite well again and is ready to work, but his advisers wish him to remain still and quiet for a time until there is no danger of a return of his former illness.

Bishop McLaren met him in Edinboro and went with him to Fountain Abbey. Bishop Whittaker thought that he was looking remarkably well.

The Bishop of Nassau is expected to preach in St. Clement's on Sunday, November 21st, on behalf of his diocese.

The Guild of St. John will hold its first meeting on the third Wednesday in October.

The Guild of St. Vincent had a most pleasant holiday at Point Pleasant.

The Rev. A. B. Sharpe gave a very interesting lecture to the Guild of the Iron Cross on the Catacombs of Rome. The Iron Cross lectures, of which this was the first of the season, will be continued on the second Tuesday in each month.

Father Hall desires to thank the lady who so kindly sent him the number of the magazine as requested last month.

The members of the Guild of the Holy Child will meet every Saturday morning in the choir room to learn music and singing. A professional lady has most kindly volunteered to give them instruction.

The boys' Iron Cross Register has proved a great success and the boys have met each Wednesday evening in large numbers in the school room and have learned singing from the same teacher. The president, Dr. Garrett, has devoted his evenings to this work and has accepted the position of Superintendent in the Sunday School.

The prospects of the school are very good. Three gentlemen have come forward and shown their willingness to teach and the effect of this is already felt in the school. The afternoon children's service now takes place at half past two, and the children go to the school room immediately after and are taught from three to four o'clock.

The Children's Sunday-school Festival took place at Burlington, on Thursday, September 20th, in the grounds of the college by the kind permission of Mr. Riley. The thanks of the party are due to Miss McAllister, the principal of the ladies' college for kindly lending tables, &c., on the occasion. The children never had a more enjoyable day.

More teachers are wanted in the Sunday School, both ladies and gentlemen. Are there not a few men in the parish who will, for Christ's sake, take up this really self-sacrificing work, and strive to fit themselves for it? Sunday-school work needs thoughtful, careful, diligent, and persevering men. The ladies of our church who help in this way have done a work which will never be forgotton by the children, or by the clergy, and many of them have worked beyond their strength in the instruction of the children.

Miss Margaret Vandevoord, whose name will be found on another page, deserves to be long remembered in our prayers for her good work in the Infant School. In spite of great difficulties and constant pain, she persevered to the last in teaching the little ones, because the Priest in charge could find no one willing or ready to take her place. She went for a short time last winter to Florida, but not being able to have there the church privileges which she enjoyed at home, she returned to the city and resumed her place as teacher of the Infant Sunday School until the summer came, when she went to try and recover her health among the pines of New Jersey, and there she entered into her rest. May she rest in peace, and may perpetual light shine upon this faithful servant of God and helper in our work.

A number of ladies and gentlemen organized under the name of the Prospect Club, being interested in the work of the Guild of the Iron Cross, have arranged to perform "The Cricket on the Hearth" and "Sweethearts," at the Amateur Drawing Rooms, Fortieth and Locust streets, on the evening of Thursday, November 15th. The proceeds will be given for the local work of the Guild of the Iron Cross. Tickets, 75 cents and 50 cents will be on sale shortly.

Dispensary Notes.

The new building seems to have given considerable impetus to the growth of the clinics. We moved in on the middle of May. Since then the work has been as follows, compared with the same months of former years:—

Total visits paid during	1885–6.	1886–7.	1887–8.
May	124	269	496
June,	146	294	462
July,	142	244	698
August,	187	310	581

It is expected that the special Dispensary for the Diseases of Women will be reopened by the 1st of October. The "Workers for the Master" are busy collecting to pay the semi-annual interest and begin the sinking fund. The Vice President will be glad to have more take collecting cards.

Who will volunteer to make us one or two large screens?

Memorial to Father Sheppard.

The following is taken from the Cape Argus. It is thought that some who knew Father Sheppard in this country would like to contribute to the Memorial School which it is proposed to build in connection with the Society's Mission among the colored population in Capetown. Father Hall or Father Field will be glad to receive any offerings for this purpose. "A meeting of the Vestry of S. Philip's district was held on Thursday evening in S. Philip's School Chapel, for the passing of the Church Accounts, for the election of Church officers, and for the raising of funds for the erection of an Infants' School in memory of the late Father Sheppard. The chair was occupied by the Rev. Father Puller, and on the platform were the Rev. W. U. Watkins, B. A., Messrs. James Gabriel, H. G. Branscombe, and the retiring Church Officers. There was a large audience present. The meeting then proceeded to the election of Church Officers, when Mr. James Gabriel was elected to the office of People's Warden, while the chairman nominated Mr. Thomas as the Clergyman's Warden. Mr. Gabriel moved: 'That the Vestry of S. Philip's School Chapel, now for the first time in meeting assembled sinces the lamented death of the Rev. E. G. Sheppard, M. A., their pastor, desire to place upon record their sorrow and the deep sense of the great loss they have sustained in his removal by death, the loss of a true and sympathizing friend, and an eminent servant of God; and while submitting with resignation to the stroke of affliction they lift their hearts with gratitude to Almighty God for the successful work of His departed servant, so largely due to his self-denial, unstinting self-sacrifice, his devotion to duty, and to the humility and kindness of his Christian character.' Mr. Gabriel said it was saddening to him to move such a resolution. He, who but yesterday stood amongst them, their pastor and friend, had been removed by the hand of Death. To all of them, his death and burial seemed as a mere dream. Those had known him by his works, by his words, by the humility and simplicity of his character, and by that devotion to duty so essential to success in the work of the ministry, and yet, as Christians, they were not sorrowing without hope, for their pastor had not gone from memory or from love, but to their Father's house. He hoped the resolution would be put in silence to the meeting, and that they would all rise who approved of it. The Rev. Chairman having briefly supported the resolution, the whole male congregation rose in silence to carry it. The chairman then stated that the meeting would now resolve itself into one for the erection of a memorial to the late Father Sheppard. He stated that it had long been the object of the late Father Sheppard to erect an Infant School on an adjoining site, not only through his affection for children, but because the present School Chapel was altogether too small for the accommodation of the large number of children who attended there. Moreover, they had to refuse over a hundred children through lack of accommodation and who would be provided for by the erection of the proposed new building. He stated that he had received an amount of £350 from Father Benson for that purpose, and he hoped to raise £100 or more by the aid of collectors from the congregation. The names of collectors and subscribers would be taken at the conclusion of the meeting, and he hoped many would respond. Mr. Gabriel moved: 'That a standing Committee be appointed for the collection of subscriptions in aid of the amount in hand for the erection of the Infant School in memory of the late Fr. Sheppard.' This having been duly seconded and carried, and a committee appointed, Mr. Gabriel moved that the thanks and heartfelt gratitude of this meeting be tendered to the Rev. Father Benson for the deep interest evinced by the Society of S. John the Evangelist in the spiritual and educational work of the district of S. Philip; and for the supply of able and devoted clergy, who are carrying on our blessed Lord's work in this part of His vineyard. A number of subscribers then came forward, and about £35 was subscribed in the room."

Michaelmas.

With the Festival of the Angels the churches begin to fill up with an entirely different order of beings for whom the angels have been doing duty all the summer.

The worship of the church is never neglected by them and it is a consolation to remember that in spite of our poor, weak prayers and wandering thoughts these intelligent, pure spirits do make up for our deficiencies and serve God without distraction. We owe them a debt which we cannot easily repay, but at least we may remember them. The women are bidden by St. Paul to veil themselves because of the angels in the churches. The angels present our prayers with the incense, the symbol of the mediation of Christ. With angels and archangels and with all the company of Heaven we unite in the worship of the church and when we leave it they remain. The church is never forsaken by them. We may thank God that however much the cold deadness of Protestantism may keep the churches unused by men while the doors are closed yet there is still a worship going on within, the worship of the Holy Angels adoring the God whom men forsake. A man is never alone in church. He may go in at any moment and there are crowds of angels to welcome him and join with him in prayer. How much more real men's prayers would be if they could realize and remember this, but men do not think, and without thought no great truth can be realized. It requires thought and practice to realize the presence of God or the company of His angels everywhere, but in the church at least it should be easy, and the thought should make people reverent, modest and quiet.

Worship.

People commonly speak of "attending a place of worship." Sometimes, no doubt, the place in question is one where worship is carried on, and those who use the above-mentioned phrase are true worshippers. But more often those who attend a place of worship really attend a sermon, or a sacred concert, or a fashionable gathering, and so do their best to make the so-called place of worship nothing more than a lecture hall, a concert room or a drawing room.

But worship, in the first place, is something which the worshipper gives, not anything he receives. This is plain from the common use of the word. Thus, in the old form of the marriage service, the man says to the woman, "With my body I thee worship," meaning that he devotes his body to her sole use in married chastity. Again, our Lord says to the man who obeys his precept of humility, "Thou shalt have worship in the presence of them which sit at meat with thee," referring to the respect in the minds of the company.

The wise men worshipped the Holy Child, offering the gifts which they had brought, and which signified the submission and reverence which they felt towards the Infant King. Thus it is plain that worship is something given by the worshipper, and further that the something may be of various kinds according to circumstances. But when we talk of worship now, we mostly mean the worship of God, which is the subject of this article.

What is it then that we are to give to God when we worship Him. The answer cannot be doubtful; it must be the best we have, because the highest possible honor is due to God, and the best of every kind that we have, because all our possessions are His gift. Thus we are to worship Him with our bodies, in the words we speak, the reverence of the position we adopt, and the actions we use, such as kneeling, standing, bowing, crossing, etc., with our minds by making acts of faith in Him, with our hearts by acts of love, with our possessions by the beauty and costliness of the furniture of the church, and the grace and significance of the ritual in which our worship is set forth, with our wills by resolving to obey Him, and doing our best to carry out our resolutions.

This is what we should do every time we go to church; this is, in fact, the true reason for going; sermons, music, and the meeting of friends are all good things; but even if there were no sermons and no music, and we were strangers to all the congregation, it would be our duty to go to church to worship God in the way and place He has appointed.

We do not want learning or wisdom or even great holiness in order to worship God. What we do want is love, which like the sacred fire of the sacrifices of the Old Testament may lift up our hearts into the presence of God with the sweet smelling savor which He accepts. The heavenly host "keep silence before the Throne," and our best worship is in like manner often offered in silence: though we too, like the Elders in the Book of Revelations, may rejoice to cast down our best treasures—the crown and perfection of all we have and are—before the throne, and join in the song of the heavenly host as it gives praise and glory to the Blessed Trinity.

Those who will remember what worship is, will thus avoid the meanness which is so common among us of going into God's presence thinking only of what they may get from Him, not what they can give, and they will exp... rience in the highest sense the joy of ... cheerful giver," they will be true wo... shippers, and not hearers only, and ... churches will be "places of worshi... in a true and real sense. Child Religion:

What it is, and How to Teach it.

AN ADDRESS TO SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHERS

By the Rev. A. C. Thynne, Honorary Canon of Truro Cathedral, and Rector of Kilkhampton.

I. What is Child Religion?

Wordsworth says:

"Children are blessed and powerful . . .
Their world lies more justly balanced,
Partly at their feet, and part far from them."

"A child," says Miss Montgomery, "lives no doubt in his surroundings, throws himself heart and soul into the pleasures or the sorrows of the moment, and is immersed in the interests of the path which lies straight before him. But this is not all. Talk to any child for a few moments, and see if in the description of his hopes and joys some such phrases as these do not occur—'When I get big,' 'When I am a man,' 'Some day when I am older.' He is looking for something else, he is reaching on to some state he knows not of, but which is to be more perfect than his present one, so perhaps the land which is very far off is more present to him than it is to those of riper years, not so much more shadowy than any other part of the transcendent future lying before him.

This is a careful working out of Wordworth's idea—

"Partly at their feet, and part far from them," and may help us to understand child religion.

"Partly at their feet" this mystery of religion lies with children; it is clear to them; they apply it in strange and very practical ways. Miss Montgomery describes a little boy as refusing to take French to his French nurse on Sunday because French was a lesson, and he did not do lessons on Sunday; or ...

another time as crying bitterly because Uncle Charley was sure to go to hell. Uncle Charley had told a lie, and therefore would be sure to go to hell. A child never argues or reasons. He believes, takes upon trust; he cannot understand; he must trust, and so when his faith receives a shock he is in despair for a time.

Again, "Part is far from them," says Wordsworth; so not only the possibilities of life which lie so far off to a little child are shrouded in mystery, and an object for the exercise of his vivid imagination, but also the great hereafter. It is not more shadowy than his rest. "When I am a man" is not much more distant than "When I am in heaven;" "When I shall see mother again;" or, "When I shall find little sister, and play with her again." It all lies far off; but in imagination it is very real.

So a great deal of child religion is made up of faith and hope, and the greatest grace is seldom wanting. Alas! for the child or man where love is dead; but in every child the strength of these graces will vary, and it becomes the teacher's work to ascertain, to strengthen, and correct each of the varying characters which are brought before him or her in class; for of course no one can claim even the name of "teacher" who looks upon a class merely as a class, and does not seek to know, and understand, and guide each individual character before him; and the variety of characters is wonderful even among brothers and sisters.

Now the child religion of each child will differ just as the different graces of faith, hope and, love are strong or weak in each.

1. The character in which love is strong will be the most attractive, the most easily influenced. I speak of loving children in the sense of amiable, gentle, affectionate children. I am not speaking of those with great capacities for love and hate, strong characters, which are exceptional characters always, but of that large class of affectionate, loving children to whom loving is pleasant, whether teacher or companion. These are generally the weakest characters we have to deal with, and the pleasantest. They look up with loving eyes into your face for a smile, and smile in return; they don't learn their lessons well, but they are always sorry at once, and even ready to cry at the thought that they have not learned them; they love the stories you tell them, and give sweet answers about the prettiest parts of the Bible history. You can influence them when in class with perfect ease; the difficulty with them is to make that influence a lasting one. Now when we consider that three-fourths of our scholars come under this heading—of loving, affectionate children—it is apparent that the character and nature of their religious capacities should be well considered. Love is the leading feature in such children, and you find them weak or strong in proportion as this love is strengthened and steadied by hope and faith.

Hope will give to a loving child a strength of purpose; and as true hope always implies action, it will help the child to be more than merely responsively loving for the moment; it will bring before him an aim an object in life.

Let me try and illustrate this. You are teaching your class the story of the Lord Jesus coming as a boy to the great church at Jerusalem for the first time. You will have spoken of the boyish wonder and awe which filled His human heart; you have made your children follow Him through the temple courts for those three days, lingering in the court of the Gentiles, or seated in the adjacent "chamber of teaching" to hear the Word expounded by the great and wise; you will have shown Him to them seated at the doctor's feet, His reverence of face, the beautiful look of fathomless intelligence in His eyes, His quiet, solemn answers to their questions, opening up fresh and unlooked-for truths from His Father's Book—His own Book. Look at your children. The simple loving child will take in the beauty of the scene—the kindness of Jesus, His humility, His knowledge, His love, as you bring out each virtue; will be almost moved to tears at the meeting of His mother and Joseph with Him in the temple; will think more of the sorrow of Mary—"Behold, thy father and I have sought thee sorrowing," than of the deep meaning of the answer, "I must be about my Father's business." But the child who has hope as well as love will at once see his own part in such a scene. "I should like to understand the Bible as Jesus did;" "I hope I shall some day;" "I should like to be able to answer all the difficult questions;" "I hope I shall."

You see that in the one class of mind only sentiment is aroused—good feelings and interest—all valuable as far as they go; but in the other there is an application of the lesson to the scholar's mind—partly selfish, it is true, partly ambitious, but still an application which encourages high aims and purpose, and raises the character.

But if the child have the third virtue or grace of which we spoke, viz., faith, it will be affected still more usefully and thoroughly; for faith makes it believe the lesson which you draw from the scene to be true, and adopts it.

Thus the loving child is pleased and happy at the beauty of the scene and the goodness of Jesus. The child who loves and hopes is pleased at the beauty of the scene and the goodness of Jesus but also hopes to imitate that goodness and produce that effect itself. The child in whom there is also faith believes as well the teacher's lesson; and when you say, "My child, this early life of goodness and obedie leads on to a true knowledge of G See Jesus for twelve years, loving, o dient, holy; see Him now in the te ple, full of learning and knowledge the Bible. So in your case, if you l God's word, are obedient and l you will come to God's house the proper age as He did, in a w you have never been before; you w be asked questions, and have to a swer. Jesus, as a Jewish boy, reach the first great epoch of His life twelve years old, the age at which was said, that Moses left Pharo daughter, that Samuel heard the vo of God, that Solomon gave his f wise judgment, and Josiah dreamed his great reform; the age at which Jewish boys of all ranks were free, a yet bound to learn a trade; the a at which they were considered wort to wear the Phylacteries, and began acquire spiritual perception and pow So you look forward to the day wh you are to be considered old enou to be confirmed, to receive the spir ual life in all its sevenfold power."

So you speak to your children, a the child who has faith, as well as l and hope, believes you, believes in t promise as applied to himself, and a cepts it as a duty to prepare for And as duty and not sentiment is t object of education, we see at on that the highest type of child-relig is that in which love and hope a mixed with faith, where affection a strong purpose are tempered and e alted by an abiding sense of duty.

A letter from Fr. Maturin tells of his travels in Scotland, and a more recent letter says that he is ordered by the physician to take more relaxation and change before he settles down to any study or work. He is greatly disappointed that he cannot be with us on St. Clement's Day, but he certainly will be with us in spirit, and will pray for a blessing on all the members of the parish.

COWLEY, ST. JOHN, Oct. 18, 1888.

MY DEAR ——:

I am writing by the date you told me, I hope in time for the Magazine. I was very sorry my last letter was late, but feared it would be. I shall only write a few lines now to say how sorry I am to be obliged again to be away at our Dedication Festival. I had hoped I might have been back by then, but I find it will be impossible. I thought I would try some work this week, and gave a day's retreat, but found myself, I am sorry to say, scarcely able to get through with it, so I am afraid I must look upon my return as postponed till Easter. I shall, I hope, stay on here quietly now, and not go about any more for the present. I need not say that I shall, all except my body, be with you all during the Festival, and that at that time the parish will not be often out of my mind. I hope the Festival may be a very successful one and may give many a good start at the beginning of winter. I do not think our Festival could come at a better time of the year than it does, those long summers in America often necessitating a strong tonic for many before they can right themselves for the winter.

All those who know him will deeply regret the reason of Mr. Bland's absence at the Festival, being ordered to Colorado for his health. Though the youngest member of the vestry, he has in the short time he has been with us made us feel the value of his faithful and willing service, and we trust ere long he may be amongst us again.

We must not let the Festival pass without thanking God for the progress of the scheme towards paying off the debt. This, which seemed at our last Festival an almost hopeless task, we may now look upon as an almost accomplished fact. There can be no more lasting benefit to the parish than the paying off of the debt, and I am told that hitherto payments have been most prompt according to the pledges. It has been most gratifying to me to see the earnest and self-denying way in which the congregation have taken this matter up. Already the mortgage on the school building ($8000) has been paid, and I believe $2000 on the Clergy House will be paid before St. Clement's Day, leaving only $2000 more besides the ground-rent. It would not be becoming in me to thank the members of the Vestry, especially the one through whose untiring zeal this work has been effected.

We have also during the past year purchased the building opposite the church for the Dispensary, and as a first step towards a Hospital, and thus, this, the most wide-spreading of the charities of the parish, has been put on a firmer basis and has before it a larger sphere of usefulness.

Praying that God may ever bless the parish and all who are connected with it, and give to it and them all that is for their good, and that if it be His will I may not be absent another Festival.

Ever yours affectionately,
B. W. MATURIN.

Parish Notes.

The Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of Nassau will preach on Sunday, Nov. 18th, and we hope that he may be with us for our Festival.

The Festival of S. Clement, Nov. 23d, will be observed as usual, by singing the First Vespers at 8 o'clock on Thursday evening, Nov. 22d. There will be special Celebrations of the Holy Communion at 5, 6, 7, 8, 8.30 and 11 o'clock on S. Clement's Day. The music at the 11 o'clock Celebration will be Martin in C. In the evening there will be the Procession of Guilds at 8 o'clock, and every member of any Guild connected with the parish should consider it a religious duty to attend. The sermon on this occasion will be preached by the Rev. Algernon S. Crapsey, Rector of S. Andrew's Church, Rochester, N. Y.

The Guilds of S. John and of the Iron Cross will meet in the Chapel, the Guild of S. Vincent in the Acolytes' room, the Guilds of S. Christopher, the Holy Cross, S. Mary, S. Barnabas, S. Martha, the Holy Child, and the Altar Guild will meet in the Sunday-school room. All should try to be present not later than 7.30. Visiting Clergy will meet in the Vestry room.

On Saturday, Nov. 24th, all who have been confirmed in the past two years are requested to attend a special service in the chapel.

On the Sunday in the Octave the same music will be sung as on S. Clement's Day.

On Monday evening the Parish Tea will take place at 8 o'clock, followed by speeches on Church questions.

On Tuesday there will be a Festival meeting of the Guild of the Iron Cross, when all the Branches in the neighborhood are invited. The Office will be sung in church, after which there will be refreshments and speeches in S. Clement's Hall.

Thursday in the Octave, Nov. 29th, is Thanksgiving Day, and there will be Celebrations of the Holy Communion at 7, 8, 9 and 11, with sermon by the Rev. F. Hall, Provincial S. S. J. E.

The Children's Festival will take place in the evening.

A poor widow, in great need of money is anxious to sell her Parlor Organ. In good condition. Price thirty-five (35) dollars; cost seventy-five (75). Apply to Rev. Fr. Convers.

Fr. Convers would be glad to hear of vacant positions for a Designer, Tailor, Stenographer, Copyist, Laborer, Clerk, Laundress, Seamstress, Charwoman and Nursemaid.

As there is no complete set of S. Clement's Magazine either at the Clergy House or in the Parish Library, any one having spare numbers of the following issues will confer a favor by handing them to Father Convers, or sending them to him at 2026 Cherry street.

The Entertainment by the Prospect Club at the Drawing Rooms, 40th and Locust, on behalf of the Guild of the Iron Cross, promises to be very successful. Very few tickets are left. The Entertainment takes place on November 15th, at 8 P. M.

Volume VII of St. Clement's Magazine commences with this number. Many of the subscriptions expired with the last number and should be promptly renewed.

Will persons subscribing for the Magazine enclose the amount of their subscriptions with name and address in an envelope marked for the Magazine. By so doing many mistakes will be avoided and a correct list of subscribers be obtained. Last year some subscriptions were received through third parties and either wrong name or address given, so that while the Magazine was sent to that address it was not received by the subscribers. A number of complaints have been made but not having been sent to the publisher the error was not corrected because he was not notified.

The Magazine is mailed to all mail subscribers on the Monday after the first Sunday in the month, and subscribers not receiving their Magazines promptly by mail are requested to give notice at once.

Subscribers not wishing to renew will confer an especial favor by sending notice. In some cases the Magazine has been sent, and not till after the second notice of the expiration of the subscription has word been sent that they did not wish to renew their subscription.

A little attention on the part of subscribers will save all parties much annoyance.

Subscriptions 50 cents per year (or if by mail, 62 cents). All subscriptions will be acknowledged.

Sinking Fund.

We omitted in our last number to inform the subscribers to this Fund that the last payment, amounting to $5000, on the $10,000 mortgage on the Parish building, was made on the 13th of August.

The $2000 earned by the ladies through their fair at the Colonnade Hotel, in the fall of 1886, was applied towards this mortgage; $3000 was paid out of the proceeds of collections from this new Fund, received since its organization, less than a year ago, and by this last payment the entire mortgage has been satisfied and returned to the Archives of S. Clement's in the hands of our Accounting Warden.

Our Parish building is now free from all debt. Before the end of this year $2000 will be paid on account of the mortgage on the Clergy house, and by Easter this $4000 mortgage will also have been paid off and cancelled.

Letter from Father Maturin.

LINCOLNSHIRE, Sept. 18th, 1888.

MY DEAR ——:

I have only just realized that if I am to get a letter off in time for the October Magazine, it must be posted without delay; I am afraid after all that it will be late, but I shall do my best and hope it may be in time.

I have been going about so much and have seen so many places that I find it rather hard to keep my mind clear as to where I have been and where I have not been, somewhat like one of Cook's tourists on a journey through Italy, "We go to Rome tomorrow do we not?" "Oh, no!" was the answer, "We were in Rome yesterday."

I may be forgiven when I tell you that within the last couple of months I have been over upwards of three thousand miles, so that I have not let the ground grow under my feet. It would be quite impossible for me to give you any description of the many places I have seen. I have been over a good part of Scotland and ransacked every nook and corner of England. From Callander, where I think I last wrote, we drove through the Trosachs and crossed Loch Katrine and Loch Lomond, places all familiar from Scott's poems, familiar that is in name, but I am obliged to confess that in his descriptions he drew largely upon his poetic imagination. From Loch Lomond an hour or two in the train brought us to Glasgow, an uninteresting featureless town, which neither the exhibition nor Her Majesty's approaching visit could keep us in a moment longer than was necessary. The cathedral there is interesting and not badly kept, though, like all the old churches in Scotland, in the hands of the Presbyterians. From Glasgow we had a most beautiful sail down the Clyde and through the Lochs to Oban, a sail of nearly twelve hours, which not even the large crowd on the steamer could spoil of its pleasure—at one place we had to leave the steamer and get packed in as closely as we could fit upon a canal boat.

I should recommend any one who wants in a short space to see what Scotland can give, to take that trip to Oban and then take an excursion from Oban to Iona and Staffa. Excellent steamers make this trip every day through the summer, going round the Island of Mull and landing passengers at these two places. It is altogether about one hundred and thirty miles and takes nearly the whole day. We had most perfect weather, a cloudless day and a sea like glass. After about four hours sail we anchored a little way off from Iona and were taken ashore in boats, being packed about thirty or forty in a boat.

Iona has one of the most ancient churches in Britain upon it, dating back probably to the Seventh Century. The island itself is only about three miles long by one mile broad, but it is full of interest. Here S. Columba landed on Whitsun-eve, A. D. 565 and founded a Monastery to which the whole of Northern Scotland and the Islands surrounding it owe their Christianity. I believe missions went from there even as far as Iceland. For many generations the Scotch and Irish Kings came to Iona to be crowned and the stone upon which they were crowned is now in Westminster Abbey, forming part of the coronation chair. Many of the Scotch Kings lie buried there. S. Columba, I need hardly remind you, was an Irishman (what would the old world or the new world do without that great race?) The story of his coming to Iona is interesting. Some quarrel had arisen between the followers of S. Columba and of S. Finian about a copy of the Scriptures, in which several people had been killed. (I am sorry to find that as far back as the Seventh Century, the Irish used to occasionally disagree, and to settle their disagreements by a fight.) The result was that S. Columba, in penitence for being the cause of bloodshed, left Ireland with twelve of his Monks in a small wicker ship covered with ox hide, to go where God might lead him, but where he should never see his native land again. At first he landed at Oronsay in the Highlands of Scotland, but from the top of the cliff, as he scanned the horizon he could just see Ireland, for the day was very clear, and so he must go further—miles away to the North he sees the Island of Iona where he goes, a perpetual exile from his native land, choosing it when he found that from the highest point in the Island, Ireland could not be seen. The story goes, that when in after years he was constrained to return to his own country to be present at a Synod of the Bishops, he came with his face covered, that he might not even feast his eye with the sight of the land he loved so dearly. The original place of his burial is shown in a small church on the Island, though I believe his body was removed to Ireland some time after his death. It was strange to think that such a quiet isolated spot, separated from the world, could be the centre of so great missionary work, but the methods of those days were different from these. The foundations were laid in quiet and silence and prayer. Men could go out from their places of solitude, where they lived alone unto God, and away from the world, to bring their message to the world from which they had fled, with a power that nothing could resist. There are the ruins of what is called the cathedral, with some of the monastic buildings and two beautiful crosses, one standing in front of the cathedral; there are also the ruins of a convent and of a small church lying a little way from the cathedral. Iona is separated from the Island of Mull, which is quite a large Island by quite a narrow strip of water; one could imagine S. Columba and his Monks crossing over here and thence to the main land. Though little remains of what was built in his time, yet the line of coast mountains and water is the same that he looked on year after year as he lived out his life of penitence and prayer and now he has his reward.

From Oban we went up the Caledonian Canal to Inverness. Stopping on the way to drive through the pass of Glencoe, at the entrance to the pass buried in the mountains I saw the house of the Bishop of Argyle and the Isles, where Mr. Mackonochie was staying when he died. I saw the mountains over which he had walked some twenty miles in the snow when he was lost. We left there on the Saturday evening and went a few miles further to a place called Banaire, where we spent the Sunday. I found a most exquisite little church at Fort William at the opposite side of the Loch, and on Monday we went on to Inverness, reaching there about 6 o'clock in the evening.

I must stop now if I am to have any hope of you getting this in time for the October number. I think I have taken in enough of fresh air and change to last me the rest of my life, and I have been observing a most faithful and vigorous rest from work. I hope I may be able to make up for it before long.

I have just had a letter from Mr. Rivinus, telling me that the entire debt on the school building had been paid. Deo Gratias. God will surely bless the self-sacrifice of those who have given so readily and worked so hard to take off that load of debt. A few years ago it seemed quite hopeless, but already we are beginning to look forward to it as a fact soon to be accomplished. Mr. R. also tells me that by Easter he hopes to have paid off the mortgage on the Clergy house, which leaves only the ground rent. With our many other expenses $12,000 in a year and a half is not doing badly.

Ever very truly yours,

B. W. MATURIN.

Child Religion:

WHAT IT IS, AND HOW TO TEACH IT.

AN ADDRESS TO SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHERS

By the Rev. A. C. THYNNE, Honorary Canon of Truro Cathedral, and Rector of Kilkhampton.

All children have some sense of religion; in some it is more strongly developed than in others. But in all there is some; for the childish mind is reverent. We have to ascertain the quality of that religion, and to guide it when it is strong and draw it out when it is weak. But before I pass on to consider my second head, "How to teach it," let me ask you to have a perfectly clear idea of what religion is and what it is not. Religion is duty, not sentiment; sentiment is like a mushroom, very nice in its way. Duty, like an oak, lasts, and is useful. Sentiment—I mean religious sentiment—is very easily aroused in children, and is worth very little, and often leads on, if encouraged, to vanity and conceit. "Not a novice," says S. Paul, "lest being puffed up we fall into the snare of the devil."

Sentiment and emotion lead on to conceit and parade of self, and then, by a short step, to unreality and deceit. Sentiment is easily excited; duty is most difficult to inculcate. What wonder if teachers in a country where the population is readily moved by religious sentiment adopt the easier and more popular style.

I wish to press this subject upon your attention with all the emphasis in my power; for it seems to me to be of vital importance.

Just consider what are the two great evils or vices with which we have to deal. Can anyone doubt that they are impurity and deceit? What are the two virtues which we should desire most to inculcate? Surely, chastity and truthfulness.

I desire to call your attention to this point. We are teachers of the country's youth, teachers of religion. We can encourage religious sentiment, or teach religious duty, and I ask, Can the two great sins which I have named exist alongside of religious sentiment? Alas! we know only too well that they can, and not only among children, but among men and women. Miserable truth, well known to all who have to deal with souls, secret vice and religious sentiment run often as it were together in parallel lines, and, strange to say, the victim is very often for the time utterly in earnest in both—in religion and in vice. In sin one day, abased in repentance the next, rejoicing in religious emotion the third, only to fall again; and then the poor weak character grows weaker and weaker, and excuses himself to himself with the thought that he is unlike anyone else, his case is peculiar—a favorite snare of Satan—that no one was ever so tempted, and that, after all, he cannot be out of God's favor, or God would not give him such warm religious feelings.

Forgive me if I seem to be preaching a sermon, but by the love and purity of Jesus I beseech you to bear with me; and, for His dear sake, work wisely, carefully, and zealously, in the strength of the Holy Ghost, to help your children to that life of duty alongside of which vice cannot run. Duty is like water to the fire of evil desire; duty puts truth in the forefront, and admits of no commerce with deceit.

II. HOW TO TEACH CHILD-RELIGION.

Bishop —— is always practical in his utterances, and his words worthy of study. In speaking to Sunday-school teachers he pressed upon them the duty of giving, not the blind and the lame, to God, but their best; i. e., study and careful preparation. I should have to travel too far and wide if I took in this part of the subject. True, it is of paramount importance; but may I not take for granted that you have counted the cost and are giving your best?

There are three things which every teacher must study if he is going to be a good teacher. First, to know your children. Second, to be just to your children. Third, to influence your children.

First a word about yourself. What are you? To use Mrs. Herbert's words in speaking to district visitors, "Are you an active, amiable person with a fund of energy and common sense, anxious to spend and to be spent for your poorer neighbor's good? This is well as far as it goes, but it only covers half—and by far the least important half—of the ground. We must go deeper down than this, and ask, 'Are you going to work to help the minds only, or to try and win the souls of your children?'

"Remember," she continues, "it is a law of God that nothing can change. Nature speaks to nature, but only grace to grace. Your position, your education, your pleasantness . . . cannot carry you over the barrier that divides the natural from the spiritual. If you shelter yourself behind the old worn-out plea, 'It is the business of the clergy, and not mine, to speak to people's souls.' Very well. I do not say that you will do no good; for God accepts every act of ministry, even the cup of cold water given in the name of Jesus. But quite understand that you are missing altogether the higher aim of reading and speaking to and helping the life of the soul." With these splendid words of warning to ourselves let us approach the consideration of how to teach.

I. The Sunday-school teacher must know his children. There is no such thing as a stupid class, or a clever class—a nasty class, or a nice class. Let us remember this: There are before me six, twelve, twenty souls—six, twelve, twenty pictures of God for me to study; for He made them in the likeness of God. Look at them with reverence. Not one of those children but has [illegible] sin to answer for than I. Ah me! [illegible] world has come between

> "[My] soul and Christ; the gold is dim.
> The floor is soiled He made so clean:
> Is this a dwelling fit for Him?"

I have to learn each, and each is different from all the rest. We cannot learn to know them all at once. We look at the outsides—the faces, the hair, the clothes, and form some conclusions about their homes and bringing up, their fancies, their habits. It will be some time before we know each little heart and its ways. The variety of characters is endless, but each God's child.

> "O soul, O soul, rejoice!
> Thou art God's child indeed for all thy sinning;
> A poor weak child, yet His, and worth the winning,
> With Saviour eyes and voice."
> —G. MCDONALD.

Advent.

The Season of Advent has not received a proper share of attention in the Church, and the distractions of an approaching Christmas are so many that it is very difficult for people to make it a truly penitential season. The world keeps Christmas and the Church keeps it with the world instead of drawing people from the world to keep a real Christmas with our Blessed Lord. The approach of our Lord as Judge of the world is one of the stern realities of life which it is the fashion to put out of sight. The early Christians looked for Him to come very soon, even at any moment, but after the many ages that have passed people are ready to sneer and to say, just as He foretold that they would, "Where is the promise of his coming, for all things continue as they were." There are many signs of that loss of faith which our Lord predicted as a sign of His coming: "When the Son of Man cometh shall He find faith on the earth?" Let all the children of the Church think of death which is certain for all and after that the Judgment particular and general and after that either Heaven or Hell.

Parish Notes.

The Services in Advent are specially arranged that every one may have an opportunity of attending at least one Meditation or Instruction during the week.

On Sunday mornings in Advent F. Field will preach a course of sermons on "Loving God" with the heart, mind, soul and strength.

In the afternoons there will be special addresses to men only at 4 o'clock by the Rev. A. B. Sharpe, on (1) The Ideal Man, (2) The Honest Man, (3) The Pure Man, (4) The Strong Man.

F. Longridge will continue his Bible Class on Monday afternoons at 4. There will be a Men's Meeting in Chapel on Tuesday evenings at 7.30, before the meeting of the Guild of the Iron Cross.

On Wednesday F. Convers will conduct the Meditations at noon.

The Meditations on Friday will continue as usual.

On Saturday evenings there will be a service of Preparation for Christmas Communion. The Instructions will be based on the Church Catechism and will be open to all who are Confirmed or who are thinking of Confirmation.

The Dedication Festival was bright and enthusiastic and gave us much to be thankful for.

On St. Clement's Day there were Celebrations at 5, 6, 7, 8 and 8.30, and High Celebration at 11. The number of the Communicants at these services is given in another column. The music at the High Celebration was Martin in C., a work lately published by the new Organist of St. Paul's Cathedral, London, and was rendered by the choir in a manner which did great credit both to the members and the Choir Master, Mr. Tipton. Many strangers who were present spoke of the deep impression made upon them by the solemnity and reverence of this service. The preacher was the Rev. Dr. Pelham Williams, who spoke in terms of eulogy of the past work of St. Clement's and indicated some of the possibilities that lay before it in the future. In the evening the usual Procession of Guilds took place, and the Rev. A. Crapsey, Rector of St. Andrew's, Rochester, was the preacher. He spoke of the value and importance of the principle of organization, as represented, by the whole Church System and as the prominent characteristic of Guilds.

On Saturday evening a meeting of all Confirmed within the last two years was held, and was well attended. This meeting will be continued every Saturday throughout Advent, and it is hoped will prove helpful to all who are able to attend.

On Sunday in the Octave the Celebrations were at 7, 8, 9, and the High Celebration at 11. The music was that used at the High Celebration on St. Clement's Day. The preacher in the morning was the Rev. T. Curtis, Missionary Priest in South Carolina. He spoke of the stability of the Sacramental life of the Church. The evening service was the usual Sunday Evensong, and closed with the Te Deum. The preacher was the Rev. A. B. Sharpe, late Vicar of St. Agnes, Newmarket, England.

On Monday evening the Parish Tea was held in the school room, and was fairly attended considering the bad weather. After tea Father Field spoke of the return of Father Maturin, which he said might be hoped for at Easter, he hoped that he might be with them at the next Parish Tea. F. Field asked that all the people in the Parish would try to take advantage of the number of Instructions and Meditations provided for them during Advent, and try to bring some new stranger in each week. St. Clement's is a Church (he said) which entertains strangers, and while he did not like to see people talking in the Vestibule, yet there was always an opportunity for any of the congregation to speak to any of the clergy as they went out. The Priests were always glad to welcome any who wished to speak to them.

The Rev. C. J. Curtis, a Missionary Priest in South Carolina, spoke of the influence of the work of St. Clement's which had penetrated to the backwoods, and said that he felt quite at home here among men wearing the Iron Cross, for he was himself a Priest Associate and out in the backwoods they had a Branch of sixty members. The members could not often meet together, but went to their work wearing the Iron Cross of which they were trying to be worthy. Mr. Curtis said that St. Clement's Pulpit and the publications of the Iron Cross were read constantly by Priests and people in South Carolina.

The Rev. A. B. Sharpe, now working in the Parish, gave an answer to the question so often asked of him, What do you think of America?

Father Convers then spoke of the Donation Day of the Dispensary and of the Missionary Society, and was glad to be able to say that more had been given to the Dispensary on this one day than in the whole week last year, and that everything looked very promising as regarded the future of the work of the Dispensary.

The Guild of St. John has reorganized and elected a Lay President to preside at meetings in case of the absence of the Warden of the Guild. The first work of the Guild has been the payment of a debt upon the Workingmen's Club, which dissolved about a year ago. The Guild has also undertaken the arrangements, advertising, etc., for the special addresses to men only, on Sunday afternoons in Advent.

The Guild of the Iron Cross at St. Clement's has now 390 members on its roll and nearly 700 in Philadelphia and Camden. The Guild has undertaken to bury the Christians who die without friends in the Almshouse, West Philadelphia, and to provide mourners to follow them to the grave, who shall see that they are honorably buried.

Christmas Day falls this year on Tuesday.

The children will have their Christmas Entertainment on Wednesday, December 26th, St. Stephen's Day. The friends of the children in the Parish are requested to send their subscriptions to F. Field, or to Dr. Garrett, the Superintendent, as soon as possible.

The mothers will have their festival meeting on Thursday, December 27th.

Dispensary Notes.

Donation Day was rough and unpleasant around the stone walls of the Dispensary, but was bright and pleasant within. The weather kept many at home, who would otherwise have been with us. But the charity was not forgotten and besides gifts of bottles, linen, provisions, drugs and stationery supplies, the Committee received then or just afterwards about $700. This is much more than we had last year.

The election resulted in the choice of the following who, with Fr. Maturin, as Rector of the Parish, form the Board of Managers for the coming year. Fr. Convers, Mr. Flanders, Mr. Neill, Mr. Fryer, Mr. Roberts, Dr. Herbert Norris, Mrs. Brock, Mrs. Kilgore, Miss Schell, Mrs. Erben, Mrs. Lippincott, Mrs. Neill, Mrs. Penrose, Mrs. A. C. Roberts.

The first step towards the Hospital has been taken by getting a nurse who will care for such of the patients as need care and have none to look after them. These will be confinement cases, those who wish to be operated upon at home, others attended by our Visiting Physicians, and such surgical cases as require dressing or other attention which a nurse can give. Usually she will go from house to house doing at each whatever may be required, but in some cases she will spend her whole day at one house; or even, on an emergency, the entire night. Since we had our nurse she has visited five different cases, staying the whole night with one. All have entirely recovered or are doing well.

All these changes involve more expense, and probably we shall require $600 more for current expenses this year than last. If the coming year be favorable, we may hope by next S. Clement's Day to be able to plan the opening of the Hospital. But that will depend entirely upon how we get on this year. May God help us and bless our efforts. Every one must pray earnestly this year as well as work.

1 EAST 29TH ST., NEW YORK,
Nov. 21, 1888.

MY DEAR MR. FRYER:—Many thanks for your letter and Draft for £23, 12*d*. I shall always have most grateful recollections of my visit to Philadelphia, and of the great kindness with which I was received there.

Hoping that your Festival will pass off well and successfully and that you may have the same bright weather as to day, I am

Yours very sincerely,
EDW. NASSAU.

Preparation for Christmas.

It is one of the principles of the Church's system of commemorative seasons that every great festival should be preceded by a time of special preparation. Thus Easter, the great Festival of the year, is preceded by the great fast of Lent; Ascension Day follows the three Rogation Days; this was also the principle upon which the vigils were prefixed to many of the chief holydays of the year.

Advent is the time given for preparation for the Christmas festival; it is a time of special devotion to the mystery of the Incarnation, which we are about to commemorate, and for practical efforts to obtain more of the blessings which flow from it.

Though our Church has relaxed the obligation, observed elsewhere, of fasting during this season, it is still a time for serious thought and deepened penitence; for as it leads us on the one hand to thoughts of the benefits of the coming of Christ, on the other hand it suggests the consideration of our extreme need of them, and our helplessness without them, and the consequences that will follow their rejection at the second Advent.

A well spent Advent will lead to a a truly happy Christmas, it will enable us to enter into and realize the spiritual joy of the festival, without appreciation of the external and social observances, which may indeed be entirely Christian and becoming, but which are too often no better—but rather worse—than heathen. For it is a fact that the Christmas festivities which are popularly associated with the 25th of December, have their origin, not in Christian times or institutions at all, but in the Roman "Saturnalia," which have become a byword for all that is immoral and unrestrained; the "Decembris licentia," which was condemned even by pagan moralists. It has been, as it were, sanctified and should be purified by its adoption into the Christian year; but it too often reverts to many of its ancient and worst characteristics.

Any who forget or refuse to acknowledge the power of the event to which Christians then do honor; whose Christmas being without either "Christ" or "mass" is no Christmas at all.

But if Advent is well kept, our Christmas can hardly be otherwise than Christian; which is as much as to say that it cannot fail to be full of the highest joy this world can give.

Child Religion:

What it is, and How to Teach it.

An Address to Sunday-School Teachers

By the Rev. A. C. Thynne, Honorary Canon of Truro Cathedral, and Rector of Kilkhampton.

Let us bear in mind the three broad lines of character which I have indicated—the loving child, the hopeful child, and the faithful child.

1. There is not much difficulty in knowing the loving, affectionate child; and when love is not strengthened by the other virtues, you will find these children your constant source of disappointment. The more you know of them, the less you will find in them; the more trouble they will give you. They are delighted to see you, eager to hear you, but soon get listless, or never seem to take in a word you teach them. This is a large class, so we must not treat it lightly. Hope and faith may have germs in such children, but it may be long before you find signs of their existence. We must not begin by laying too much stress on pretty, loving looks, or take too high an estimate of fair promises. There is a want of character in all such children that we have to try and strengthen.

2. But I must pass on to the next—the hopeful; how to know them. Often strange, shy, and self-absorbed. The possibilities of a child's future, stretched far out beyond our knowledge, are strong in such, and they are apt to look dull and uninterested with your teaching, because their hope is set on something quite different from that which you are trying to teach; and you must get them to be interested in that which is good by finding out something in which they are really interested, something which they really have set their hope upon.

An incident told by a friend will illustrate my meaning. He took his choir boys from a country parish, some fifty miles, to the Crystal Palace. They were for the most part lost in wonder and delight, but one boy seemed dull and uninterested. The beauties of the statues and architecture were lost on him. In vain he walked through the courts of the Alhambra, or saw the representation of the glories of ancient Egypt. He was unmoved at all, till at last he came back with bright, eager face and kindled light in his eyes. He had seen something which pleased and delighted him. What was it? The picture or the model of Tom Sayers the great prize-fighter! There, I think, was the key to the hope of very likely a strong, even a glorious character.

The perfection of manly strength and personal courage was his ideal. It took a low form, it is true. Perhaps his big brother had told him that Tom Sayers could hit his right hand through any man's ribs. But you could lead him. Tell of the heroes. Begin with coarse, strong men like prize-fighters; tell of the old gladiators, and how they fought and died like beasts to please the great of Rome. Lead him on by the same track to see other forms and victims standing on the same sawdust to suffer and to die; tell him of the Christian man, aye, the Christian lad and girl, who stood just as bravely to face the same lion which had torn down the gladiator. Lead him through the worship of manly courage to worship the bravest Man that ever lived, the perfect example of self-devotion, obedient unto death on Calvary.

3. And then with the third class of faithful children—I mean children whose disposition lead them to believe all you tell them. Here you find your really good children. They give you no trouble. Don't therefore give them none. See what they want. Mere faith in you won't do; mere lesson-learning, good as it is, is not all. It does not take much to make a child that believes all you say and learns its lessons well, conceited and priggish; so keep on trying to find out the character of such, and draw out their love and hope, not forgetting constant lessons of humility. Study to know them.

II. And next, be fair. It has been said that a teacher who is fair and not loving will do more good, and have a greater hold on children, than a teacher who is loving but not fair. You lose your finest characters if you are not fair and just. Some of the greatest leaders of men have failed in sympathy, have been wanting in love; hard as iron some, but always just. The highest character joins the two; but love without justice, however it may attract some, must lose many, and often those most worth winning. Be fair. Pray to be fair and equal; love fails where it is unfair, and fails, as I said, with the finer characters. Just remember the one reproach which a boy utters in the bitterness of his heart—"It's not fair." And remember too that there are a class of quiet, uninterested-looking children—if a child can be uninteresting—who say nothing, perhaps seem to feel nothing, but who store up little grievances in their hearts against the day of retribution; and they take out their revenge in absenting themselves from school, and church too, as soon as they have gained their freedom. These are the shy children, so seldom understood; for shyness bears the like relation to the character which hysteria does among diseases to the body. It simulates all others. The shy child seems proud or sulky, often puts on an awkward boldness, or a silly mirth, just as you see children smile at a confirmation, or at some solemn occasion when they are really impressed. (I suppose a sudden flash of self-consciousness darts across their mind, as to whether they are not making fools of themselves by being so much in earnest.)

We must try to be just to such, notwithstanding the difficulty. Think of our Pattern. "God is a righteous Judge, strong and patient, and God is provoked every day;" that is just and fair, and therefore strong and patient. Take that for your motto. Love your children all you can, and pray to love them more; but always be just.

III. Influence them. To do this you must know them, and be just, and you must have a clear idea of what you want to make them; and that you may have a clear idea of this, you must have a clear idea of what you are yourself. You are trying to influence children to do their duty in life; do you know what duty is? Let us listen to Wordsworth's words on Duty—

> "Stern lawgiver! yet thou dost wear
> The Godhead's most benignant face,
> Nor know I anything so fair
> As is the smile upon thy face.
> Flowers laugh before thee on their beds,
> And fragrance in thy footing treads;
> Thou dost preserve the stars from wrong,
> And the most ancient heavens through > thee are fresh and strong."

Duty was defined by a little child in a Sunday-school as "doing what we ought, instead of doing what we like." Not a bad answer. We teachers must learn it, or we cannot teach it. "The living will that shall endure," as Tennyson says, and "the faith that comes of self-control," must have found their way into our lives, and then we can influence children, and teach them duty; teach them to "do noble things, not dream them all day long."

Therefore, first, you will aim at perfect obedience, and you yourself will be regular and punctual. That is how you teach obedience by example.

You will teach truth by fairness and justice in lessons and in favors; by favoring those who do well justly; by punishing lovingly and firmly.

You will teach faith by living a life of faith. There will be no half-heartedness in your faith. You believe in God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, You will reverence the Word, the house, the ordinances of God. You believe the doctrines of your Church; you will never let your children see a shadow of doubt; you will avoid that hazy kind of talk, which affects liberality, and hesitates to say that any one else is wrong. Children hate uncertainties. What can they think of a teacher who professes to be a Churchman, and goes to chapel now and then? who teaches them to pray and understand the prayer to Jesus, "From heresy" (i. e., choosing your own way) "and schism, Good Lord, deliver us," and then assists in creating or supporting the very divisions against which he prays?

But you will go further than this. You wish to influence your children to be devout members of the Church, teach them what the Church teaches—teach them the Prayer Book. It has been only too truly said, that many a Sunday-school scholar is taught all about Jeremiah and Jezebel, and never a word about Holy Communion. How can we influence children towards the Church, if you leave out her highest, her central service?

You may or you may not bring your children to be present from time to time at the Holy Communion; you may find the difficulties, from many causes, too great—I cannot dwell upon the subject now—but you can teach all children above ten about Holy Communion, and the history of it, and the meaning of it, and the meaning of the service in our Prayer Books, the prayers and the responses, the offertory, the oblations, the elements, not only from the catechism, but from the service itself. You can let them see and know by your look, your manner, your voice—aye, by your practice—what the Holy Communion is to your own soul, to your inner life, and how it bears upon your duty. All this you can draw out to them, and thus fashion their characters; and "character is a completely-fashioned will," says a great writer; "and the will, when once fashioned, may be steady and constant for life."

So try to influence the life of your children, their affections, their character, and their worship. Aim very high, aim very deep, at laying the foundations of a holy life of duty in each soul. Aim at working with your Master Jesus, and not only "suffer little children to come unto Him," but take them by the hand firmly, tenderly, faithfully, and lead them to His divine feet, awaiting in hope to be able to say at the last, "Behold I and the children whom the Lord hath given me."

Brothers and sisters, your work is a joyful and a blessed one. Full of difficulty? Yes; no good work is without that. Full of disappointment? Yes; disappointment is the lot of all human workers. But it is full of glory, for it is associated with the work of Jesus; full of hope, for every fresh face speaks of hope; full of help, for the Holy Ghost it with us, and however weak we may be, however distrustful of our own power, however many our mistakes, yet if we seek Him, He will surely be with us, and make all things work together for good to those who with earnest hearts endeavor to love and give their best to God.

Letter from Father Maturin.

COWLEY ST. JOHN, OXFORD,
December 15, 1888.

MY DEAR ——— :

I take a large sheet of paper to write to the Magazine through you, but I am afraid that I shall have exhausted all that I have to say long before I have filled it. I am sure that I have no gifts as a journalist; how I envy the talents of the Editor of the Iron Cross, who can write interesting columns on a short railway journey and see sights, meet people and hear things said that I could not see or hear if I took the same journey a hundred times. I once had the pleasure of crossing the ocean with that same editor and the amount of incident and interest that he got out of what I thought a most monotonous journey made me fairly envious. I have no doubt he could write pages describing our very quiet life at Cowley, but I am not so gifted, therefore you must be content, I am afraid, with a very uninteresting letter. The quiet here is rather a contrast to the mode of life in America, but it is very healing to soul and spirit and nerves. I have been going over every Sunday through Advent to preach at a little country church about twenty miles from Oxford, a most beautiful old thirteenth century country church, with a spire like the spire of the Salisbury Cathedral on a small scale. Unfortunately the church underwent a kind of restoration about twenty or thirty years ago and needs to have that work undone as much as possible. It is a quaint old village dating from the Saxon times, I believe; the present Squire's house was formerly part of an old monastery, and an underground passage connects it with the church. There are some secret rooms in the house where Charles once was hidden. The condition of the Squire's family presents one of those instances which are so often met with in England of the punishment of sacrilege. They were formerly enriched from Church lands, the living which some time ago was worth $50,000 a year is now worth $500, and the Squire's family are almost in absolute want. The parish is now in excellent hands and the services are very reverent and nice. We have a great many nice things in America, but we have not yet got anything that compares with an English country parish; the church standing out with its spire or ancient tower and the vicarage close by, the very ideal of a peaceful cultured Christian home, and the straggling village with its tidy cottages nestling around the church, each in the summer time bright with flowers in the garden in front and in the windows; the old inn with its signboard dating back, no one knows how far, and the churchyard with the traditional names of the village people on the tombstones, many of them illegible from age, and its great old yew tree that is to be found in almost every churchyard in England, as old probably as the church itself. There it all has been for century after century; how many feet have trodden that path and passed under the doorway! how many have knelt in that chancel with their sorrows and prayers and thanksgivings. While the world changes, and England, I am sorry to say, changes, yet one sees but little signs of change in these country places. I know nothing that presents such a picture of peace and where one would expect to find the traditional hold of religion and devotion, though in this, alas, one is often disappointed. In the parish to which I go every Sunday, the bell rings at five o'clock in the morning, and at noon, and in the evening every day in the year, except in the early morning through the winter, and it has so rung from time immemorial. I suppose originally it rang for the Angelus, but English conservatism keeps up the old custom while its meaning is gone. I wonder when we shall have in America an age of faith and devotion—when men will be ready to consecrate their wealth in building and endowing churches which will be a blessing in ages to come. One man I know of here, who spends $50,000 a year on the restoration of a church and has been giving that sum for some years.

By the time this reaches you the new year will have almost begun. I pray that it may have many blessings in store for the parish. By all accounts everything seems to have gone off very well and happily during the Dedication Festival. I need not say that you were not much out of my thoughts during the day. My day began five hours before yours, so that our Festival Celebrations began very early in the morning.

We have been living in fog here for the last week or two. A couple of days ago I left London at about two o'clock in the afternoon, when they were beginning to light the gas. We have had no snow here as yet, and very little frost or cold, but very unlike the winter in America.

Ever very truly yours,
B. W. MATURIN.

Parish Notes.

The Bishop of Nassau has sent us an account of his voyage. It was extremely rough and dangerous, and for three days there seemed every chance of the entire loss of the ship, but we are thankful to say that the Bishop escaped without any harm.

Father Maturin is declared by the eminent physician, Sir Andrew Clark, to be well and able to work, with proper care.

The Christmas services were as usual bright and hearty, and the music was beautifully rendered by the choir under the skillful management of Mr. Tipton.

The Mothers had their usual dinner on Thursday, the festival of St. John. After the dinner at which about 200 were present, a dramatic entertainment was given to them by some friends, consisting of two charades of a highly farcical character, which provoked unbounded hilarity and received repeated and well-earned applause.

The Sunday school was entertained on Wednesday, the fest of St. Stephen. About 500 children were present—a number which oddly enough has not yet been reached in the Sunday attendance—and seemed highly to appreciate the amusements provided for them; these included a remarkable performance by Mr. Doddridge, Commandant of —— —— College, on that common, but largely unappreciated instrument, the natural whistle; a service of song performed by members of the choir and others; songs and music by several ladies who kindly gave their assistance, and last, but not least, a distribution of presents and candy.

By the time this number of the Magazine is published, the Iron Cross Parlor and Boy's Gymnasium, at the S. E. corner 21st and Market streets will, we trust, have been opened. It is a spacious and well proportioned room, and has been fitted up with gymnastic apparatus according to the latest and best designs. One end of the room is reserved as a parlor, and is elegantly furnished, with a view to the comfort of those who wish to use it for games, reading, writing, or quiet conversation. This institution will supply a long-felt want, and we hope will become widely popular.

The Convention of the Iron Cross will take place in Philadelphia on St. Paul's Day (January 25th), and on the eve (January 24th), a sermon will be preached to the members of the Guild at 8 P. M., by the Right Rev. Dr. Coleman, Bishop of Delaware. Those who can give a lodging to a Priest or layman are requested to give notice to Father Field as soon as possible.

When Jesus our Lord was born in Bethlehem, in the land of Judea; Behold, from the East to the city of Jerusalem, there came wise men, and said: "Say where is He born, the King of Judea? For we have seen His star, and are come to adore Him." There shall a star from Jacob come forth, and a sceptre from Israel rise up, and dash in pieces princes and nations.

As bright the star of morning gleams
So Jesus sheddeth glorious beams
Of light and consolation.
Thy Word, O Lord, radiance darting,
Truth imparting, gives salvation,
Thine be praise and adoration.

The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures; He leadeth me beside the still waters; He restoreth my soul; He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for His name's sake. Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for Thou art with me; Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me. Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies; Thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over. Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life; and I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever.

The Sinking Fund.

The Trusteees have the pleasure to announce that they have again this month (December 10th) paid off two thousand dollars of the Church debt.

This payment has been applied to the four thousand dollar mortgage on the Clergy House; the remaining two thousand of which will be paid by Easter, when another of the Church's properties will be free from debt.

In recalling the events of the past year let us give thanks to our Heavenly Father for the wonderful prosperity He has granted to our beloved Church, and ask His blessing on those, who, by their self-denial have given so liberally to His service.

The Missionary Society.

The first meeting, November 27th, was not a large one. The offerings of this year are to meet our pledge to S. Mary's Orphanage, Baltimore; and the work is to be sent to Mr. Parker's Mission in Alaska. His interesting letter is printed here that more than were in chapel on Tuesday may read it and help the Mission. The Society will not be pledged for more, until it has met these two promises; then whatever is left over and above will be given to other objects. It is hoped that the parishioners generally will give to the missions in which they may be specially interested through the Society, which will receive and forward to their destination any donations sent it. If any wish to send an offering, e. g., to Fr. Sheppard's Memorial at Cape Town, or to Nashotah, or to Messrs. Graves and Partridge in China, or to Mr. McKim in Japan, or any other mission, mark it as "special for such and such an object" and send it to Mr. John Carr, Forrest Building, Fourth near Chestnut, the Treasurer, and it will be sent on as the giver wishes. At the monthly meetings of the Society the address will be an account of the life and work of some of the chief missionaries of our own communion in this last half century; for example, Bishop Gray of Cape Town, the defender of the Inspiration of the Bible against Dr. Colenso and the assertor of the Church's spiritual power; or J. Lloyd Brech, the founder of Nashotah, Faribault, our missions to Indians, and a school on the Pacific Coast; or Haumington, singing God's praises when fever smitted on the shores of African lakes and amid the savage crowds who killed him; or Patteson, dashing through the surf of the coral reefs to try to talk of Christ to men whose language he had yet to learn, and who welcomed him with brandished spears, dying a martyr to the slave trade and code of savage revenge, or some other hero of the Mission Field.

Here is Mr. Parker's letter. If you have not made your pledge for missions speak to Fr. Convers, to Mr. Carr, or to the Sister at once.

CHRIST CHURCH MISSION:
ANVIK, ALASKA, Feb. 29th, 1888.

As time and opportunity will permit, I am writing to those who have shown any interest in my work, and if I mistake not, you wrote me offering kindly services.

I am writing you from Anvik, 500 miles up the Yukon River, and over 3000 from San Francisco. Our home is a log house, containing three rooms, purchased for us by the Board of Missions. Once a year we get our mail by the Alaska Commercial Company's steamer. This vessel comes to St. Michael's, on Norton Sound, 80 miles from the mouth of the Yukon. The Yukon is said to be the sixth largest river in the world. This, however, in the absence of an official survey, is at present uncertain. It seems to be a fact that it may be ascended over 2400 miles, and it is studded with islands. Our house, as I have said, has three rooms, one is 12 by 16, and the other two about half the size. The larger room serves as chapel, school-room, kitchen, dining and sitting-room. Rather close quarters you may say. Yes; but we have had reason to thank God for a good home.

Our work is attended with peculiar difficulties, owing to the impression that generally prevails that the teaching of English will ruin the fur trade. I could say much more, but for charity sake will hold my peace. Of course, our work lies among Indians. In fact, for some months we have seen but two white men. Although the work is difficult it is full of interest. The adults are to us very interesting, and the children are bright, teachable and manageable. The people, as a people, are ingenious and self-supporting, and will pay to educate.

We have quite an interesting school which we teach from Monday morning till Friday evening. This school promises rich seed for the future. As our house is a mile and a half from the village, the children are not able to go home to dinner and return, so we give them each a meal of tea, crackers and smoked fish. We also average, perhaps, a meal a day to adults—these matters come out of our tithe. It distresses us to see how the children dress. One loose fur coat or parka and a pair of thin drill pants are all the majority wear. You will understand how they suffer when I tell you that I traveled 250 miles with the thermometer 52° below zero, and although well wrapped up, suffered severely. I was nine days making this journey with sled and dogs. We ought to have a barrel of inexpensive, but warm, good underclothing. You have no idea how the people live, nor of the hovels, holes in the ground, they live in. The entrance to these homes is about 2 feet square. Of course they have neither doors nor windows to their homes—a hole in the roof 2 feet square serves as window and chimney. They live mostly on sun dried fish, except in summer when they catch an abundance of fresh salmon. We (my colleague and I) like the people very much and think there is a good deal to them; they only want to be taught how to live to compare favorably with others. Of course the future of our work we don't know, neither is it wise for us to seek to know. It is for us to work in the present and to raise up for our work the interest of as many as possible. One thing we can ask all for and this we ask you for your prayers that God will bless and strenghten us for this work and adds to us all necessary things. This we pray for, hope for and never cease working and this we believe God will do in His own good time.

That God will bless and make His face to shine upon you in your many labors of love is and shall be the prayer of

Yours in Christ,
OCTAVIUS PARKER.

P. S.—Of course we hold divine service on Sunday, at which the school children are always present and many adults.

The Good Bishop of Lincoln.

The answer of Dr. King, the Bishop of Lincoln, to the churchmen of his diocese who feel great sympathy for him in his persecution by the Church Association, has been sent to us by F. Maturin for publication

The Bishop is one of the most devout and saintly men in the English Church and is loved by all who have ever been brought into relation with him, but a small party of extreme low churchmen, if they can be called churchmen at all, has instituted legal proceedings against the Bishop, with the object of hindering his use of the reverent ritual which is customary in many of the churches of his diocese and which he has constantly encouraged by his sympathy and presence.

My dear Brethren of the Clergy and of the Faithful Laity.

So many kind expressions of sympathy have reached me during the past year from all parts of the Diocese, that I feel it would be unnatural to remain any longer silent, and not to tell you in a few simple words on what principle I have acted, and, please God, intend to act.

Let me begin by saying how deeply grieved I am that Lincoln should have been made the cause of trouble and anxiety to our Archbishop; we all know his personal love for Lincoln, and Lincoln knows her grateful and loyal love for him. Why then have I felt bound to give this trouble or to allow this trouble to be given about me?

1. Leaving the details to be maintained, if need be, by the lawyers, I believe that the Ornaments Rubric is the law of the Church, I might say of the Prayer Book, and therefore the law of the land also. You will remember what my good and learned predecessor said on the subject in 1875: "The vestments are permitted, but not required by law." "The vestments are permitted by law and not to be prohibited." "Persons can hardly feel much aggrieved if any other vestment but the surplice is not required of themselves, but allowed to others under sufficient safeguards; but others, clergy and laity, may consider themselves wronged if another vestment (believed by them to be lawful) is forbidden under penalties; and great discontent and dissension would probably ensue from such a prohibition."

These are serious words indeed! The contents of the Ornaments Rubric quite sufficiently cover the principle of Ritual for which we contend—a principle which cannot be given up without the risk of doing a very great wrong to our people.

Hooker saw the need of maintaining this principle; writing in the first days of the Reformation, when defending the use of the sign of the Cross in Baptism, he said: "Neither dare we despise, no not the meanest helps that serve, though it be but in the very lowest degree of furtherance towards the highest services that God doth require at our hands."* And again: "Seeing also that our weakness, while we are in this present world, doth need towards spiritual duties the help even of corporal furtherances, and that by reason of natural intercourse between the highest and the lowest powers of man's mind in all actions."

The great Bishop Butler said the same, writing two hundred years after, when the spiritual power of religion was being endangered in England by the cold Deism of the 18th century. "Nor does the want of religion in the generality of the common people appear owing to a speculative disbelief or denial of it, but chiefly to thoughtlessness and the common temptations of life. . . . The form of religion may indeed be where there is little of the thing itself; but the thing itself cannot be preserved amongst mankind without the form;" and again, "it is highly seasonable now to instruct the people in the importance of external religion."†

2. To break any law is, no doubt, a serious thing to a thoughtful person, for law ought to be regarded with a special reverence, as there is in truth but One Lawgiver; and yet we do not, and cannot, claim absolute obedience to every detail of human law. It is admitted that it would be unreasonable to enforce absolute obedience to every Rubric in our Prayer Book. The Rubrics are broken every week in numberless churches by all kinds of clergymen, and yet they are not prosecuted as lawbreakers. There is in fact an increasing conviction that compulsory uniformity in externals is not the best way to promote real unity: we are not, therefore, contending for rigidly enforced uniformity, but for reasonable toleration.

* E. P. v. 65, s. 10, 11.

† Charge to the Clergy of Durham, 1751. Works, vol. ii, pp. 314, 316.

3. The true way of dealing with such lesser infractions of law would seem to be (i) to endeavor to estimate the danger of the result of such infractions; and (ii) to determine the spirit and intention of the lawbreakers.

At first, watchfulness and suspicion would appear to be perfectly natural, but in due time it comes to be an acknowledged verdict of experience that every infraction of law does not necessarily lead to a state of lawlessness.

In the particular case before us, as I cannot admit the charge of lawbreaking, so I repudiate with indignation the imputation of disloyalty either to England or to the English Church; and I appeal to a life of almost 60 years, and to an unworthy Ministry of 34, and I defy the charge of disloyalty either in word or deed. And what I claim for myself individually, I claim for my brethren as a body. We who have been accused of lawbreaking have been long enough before the public to be known as honest and loyal men both towards the Church of England and the Crown; and this contention will approve itself to the law-abiding, but still more to the justice-loving people of England.

4. While thus professing true loyalty to the Crown, we are compelled to maintain that the experience of history proves the necessity of the Church preserving her own rights and liberties in her relation to the State; and this duty certainly has not become less urgent at the present time, when Parliament, representing equally the people of the three United Kingdoms, whatever their religious belief, is no longer composed only of members of the Church of England, but of Roman Catholics, Presbyterians, and many Nonconformists; nay, when the members of our Parliament are no longer required even to be Christians.

5. Any individual suffering which may arise from this line of thought and action is too insignificant to be mentioned, when our hope is that the people of England may thus be enabled to realize the inestimable blessings which God has provided and preserved for them in the English Church. It was my great hope and prayer in coming among you that God would enable me to bring the blessings of the Gospel to the poor, as our Lord has promised them in His Church. If this be God's way of accomplishing this end, then, at whatever cost, may His will be done. To help you, my dear brethren, to draw nearer to God through Christ by the power of the Holy Spirit in His Church—this is my simple aim.

Trusting f r the continuance of your prayers, I am, your faithful friend and Bishop, EDWARD LINCOLN.

Parish Notes.

The Rev A. B. Sharpe, who has been working in the parish for some months, and has become well known by his preaching, has been called suddenly to England on account of the illness of his father. He sailed on board the Servia, January 26th.

Canon Knox-Little was taken ill after the Mission at Toronto and has been suffering from nervous prostration, He was unable to preach for us on Sunday, January 27th, as he had promised, and is now resting in Virginia. He will very shortly return to England, but has promised that if it is possible he will give us a Sunday before he goes.

All persons desiring to be confirmed should give their names as soon as possible to one of the Clergy, as the Bishop is expected to hold a confirmation in S. Clement's in March. All the members of the congregation should try to bring friends to the confirmation lectures on Tuesday evenings.

The Bishop of Delaware preached in S. Clement's on January 24th, the Eve of S. Paul's Day. As his sermon will be published in the Iron Cross paper, those who did not have the advantage of hearing it will be able to have the pleasure of reading it.

The Festival of the Guild of the Iron Cross went off remarkably well. The delegates from the numerous Branches were most hospitably entertained for the night by the members of S. Clement's congregation, and the ladies of the Parish most kindly provided ample refreshments in the Hall to the clerical and lay members of the Council. Some important resolutions defining the position of the Guild in relation to Bishops and Rectors were passed by the Council. The meeting next year will take place in New York.

The Iron Cross Parlor and Boys' Gymnasium is a new Parochial Institution which supplies a great need and has been already remarkably successful. The fourth floor of the building has been taken in order to provide room for the crowd of boys who more than fill the Gymnasium. Many handsome presents have been made and the large parlor is by degrees being suitably furnished. Ladies are invited to form a committee to take charge of the Parlor on the boys' evenings and to teach them music, etc., and how to play the games provided. Father Field will be glad if ladies who are willing to help will send their names to him. Each lady should try to take one evening a week from 7 to 9.

The Guild of S. Vincent (Acolytes) kept their festival on Sunday, January 20th, when the members made their corporate communion, and afterwards took breakfast together in the choir room. The breakfast was, as last year, provided by the Vestry, and was given as a little recognition of the carefulness and attention with which the large number of acolytes have discharged their duties in the church.

The next meeting of the Missionary Society will be in the chapel at 4 P.M., on Tuesday, February 5th. It is open for any one who wishes to come to it, whether they have been members or not. The address will be on "Modern Missionaries," and the one whose life and work will furnish the topic at this meeting will be Bishop Gray, of Cape Town, who fought and won the battle of the faith against Dr. Colenso.

The resignation of Mr. Wright from the Vestry on account of continued ill health, which was presented some months ago, was recently accepted by the Vestry with regret, action having been postponed, in hopes that his health would so improve that he would consent to remain. Mr. A. W. Kilgore was elected to fill the vacancy.

It is a fact not generally known that for the past few years the Offerings have steadily decreased.

No doubt this has been due, not so much to the fact that the congregation have gradually ceased to give as much as they did formerly, as to the fact that they have been asked to give to special objects needed for the reverent rendering of the service.

The total for this year up to date, shows a slight increase over what it was at the corresponding period last year; but the gain is small.

When it is considered that it is by means of the Offerings in church that the Clergy are supported, the Sisters aided and most of their charities maintained, and that up to this time this year not one cent has been contributed by any person for any object of current parochial expense, we are perplexed to find a satisfactory reason for such a condition of things.

Let us hope that the future will present a different aspect, and that by each of us giving of our charity, regularly and generously, through the Offerings at the Holy Sacrifice, we shall so swell the sum of this fund that it may at least equal what it has been in times past.

A number of subscriptions to the Magazine expired with the October number which have not as yet been renewed. Subscribers would confer a favor by promptly paying their subscription, or, if they do not wish to renew, by notifying the publisher without delay.

Anthem, O, clap your hands, Stainer.

O clap your hands, all ye people shout unto God with the voice of triumph. For the Lord our God is terrible. He is the great King over all the earth. They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength, they shall mount up with wings as eagles, they shall run and not be weary, they shall walk and not faint. Trust ye in the Lord for ever, for in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength. Amen.

The Iron Cross Parlor.

EMPLOYMENT BUREAU.

One of the most difficult things is to find employment for good worthy men when they are out of work, and applications are so often made to us that it is better to try to do this on businesslike principles. Any man having really good references is invited to apply between 10 and 11 each morning at the Iron Cross Parlor, twenty-first and Market street, fourth floor and register his name, when all that can be done will be put in motion to secure him a position. Employers are requested to let the Iron Cross know of positions vacant, no fee will be charged.

Dispensary Notes.

The Surgical Dispensary is now open at 2.30 P. M. on all week days; this is our latest venture. The post of District Physician to the part of the city between Cherry and Brown streets is now vacant. It is expected, however, to soon be filled.

Whether it be due to a greater amount of sickness, or to the growth of the work, no one can tell, but the clinics have been very large of late. Since the first of January the average daily attendance has been nearly 30.

On the busiest day of the year, so far, there were exactly seventy people there in the course of the day. If this is to continue we must have more help of all kinds. Who will roll some bandages for us? Our present stock is very low. They should be either two, or two and a half, or three inches wide and from eight to twelve feet long.

If any others will take and fill the "building cards" we shall be glad to distribute what remain.

Extract from Sermon on "Ritualism," preached in S. Clement's, Sunday night, January 6th, 1889, the Feast of the Epiphany.

Now let me apply these general principles to one ritual detail; one of the gifts of the wise men—to incense. What does it mean?

Incense in Holy Scripture is linked with prayer as in the Revelation, "And another angel came and stood at the altar having a golden censer; and there was given him much incense that he should offer it with the prayers of all saints upon the golden altar which was before the throne. And the smoke of the incense which came with the prayers of the saints ascended up before God out of the angel's hand" (Rev. viii: 3 and 4). A glance at the Greek of the passages in which it is supposed to stand for prayer itself will show that idea to be the result of a bad translation. But what does theology tell us ascends with prayer to make them acceptable, but the merits and the intercession of Christ. And in the Old Testament the altar of incense stood in a line between the great altar on which the burnt sacrifices smoked and the Holy of Holies; and so the merits of Christ came from His sacrificial death going to the celestial, Holy of Holies. And so the smoking censer as it is swung with the prayers or praises is a sign to us, to lead us to remember the unseen accompaniment which gives them all their power. As used when we sing the Magnificat, it has its special emphasis; that is the hymn of the Incarnation from which resulted the merits of Christ and His Intercession. As used at the time of the celebration of the Holy Communion, incense will more especially remind us of the sacrificial aspect of that mystery; how it is the application of Christ's merits to the persons or objects for whom it is offered; how it is the means ordained of Christ whereby His heavenly intercession shall be applied to all purposes for which Sacraments are not ordained. And therefore the altar will be incensed, because it is that where on the unbloody sacrifice is offered. All who have any relation to the mystery will in turn have the censer swung towards them. The celebrant will be incensed and that act will mean that he should remember, "Because of Christ's merits am I here to officiate; I am here to unite myself to His action, and may I offer this with Christ, in the same spirit in which the Christ spread forth His Hands upon the Cross."

The censer is swung towards the acolytes and it means then, "Remember, it is Christ that santified you by your baptism to enable you to share in this. Remember that you join in this act of worship, pleading with the Eternal Father the merits of Christ. The sacrifice is not so offered by the priest, that you have no part in it. It ought to be your's too. In your own rank you join in it. Say your prayers while Christ is on the altar pleading. It may be easy to forget what you are doing; but learn the lesson of the incense—Christ is going to plead and to plead for you and for your prayers. Join in it."

It is swung towards the choir, and it means "Christ's merits have hallowed you; may He increase your sanctification. Be ye holy. Christ is to plead in this service, and you ought to take your share in it. Sing, then, not as a matter of business; not as a means of showing one's voice; not to please the congregation; but as an act of religion. Sing it, uniting yourself with Christ. Don't forget the lesson of the incense."

It is swung towards the people, and it has its double meaning still; "Because of Christ's merits you are here. Be you hallowed by Him for this service." Then looking to the future: "Christ is coming to plead; see that He will plead for you. It is not the solitary act of the priest, not a concert by the choir for your pleasure or criticism, but it should be your service. Don't let it go by without one cry of your own soul that your Saviour may echo; may make His own. Take your part in it." If the service becomes a mere spectacle, you have not learned the lesson of the incense as swung towards yourself.

And when one is incensed they stand and bow before and after. Why is that? That, is a mere matter of good breeding. It is an instance of what has been given as one of the definitions of ritualism, "good manners in church." There is no law, of course, to prohibit you from keeping your seat when the censer is swung towards you. You need not behave as a lady or gentleman under compulsion of law and penalty. But when the thurifer comes, the messenger of the Church, to ask you to take your part in the service, mere politeness will bring us on to our feet and acknowledge the message.

S. S. J. E.

In answer to many questions which have been asked as to the meaning of these letters which are often appended in the public prints to the names of the Evangelist Fathers and also in answer to many inquiries as to the meaning of the Society, the following short statement may be of use to our readers and supply the necessary information. The letters S. S. J. E. simply mean Society of S. John the Evangelist, of which the members are clergymen of the Episcopal Church in good standing, paying canonical obedience to the Bishops of that church as truly as any of the clergy. The Society of S. John the Evangelist is a purely voluntary society of clergymen who feel themselves called by God to live a life of poverty, obedience and chastity and dedicate themselves by life vows to the service of God in such a way.

The members are Mission Priests. They undertake the preaching of missions as far as is practicable and consistent with their duties to their home work and the churches under their care. The Society is not a large one, and is not likely to be large. Few men are called to live a life of celibacy, or to give up all their property, or to live in strict obedience to rule. Few men would desire to enter such a life in which all are as one family and have all things in common. Few could be happy in such a life, but none are more happy than those who having been called to it have been faithful to its principles. The Mother House of the Society in this country is in Boston, and Father Hall is the head of the province. The only other house in America is at S. Clement's, Philadelphia.

The Society had its origin a few years ago at Oxford in England, now it has work going on in Africa and India.

It is curious that the graves of the only four members of the Society who have died are in the four quarters of the world.

A few laymen have been admitted to the Society as lay brothers. Clergy and laymen are admitted as Associates who wish to share in the devotions of the Society and live a strict and regular life.

S. Mary's Home for Little Colored Boys, Baltimore, Md.

This Home is under the charge of the clergy of Mt. Calvary Church, and the All Saints' Sisters of the Poor.

It has now been in existence for eight years, having been opened in 1880, and, it is thought, its friends would like to have some account of the work it has been enabled to do during those years.

It was first begun with a few little boys, in rooms over S. Mary's Boys' School, then, in a few weeks, through the kindness of friends, a house was taken in Bolton street, but before the year was over, arrangements were made whereby they could be accommodated in the house rented by the Sisters for their work among the colored people.

In 1886, in consequence of the unadvisability of renewing the lease, the Sisters suddenly found themselves homeless. A kindly colored woman lent her house in the country for the more helpless of the children, and the rest, with the Sisters, found shelter in a large hall for a time. This experience proved to those in charge of the Home, how precarious it was to try to carry on colored work in rented premises, and a scheme was at once set on foot by which, it was hoped, a house might be purchased. Most happily for the work, one was for sale close to S. Mary's Church, and through the energy and devotion of the Rev. C. B. Perry, who then was Priest-in-Charge of the work, donations were raised and subscriptions promised sufficient to warrant the purchase of their present Home, into which they moved in October, 1886.

Since the first opening of the Orphanage in 1880, 55 children have been received: of which 26 are still in the house, one little scrofulous baby passed away a few months after it was taken in, two have died of consumption, one of brain disease, the only departures by death during the eight years. Of those who have left, when thought old enough to do something for themselves, several have returned to their friends, whilst the others have been placed in comfortable homes in the country. Good reports come from time to time of all these boys to the Sisters, who, in every instance, make arrangements whereby the boy is under their supervision till his 18th year.

The Home is entirely supported by charity, having neither endowment nor any regular means of support. Of course, in every case where a child's friends may reasonably be supposed able to contribute to the funds, they are expected to do so, but any thoughtful, kindly person must at once see how precarious that support is: death, desertion or failing health are all too well known misfortunes to be able to count such money as income.

There are very few annual subscribers to the current expenses. The daily supplies are simply a work of faith. The Sisters go day by day to the markets and bakeries, and there gather in food for the household; donations in kind are given from time to time, and at Christmas, by means of the bags distributed, the house is supplied with groceries and laundry requisites sometimes for several months. For clothing, the Sisters are indebted for the most part to the Mission boxes sent, generally at Christmas, from different Societies and Guilds of various Churches in the North, as well as valuable presents from other sources, including a monthly meeting held by the ladies of Mount Calvary Church.

The Sisters must also record their great debt of gratitude to those friends who, for the last three years, have enabled them to send all the children away into the country during the heat of the summer. They do most certainly believe that that desirable change, as well as the unfailing kindness and devoted attention of the physicians, has been the cause, under the blessing of Almighty God, of the constant health and increasing strength of many who on their entrance seemed far too delicate and diseased to fight the battle of life.

As noticed above, the dollar subscriptions which were made in several of the larger cities, have been used for the purchase of S. Mary's Home. This is already more than half paid for, besides an enlargement and some considerable repairs which were required at the outset. The time of this subscription, being limited to five years, will soon expire. The house is filled to its utmost capacity, and application after application has to be refused. There is also a constant demand for a Church institution where colored girls may be taken and educated, and thus protected from harmful influences. As this would involve the acquisition of more property, the Sisters do trust that their friends, who know something of their work, will enable them to increase its usefulness in the future by renewing their subscriptions, or by giving gen erous offerings, that the work may be put upon a firmer basis.

November 20th, 1888.

The House of S. Michael and All Angels, West Phila.

This House for Young Colored Cripples have recently purchased the house and lot adjoining, and have now completed the repairs. This enables them to separate the boys and girls, the latter occupying the new house.

Mrs. Bernard Henry will this coming summer erect a chapel, as a memorial of her adopted daughter, at an expense of over $10,000. This chapel when completed will seat about two hundred and fifty, and is intended for the use of the House and also for the benefit of the colored people of West Philadelphia. It will be completed ready for use on the Feast of S. Michael and All Angels, the third anniversary of the founding of the House.

The House was formally opened September, 1886, in a small eight roomed house on Ludlow street, with one inmate. At the end of the first year the present house had been purchased and the inmates had increased to seventeen in number. During the second year the debt of the House was paid and negotiations made for the purchase of the new house.

There is now a debt upon the house of $6000, which it is hoped will be materially reduced, if not wholly paid, by the next anniversary.

The House has now thirty inmates, and many applications on file, and is, so far as known, the only charity devoted to young colored cripples. Its success has been largely due to the economical management and care given it by Sister Sarah, and there are but few charitable institutions that can make so good a showing for the money received.

Out of total receipts for two years of less than $17,000, nearly $14,000 have been spent in the purchase and permanent improvement of the property; over $1000 has been invested for the endowment of a cot, while the actual cash paid out during two years for artificial limbs, drugs, surgical appliances, and household expenses, has been only about $2000. In order to attain this result acknowledgment is made to the many friends whose donations "in kind" have saved expenditures for coal, provisions, etc., and thus enabled so great a proportion of the cash received to be devoted to permanent improvements.

This charity, of which Rev. Dr. Nicholson is President, is not connected with any parish, but different parishes, including S. Clement's, are represented in the Board of Trustees.

Trial of the Bishop of Lincoln.

The Bishop of Lincoln has been cited to appear before the Archbishop of Canterbury and five Bishops at Lambeth, February 12th, to answer to the following charges:

Eastward position at Holy Communion;

Making a sign of the cross in pronouncing the blessing;

Using the mixed chalice;

Taking the "ablutions" after Holy Communion;

Lighting the altar candles when not required for utility.

The Bishop of Carlisle speaks of the prosecution as "to be deplored and utterly useless for restoring peace."

The Bishop of Rochester speaks of it with great concern first that the Low Church prosecutors have "revived a purely ecclesiastical court which has seldom sat since the Reformation," and second that they may get a decision contrary to what they expect, which may "vindicate the lawfulness of the revised ceremonies."

The Bishop of Lincoln himself believes it will be overruled for good, and show all churchmen what is the lawful heritage of the church from the true Reformation. Let our prayers all go up for the good Bishop of Lincoln and the cause which he so bravely upholds.

Lent.

Lent is the spring-time of the soul, the time to break up the fallow ground, to weed out the sins which have spread through the soul, and to sow the good seed which may bring forth fruit in all the years that are coming. What may a good Lent bring forth if only at the beginning we make a good resolution to spend it well. Some simple rules may help us, but after all the great principle is the main thing, and that principle is the bringing our body, soul and spirit into complete subjection to the will of God.

There is a text which we may well remember this Lent, and try to answer the question contained in it, "What is it that God doth require of thee, O man, but to do justice, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God." We are to walk with our Lord humbly, in the wilderness, in the way of temptation, and in the way of the cross, doing our duty to God and man, loving and exercising mercy. Is not this the fast that I have chosen saith the Lord, "to deal thy bread to the hungry and that thou bring the poor that are cast out to thy house, and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh" (that is, be kind to your poor relations). Let us fast this Lent with a purpose; (1) to please God by obedience; (2) to follow our Lord's example; (3) to punish ourselves for our sins; (4) to have more to give away to others.

It has never been taught in this Parish that Christianity is an easy thing, or that Religion ought to be cheap.

It is said that an old lady once stated that she thanked God that her religion had never cost her five cents. The probability is that her religion was not worth much more.

Religion is expensive. It demands that every penny shall be spent wisely and carefully. It demands that we shall give freely, cheerfully and lovingly to the service of God. It is a religion of self-denial, or it is not the Christian Religion. One of the most fatal doctrines of modern times is that Christ has done all for us and therefore we need do nothing.

Many believe in a Christ working of old for them, but Salvation is Christ working in us now, and this will show itself by a life of work, self-denial and sacrifice for Christ's sake.

What work can you do for the Church this Lent? What self-denial can you practice this Lent? What Sacrifice can you offer in union with the Sacrifice of Christ, once offered but never ceasing, as He our High Priest, continually offers Himself in Heaven. His members true to His life will do the same on earth.

Attendance at the Services of the Church is a real discipline. Some cannot do it often, but can you? Some cannot give money, but can you? Some cannot attend daily at the Sacrifice of the Holy Eucharist, but can you? See what you can do, and see what your Religion is. If it costs you nothing, it is worth nothing. If God is often asking you for money, work, time, anything you love, Thank God.

Parish Notes.

Lent will begin with a Parochial Retreat. On Ash Wednesday there will be celebrations in church at 7, 8 and 11, with sermons. Meditations will be given at 9 A. M., 2.30 and 8 P. M., in chapel. The Way of the Cross, will be sung at 4 P. M., on Wednesdays and Fridays. On Tuesdays and Thursdays there will be special sermons after Even-song at 5 o'clock.

Father Field will preach a course of sermons on Sunday evenings in Lent on the following subjects connected with the Passion: The Way of Sorrows —the Look of Christ—the Touch of Christ—the Crown of Thorns—the Nails—the Spear. The meditations on Fridays will be on certain well-known hymns.

There is perhaps more visiting done by the Clergy, Sisters, Dispensary Visitors, Associates of the various Guilds and others, than many know of. The number of cases they find in which there is need of help is very large. If the congregation generally will send to the Clergy or to the Sisters all that they have to give away, it will enable the giving power of the parish to support the visitors. There is scarcely anything which will not be useful, boots and shoes, clothing and even some articles of furniture. One wishes to combine the experience and investigations of the visitors and the ability and readiness to give of the parishioners generally. If the latter will send what they have to the Sisters' House, it will be utilized. Unseasonable weather bringing sickness, and lack of work have combined this winter to occasion great need. Can you do anything to relieve it?

Fr. Convers would be glad to hear of positions for some of the many now out of work. Please send him word if you know of vacancies for a book-keeper, stenographer, clerk, copyist, designer, laundress, nurse, cook, seamstress, and laborer.

The Bishop of the Diocese will administer confirmation on the evening of Friday, April 5th. All persons in the parish should do their best to bring others to the instructions on Tuesday and Thursday evenings. Any person can attend these instructions and those who wish to be confirmed should give in their names to one of the clergy as soon as possible.

A cantata of "the Crucifixion" by Stainer will be sung twice in Lent by the choir. The work was brought out three years ago in England with the same object as Gaul's Passion Music, and was sung by the large choir in St. Paul's Cathedral during the time that Dr. Stainer was organist.

Mid-lent or Refreshment Sunday, will be kept as in former years as a day of Retreat by the Guild of the Iron Cross.

On Passion Sunday, St. Vincent's Guild will have its annual Retreat.

The Sisters will be glad to see any ladies who would like to take part in the Retreat at Baltimore, for ladies, March 18th. The Rev. Frazer Robinson of St. Mark's will conduct the Retreat.

Fathers Hall and Torbert have held a mission in New York, during the last month, at the Church of the Holy Cross, Fourth street and Avenue C.

The Reverend C. Wilson of Nova Scotia, has visited Philadelphia, and during his stay in our Parish has received some handsome offerings for his work among the miners, to assist him in building a church, which is much needed by them.

The sum of two hundred and twenty dollars was collected on Sunday morning, February 17th, for the midnight Mission in New York, conducted by the Sisters of St. Sohn Baptist. The Sisters have most kindly taken care of some girls from this Parish.

A new book by father Hall called, "Reasonable Faith," has lately been published by Pott & Co., New York.

No 8 of the papers by the Mission Priests, S. S. J. E., is by Father Hall, on "Fasting Communion.

The Spiritual Library will be open during Lent, and is under the charge of Miss Thompson, who will be glad to lend out the books after evening service on Mondays and Saturdays.

Persons who can give spiritual works to this Library are earnestly requested to do so, as the demand is greater than the supply.

It is requested that all who have borrowed books from the Library in the Mission House will return them as soon as possible. Several books are missing from the Library in the Mission House, and the Father Provincial has given orders that no book shall be borrowed from the Mission House Library without the special permission of the Father in charge.

The Parish should have a good Spiritual Library. If any members of the congregation have any books to give to the Spiritual Library, Father Field will be very grateful if they can be sent to him or to Miss Thompson.

The sermons on the Tuesday afternoons in March will be preached by the Rev. G. W. Hodge, Rector of the Ascension; the Rev. Robert Ritchie, Rector of St. James the Less, and the Rev. Dr. Upjohn, Rector of St. Luke's, Germantown.

Service List for March.

MARCH 3, Quinquagesima.

11 A. M.

Service, . . . Tours in F.
Hymn in place of Gloria in Excelsis.

8 P. M.

Magnificat, . . Stainer in A.
Anthem, Praise the Lord O my soul. Goss.

Praise the Lord, O my soul; while I live will I praise the Lord. Yea, as long as I have any being I will sing praises unto my God. O pray for the peace of Jerusalem. They shall prosper that love thee, shall prosper that love thee. Peace be within thy walls and plenteousness within thy palaces. For my brethren and companion's sakes I will wish thee prosperity. Yea, because of the house of the Lord our God I will seek to do thee good. They that put their trust in the Lord shall be even as the Mount Zion, which may not be removed, but standeth fast for ever. As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so the Lord is round about His people from henceforth even for ever.

MARCH 10, First Sunday in Lent.

11 A. M.

Service, Missa de Angelis and Dykes.

8 P. M.

Magnificat, . . Turle in D.
Anthem, O Saviour of the world. Goss.

O Saviour of the world, who by Thy Cross and precious blood hast redeemed us, save us and help us, we humbly beseech Thee, O Lord.

Confirmation.

The Bishop of the Diocese will administer Confirmation in our church next month, and a good number of candidates are being prepared, but there would be many more candidates if Confirmation were rightly understood, and if those who are Confirmed would do their best to show the use and advantage of it to others. Too much stress is laid upon the idea of taking upon us our vows as it is called.

Confirmation is the means by which we receive spiritual strength. It is intended for all Baptized persons who have come to years of discretion or discernment between right and wrong, and who mean to do what is right.

A custom has grown up in some parts of the Anglican Communion of putting off Confirmation till 14 or 15 years of age, but there is no warrant for this, and many children would be more carefully guarded from sin and strong in resisting it if Confirmed at a much earlier age.

Confirmation is the proper sequel of Baptism, and all children should be taught to be Confirmed that they may not only have spiritual life, but spiritual strength.

They should look forward to receiving Confirmation in order that they may prove themselves true soldiers of Christ whose name and mark they bear.

It is felt and owned that we have great temptations and need every assistance to overcome them, and this Sacrament of strength is given to us in order to make us strong against them. What child or man can afford to do without this means of strength. "Come and be made strong" is the invitation which we ought to give to those who want more grace and strength in their lives of temptation.

If any are able to bring others to Confirmation they are doing a great work, but it is to be feared that there are many who put hindrances in the way of those "little ones" of God's Flock who feel the need of God's help and strength, but are kept away from receiving it by the false fear or false teachings of their elders, or by their bad use of the grace which they received in Confirmation.

Dispensary Notes.

Dr. Sherman T. Moyer, 1848 Master street, has been chosen bv the board to become the Visiting Physician for the district between Cherry and Brown streets.

During the past month the clinics have been much larger than in any previous month. In the various special dispensaries we have treated 58 men patients, paying 205 visits. In the medical dispensary there were 297 new patients, making 801 visits, so that January's work aggregated 355 new patients, 1006 total visits, far beyond any month in the past.

Next March the Board expects to pay a thousand dollars on the mortgage on the building. This will so far reduce the funds on hand that we shall not have quite enough money to pay our way entirely through the rest of the year. Even when our unpaid pledges shall all have been received there will be a small deficiency. If as much in the way of Lenten savings as was sent in last year should be given this, we shall have enough. Whoever will give their Lenten savings to the Dispensary as they have done last year and the year before, can get from Fr. Convers a box in which to collect them.

The note in last month's magazine has brought us in enough bandages to do for the present. The druggist tells us that the supply of whiskey is low. If any of our friends want to send in something, that is needed.

Letter from South Africa.

Father Hall has received the following from Father Puller, who is in charge of the Society's work at the Cape of Good Hope, in acknowledgment of the contributions sent by friends in Boston and Philadelphia towards the fund for building a school intended in part as a memorial of Father Sheppard.

Any further contributions will be thankfully received and forwarded:

"CAPETOWN, January 16th, 1889.
My Dear Father Hall,

Many thanks for your letter with its welcome enclosure. We are much in want of funds, as our people are very poor, and the new school will cost £1500 ($7500). At present we have only about £500 ($2500), but we hope to lay the foundation-stone on the last day of this month. The school is absolutely necessary, so we shall borrow whatever is necessary, and pay off the debt gradually. Will you thank the donors most warmly on my behalf?

I am anxiously expecting some additional help from England. Williams, who came out after Father Sheppard's death, was only able to promise his help for one year, owing to family ties, and he will therefore be going back after Easter. Watkins, who is also working with me, is in very bad health, and may break down at any moment. I wish that it were possible for one of the Society to be sent here, but I am afraid that that is out of the question.

I hope that you pray for me very continually. I need your prayers much.

Ever your affectionate Brother,
F. W. PULLER."

The Prosecution of the Bishop of Lincoln.

THE PROCEEDINGS AT LAMBETH.

The Library of Lambeth Palace on February 12th, presented a strange contrast to the stillness which usually reigns in this ancient "cemetery" of learning, and it did not need a strong effort of the imagination to fancy the old Quartos, Folios, and Duodecimos that line the shelves of the book-cases looking on with an alarmed wonder at the scene that was passing in their midst. That scene was the formal opening of the trial of the Bishop of Lincoln before the Archbishop of Canterbury for certain alleged breaches of the ceremonial law of the Church as laid down by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council—a trial which is likely to be of historic interest to the Church of England, as it is certainly one almost without precedent in the past—bringing as it does into one focus those questions of doctrine and jurisdiction which have been at the root of all the ritual prosecutions of the last thirty or forty years.

Some time before the court opened a numerous company of reporters and of the general public had gathered in the library, and all were on the tiptoe of expectation, though, as it turned out, the proceedings were purely formal, and did not last half an hour. The hall was roped off into three divisions. At the farthest end a few chairs were arranged about a small table for the Archbishop and his assessors. The second enclosure was for the counsel, who sat at a table facing the Archbishop. Behind these came the reporters—a position in which it was by no means easy for them to hear what was said. In the rear of all came the general public.

A little after eleven o'clock a general rising marked the entrance of the Archbishop, his episcopal assessors, each wearing rochet and chimere, and Sir J. Parker Dean. On the left of the Archbishop sat the Bishops of London and Oxford, and on his right the Vicar-General, the Bishop of Winchester, and the Bishop of Salisbury. The Archbishop solemnly opened the court with prayer, using the first two collects for Good Friday, that for Witson Day, and the Lord's prayer.

The Archbishop then said:—Has his Lordship the Bishop of Lincoln anything to say before the court is opened?

The Bishop of Lincoln, who occupied a seat at the end of the council's table, rose, and bowing to the bench, said;—My Lord Archbishop,—I appear before your Grace in deference to the citation which I have received, and in accordance with my oath of "due reverence and obedience" to your Grace and the See of Canterbury; but I appear under protest, desiring, with all respect, to question the jurisdiction which your Grace proposes to exercise. I have been summoned to answer certain charges preferred against me before your Grace or your Grace's Vicar-General; and if it should appear that such is the canonical court before which one of your Grace's suffragans ought to be tried for such alleged spiritual offences, and wherein such offences can be fully and freely adjudicated upon on their merits, I shall be ready and thankful to answer for myself. But your Grace will pardon me if I submit that, as an accused person, and also in view of the grave issues involved in this case, and of their bearing on the whole Church of England, as well as upon the position of all your Grace's suffragans, I feel obliged, at the outset, to do what in me lies towards securing for myself, and therein for all members of the English Episcopate, that form of ecclesiastical procedure by which your Grace's Metropolitical authority can be most fittingly and regularly exercised. There can be no doubt that, in accordance with the practice of the Primitive Church, the most proper method of the trial of a Bishop in such cases would be before the Metropolitan with the comprovincial Bishops. It may also be held that a trial before the Archbishop as sole Judge might impair the rightful position of your Grace's suffragans, both individually and in relation to the Province. I would, therefore, humbly pray your Grace to allow me to be heard by counsel on this point, whether your Grace's jurisdiction would not be more properly exercised with regard to the matters charged against me by your Grace as Metropolitan with the comprovincial Bishops, such matters to be adjudicated upon on their merits by your Grace with the advice and consent of the Bishops of the Province; and whether, this being the case, I ought not to be dismissed from making any answer to the present citation. Having made this statement, I beg most respectfully to appoint my proctors, and leave all legal matters in their hands and those of my counsel.

The Archbishop consented to hear counsel's argument on behalf of the Bishop of Lincoln's protest, and after some more business of a merely formal character the court was adjourned till the 12th of March, at 10 o'clock in the morning.

This good Bishop, who is held by his friends and foes alike to be one of the holiest men living, has been accused and brought to trial for having gone on a certain day to a beautiful old church in the city of Lincoln where the rector used all those things which are now, thank God, common in well ordered churches, such as lights, the eastward position, wafer bread, etc., and having used these things according to the custom of the church. He is charged by some with disloyalty to the Church, and in answer to these two charges, Canon Scott Holland, in a speech at the meeting of the English Church Union, says that two things are to be specially noted in the charge:

I. The Bishop of Lincoln is not arraigned for any ritual habits of his own, but simply for conforming to the ordinary ritual of churches in which he happened to be ministering. He is attacked, as I understand, solely for not upsetting that which was normally practiced by the rectors of those churches — those practices to which half the bishops on the bench have again and again conformed in churches where they find them in use. They are just those practices and no more which, ever since the death message of Archbishop Tait, it has plainly and frankly agreed to tolerate. This prosecution challenges directly that toleration for which all the bishops of the court which is to try the Bishop of Lincoln have made themselves responsible, and openly challenges the blessed truce which was, broadly speaking, inaugurated by the dying desire of the late Archbishop, which has been loyally and forcibly sustained by the policy of the present Primate. Then I think it important for outsiders to understand the nature of Bishop King's loyalty to the Church of England. There are those of us who though profoundly convinced that God has planted them in our Church for good, yet have sympathies and aspirations which would find a wider freedom of growth in another communion. There are those, too, who, though perfectly loyal themselves, do indirectly influence others in ways that are more or less disturbing and perilous. But with the Bishop of Lincoln we are concerned with one whose loyalty would satisfy the late Dean of Chichester. This loyalty is a part of himself; it is inherent, ingrained, absolute, spontaneous. He is compact with loyalty. With him it is no rule or discipline. It is an instinct and a passion. None whom he ever influenced could have mistaken it, or could doubt that the Bishop's whole heart was loyal. And if anyone ever took the trouble to read the speeches made this year by the leaders of the Church Association at their annual meeting, he could not hesitate for one moment to say on which side in the present collision loyalty to the Church of England is to be found. It is impossible for us not to believe that, however dark the outlook and the position, God is yet working out some great good for the Church when the instrument that is used is Bishop King of Lincoln.

No wonder that Americans are indignant that such a pious and holy man should be disturbed in the good work of his diocese by so bigoted and narrow minded an Association as that which has attacked the Bishop of Lincoln.

Efforts have been made in this country to stamp out Ritualism, but the great number of Churchmen have discovered and learned to respect the principles which underlie the symbols and practices of the Church.

COWLEY, S. JOHN, OXFORD.
April 11th.

My very dear Friends and Parishioners:—I have delayed writing to tell you of my resignation, as I thought it right that the Vestry should first know of it and have time to consider. I need not assure you that nothing but the most distinct sense of duty could lead me to take a step so painful to myself and that involves so many others. It is not easy for me to break the ties that so many years have helped to bind so close. We have lived together through so much, and have faced together so many difficulties in the past. So many of you I have been with in times of darkness and distress, that I can scarcely bring myself to realize that I am to be with you no more.

It is not necessary for me to enter into all the reasons that have forced upon me this conclusion. I need only say that they are entirely personal and that I have from the first been left to act as I thought right, that I am not acting "under obedience" in the sense that I have been told by those in authority to resign, as some, who do not know the Society, have said. My resignation is entirely and only my own act. I have felt increasingly that I was unable to fulfil my duties as Rector of the Parish and to secure for myself that amount of quiet and retirement which I need, and that the reasons which led me to resign three years ago were still too strong to be ignored. I hope it is not necessary that I should take any notice of the various rumors that have been afloat and of which I have heard something at different times. To those who believe such reports, I do not suppose that any answer I should give would be satisfactory, but I imagine most of you do not need any assurance from me. I have been working in England ever since I have been well enough, and I shall probably go for a few months to help Father Puller in S. Africa this spring.

And now my dear friends I must say goodbye. I need not assure you that you shall always have the first place in my heart and in my prayers. I am sure no Priest ever had a congregation who were so kind and so true to one who so little deserved it, so ready to bear with him and to see nothing but the good, where there was so much that was not good, and yet I do not believe there are many congregations whose Priest loved them better. Perhaps in the future it may be allowed us to meet again in this world, but whether that be or not, I pray that God may grant that the bond with which we have been united so long may not be only for time but for eternity.

With every blessing, your affectionate in Christ, B. W. MATURIN.

Parish Notes.

The resignation of the Rector has been received by the Vestry, and F. Maturin's letter to the congregation will explain to them his reasons for resigning.

The trial which the Parish has experienced will call out the real devotion of the members of the Parish to God and His Church.

The activity of the Parish is shown by the report in the present number, but of the most important part of the work there can be no report. This depends upon the prayers of all who take part in the work and without this all the work of the Parish would be useless.

The number of Communions made on Easter morning was 671.

The offertory with special gifts amounted to $1070 98.

The Retreat of the Guild of S. Martha was obliged by the sickness of the Chaplain to be postponed, and will take place on the third Sunday in May.

The Guild of S. Vincent will have their Retreat on Rogation Sunday,

The Festival of the Ascension falls this year on Decoration Day. There will be a celebration at 6, 7 and 9.30. The celebration at 7 will be choral. The boys of the choir will have their usual Festival.

The Rogation days will be observed with continuous intercession, and persons desiring to take part are requested to select their times and give their names to the clergy.

Worthy is the Lamb. }

If God be for us who can be against us. Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifieth. Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea, rather that is risen again, who is at the right hand of God, who makes intercession for us. Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory and blessing.

Blessing and honor, glory and power be unto Him that sitteth upon the the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever.

JOHN NEILL, Acct. Warden.

Philadelphia, March 25th, 1889.

The Accounting Warden calls attention to the following facts in connection with his Annual Report.

During the past year many permanent improvements have been made to the church property, among which should be mentioned the strengthening of the Parish Building, the thorough fitting up of the upper sacristy, etc.

That the first yearly contribution to the Trustees of the Sinking Fund was made in this year, amounting to $480.

That we gave in charity $379.05 more than in the previous year.

At the close of the year there were unpaid pew rents amounting to $740.46 all of which are considered perfectly good.

THE CHURCH DEBT.

In our last annual report, published in the May number of this Magazine, 1888, we announced that we expected to pay off the $8,000 mortgage on the Parish building, and also to pay off, before the next annual report, the $4,000 on the Clergy House.

These promises have now been fulfilled ; both these mortgages, namely the $8,000 on the Parish building and the $4,000 on the Clergy House, together amounting to twelve thousand dollars, have been paid and cancelled, during the past year, and are now among the archives of the Church in the hands of the Accounting Warden. There consequently remains no mortgage on any of the property of the Parish. We shall now commence to accummulate our receipts towards the payment of the ground rent on the Church, but which cannot be paid off until 1892.

While this is a debt we all cheerfully paid to Almighty God for the inestimable privileges we have enjoyed in the services of our beloved church, this fund is also an enduring monument to our beloved Rector, who gave himself to the work of freeing this church from debt, from the time he took charge of it. No testimonial could be more acceptable to him than to know that we are continuing the work he commenced for the church he loved more than words can express.

TRUSTEES OF THE SINKING FUND.

PHILADELPHIA, April 29th, 1889.

To the Rector and Vestry of St. Clement's Church :

GENTLEMEN :—The Trustees of the Church Debt Sinking Fund beg to present the second statement of the new fund, organized in December, 1887, for the purpose of paying off the debt of the Parish.

Again we have to report that our subscriptions have been paid with wonderful punctuality, but a small percentage of the amount subscribed remains unpaid and of this a considerable portion is promised ; some unavoidable delays have been explained, and in but few instances have any of the subscribers permitted their pledges to default without some satisfactory explanation.

We hope the last year's progress will encourage all to make extra sacrifices, if necessary, to complete the work voluntarily undertaken and, so far, successfully accomplished.

OUR COUNTRY HOME.

A few more weeks of sunshine and "Our Country Home" will re-open for another season, in a house at Fallsington, Bucks County, placed at the disposal of the Sisters by Miss Williamson, and which is much larger than any they have heretofore occupied.

Last year the Sisters had two homes, a cottage at Point Pleasant, N. J., and a smaller one at Fallsington. During the season the number received at the homes exceeded by one-third any previous year. Sixty were at Fallsington and one hundred and fifty-nine at Point Pleasant, where the household usually comprised twenty-six in all. It was sometimes increased by a mother's coming for the Sunday, bringing with her the little ones she could not leave behind.

As heretofore, the homes received persons from all parishes applying, without expense during their stay, even car-fare being provided for them when necessary. The traveling expenses were, as usual, reduced one-third by the kindness of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company.

The children were kept at the Home as long as the physician thought desirable, two very delicate little boys remaining all summer. In this way many little ones regained health and strength, when if they had been sent home at the end of a definite time, all the good of their visit would have been undone. And the bright faces and ringing laughter of the children were, in themselves, better thanks than even the unfailing words of earnest gratitude.

Although at Point Pleasant we deeply missed the frequent services, as well as the help and encouragement for which we were indebted to Bishop McLaren the previous summer, the Church life at S. Mary's-by-the-Sea was kept up by occasional services by visiting Priests.

At the close of the season the Sisters gave the Home for ten days to the Guild of S. Vincent (for Acolytes), and at no time can it have contained a happier party. They spent their holiday bathing, fishing and sailing in eager delight, and to their credit it must be said that not one rough word nor selfish action marred the unbroken pleasure of the visit.

Our warmest thanks are due to Dr. J. M. Taylor, at Point Pleasant, who was untiring in every emergency, and to the many others who have shown by their energetic efforts in our behalf their genuine interest in our work.

The financial report shows increased reason for encouragement and deepest thankfulness. We hope that more widespread co-operation will increase the steady support we have received from those who have aided us in the past.

Any member of the committee will receive donations or subscriptions. Subscribers of five dollars are entitled to a card of admission, enabling them to send one person (from any Church or Parish) to the country for so long a time as seems necessary or desirable to those in charge of the Home.

THE MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

During the last year more members of the parish have been giving money and work to the Missionary Society than for several years past. The work done was sent to the Alaska Mission and filled (with articles sent from St. Mark's Parish) three boxes and a barrel. In addition to the money which passed through the hands of the Treasurer, there was given a rebate of freight charges from Philadelphia to Ogden, Utah, and $9.45 to meet other transportation charges. At the monthly meetings addresses were given on the life and work of some modern missionaries of our own communion, viz: Bishop Gray, of Capetown, Bishop Patteson, and Dr. Breck. The Treasurer's account is as follows:

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

This is one of the most important features of the work of any church and but seldom receives the attention it deserves. According to the old custom of the Church the children of the parish should be brought by their parents to be catechised every Sunday. The least that parents can do is to see that their children go to the services provided for children, andalso to the Sunday School unless they give them religious instruction at home.

It has been a great pleasure to the Priests to see a greater number of parents bringing their children to the Children's Eucharist every Sunday at 9 A. M., and it is hoped that the number will still increase largely.

There has been service and catechising for the children every Sunday at 2.30, after which the Sunday School has been held till 4 o'clock.

There are 29 teachers in the school, and 330 scholars in both schools. More teachers are needed; The Infant School is in a very flourishing condition, and has been most carefully taught by Miss Smith and Miss Watson. The little ones have beeen taught to sing by Miss Gordon, assisted by Miss Fox. The Library has been replenished at a good deal of expense. The Superintendent, Dr. Garrett, has taken the greatest pains with the children, and there are now three men teachers. More men are greatly needed as teachers. Some men are needed to help with the Library. Any persons who are willing to teach and to visit the children are earnestly requested to send their names to Father Field, or to Dr. Garrett.

THE SEWING SCHOOL.

There has been a meeting of the Sewing School as usual each Saturday, from October to April. The weekly attendance has averaged from fifty to sixty. Some of the elder children have worked for the Missionary Society during the past year; others made garments for their own use.

THE SHOE CLUB.

This is one of the most useful charities, and helps the children to overcome one of the great difficulties in the way of regular attendance at Sunday School.

Miss Watson will be glad to receive subscriptions and our thanks are due to her and to Miss Smith for their work in this department as well as in the Infant School. The amount expended in shoes was $136.26.

GUILD S. JOHN EVANGELIST.

Number of members on roll, 25; average attendance for past year, 12. Under the management of the Guild, a series of sermons to men were given on Sunday afternoons in Advent, by Rev. A. B. Sharpe, of Newmarket, England. During Friday evenings in Lent, Rev. C. N. Field gave a series of lectures to the Guild. The Guild lost one member by death. Mr. Gorden P. Cummings.

A. W. KILGORE, Secretary.

THE GUILD OF S. VINCENT FOR ACOLYTES.

The Guild was established in February, 1887. It consists of the Acolytes who serve at the general services in Church and Chapel.

The Guild meets on the first Wednesday in each month.

On Easter day, 1888, there were 25 active members; of these one was transferred to "associate membership" and two resigned. Three new members were admitted during the past year.

The present membership is made up of 25 active and 1 associate members.

The offertories to Easter, 1889, amount to $30.09, which is to be used to procure a memorial to F. Sheppard for the Church at Capetown.

Twenty-four members made their second corporate communion on the Sunday preceding S. Vincent's Day (January 20th), after which they partook of a breakfast tendered by the Vestry.

The Retreat proposed for Passion Sunday has been postponed until Rogation Sunday on account of the illness of the Chaplain.

The members of the Guild have reported for serving during the past year 2,082 times and for work other than serving 500 times.

OFFICERS OF THE GUILD.—Chaplain, The Rev. C. N. Field; Warden, L. T. P. Downing; Sec'y-Treas., Walter B. Reed.

S. CHRISTOPHER'S GUILD.

This Guild consists entirely of the Junior Acolytes, and each member is expected to attend the Celebration on Sunday at 9 A. M., whether on duty as acolyte or not, unless prevented by sickness, and if confirmed, to receive the Holy Communion once in each month. There are 17 members. The Junior Sacristan is the Warden of the Guild. The boys have been regular and attentive and extremely careful in their duties.

THE ALTAR GUILD.

The Linen Department has made during the past year 21 sets of altar linen, and 2 sets of white linen vestments, and 4 surplices. It has been able also to send a chalice and paten to each of two missions, St. Paul's, Pekin, Illinois, and River Falls, Wisconsin. Since Nov. 20th, they have sent wafer breads regularly each month to some of the clergy in the following dioceses: Milwaukee, Tennessee, Illinois, N. Ohio, New York, Minnesota, Maryland, Iowa, Missouri, Indiana, Washington Territory, Mississippi, Pittsburg, Idaho, Central New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Florida, Texas, Ontario and Colorado.

S. MARY'S GUILD FOR WOMEN.

This aims to raise the tone of spiritual life and to help the Chaplain in spiritual and corporal works of mercy. It is composed of communicants, who are classed as "Probationers," "Members," "Members of the First Order" and "Associates." The year began with 11 Probationers, 67 Members, 2 Members of the First Order. During the year, the losses were 1 removed, 1 died, 1 resigned, 2 expelled, and 10 suspended, being 15 in all; the gains were 1 returned, 7 reinstated, and 11 admitted, being 19 in all. Thus the Guild has gained 4. There are now 27 Associates.

The Guild has sung Woodward's music in E flat at their monthly celebrations, and has attended the funerals of the two who have died this year (1 Member and 1 Associate), to sing the service.

Their annual excursion went to Florence Heights, New Jersey.

Their retreat was on Thursday in Passion Week, when 36 were able to stay all through.

S. Mary's Guild has supported and cared for the "Mother's Meeting," with its 123 names on the roll; the "Women's Benefit Club," which distributed $78 to its sick members; and the "Christmas Coal Club," which distributed 93 tons of coal last Christmas, costing the recipients $227.50.

Its financial statement is as follows:

THE GUILD OF S. MARTHA.

The object of this Guild is to promote among young women that sense of the love of our Lord for them in their daily work which may enable them to do all their labor cheerfully for His sake, and to help one another in purity of life and conversation, and modesty of behavior at all times and in all places.

The members must be 14 years of age and they must have been confirmed or be in preparation for confirmation.

The Guild meets the 3d Sunday in each month. There are 35 members.

MISS PACKARD, } Mistresses of the Guild.
MISS WOOD, }

THE GUILD OF THE HOLY CHILD.

This Guild is intended for children during the year before and the year after Confirmation. The children are about 12 years of age and receive the Holy Communion at all great Festivals in the first year after Confirmation.

Many attend the monthly meeting and the weekly practice of singing, and sing at the Children's Eucharist. Children are allowed to continue in the Guild as Associates until the age of 16. Some children are admitted as Honorary members. The members and Associates pay 5 cents monthly, and the Honorary members pay 50 cents at Easter and Christmas. There are thirty members and seven Honorary members.

S. BARNABAS GUILD FOR NURSES.

A Branch of this Guild which is meant to strengthen the spiritual life of trained nurses is located in the parish. It is composed of 10 Associates and 49 members. The Guild is represented on the nursing staff of the University Hospital, the Philadelphia, the Pennsylvania, the Women's, the Medico-Chirurgical, the Children's, the Episcopal, the Home for Incurables, besides having many engaged in private nursing. It meets occasionally for social entertainments, as well as for its regular monthly meetings. It has been able sometimes to direct physicians and others to the nurses they were needing, and has brightened, we hope, some lives in which there was much hard work.

THE GUILD OF THE IRON CROSS.

This Guild is now a Branch of the general organization which was founded in this Parish in 1883. There are now more than 60 Branches. There are three Branches in Philadelphia. S. Clement's Guild of the Iron Cross has 168 members, 20 Honorary Members in the city. A large number of members have left the city but remain on the books and write to the Chaplain from time to time. There are also a large number of Associates.

This Branch entertained the delegates at the General Convention of the Iron Cross held on Jan. 25th, 1889, in Philadelphia, on which occasion the Right Reverend the Bishop of Delaware preached to the Guild, and became an Honorary Chaplain.

The object of the Society may be briefly stated as, "resisistance to sin by the use of sacramental grace." Several men have been brought to Baptism, Confirmation and Holy Communion by the members of the Guild. Many have been brought to the Church, and others have been led by its means to live a more regular life.

The Chaplain of the Guild has continued the work of publication of religious papers and books and has issued during the year:

54,000 Papers.
5,000 Churchman's Kalenders (illustrated).
5,000 Saints of the Fourth Century.
5,000 Catechisms of the Apostles and Evangelists.
1,000 "A Man's Thoughts in Lent."
1,000 Manuals.
Cards, Leaflets, &c.

Many grants have been made to poor Missions.

This work would be greatly helped by prompt payment for publications ordered; but about one thousand dollars is owing to the Publication fund.

THE IRON CROSS PARLOR, THE BOYS' GYMNASIUM, AND SATURDAY HALF HOLIDAY FUND

The Iron Cross Parlor is a large room 70 x 25 feet, in which the boys can read and play quiet games. A number of exhibitions have been given with the stereopticon. A committee of ladies have taken charge of this part of the work. The room is beautifully decorated with good pictures which have been kindly given to the Chaplain. The next floor was opened on Jan. 1st by the Bishop as a gymnasium and is well equipped. A steward of the rooms and a trainer have been regularly engaged.

During the winter the Parlor was open each morning to men out of work, and work was provided for some, who were by this means saved from starvation. Positions were found for several men and boys, and some of the chief business men in the city have promised to consider any application sent by us.

The Saturday Half Holiday Fund for giving to working boys a half holiday in the country has been a great success from the start. A large number of boys was taken each Saturday, and they were accompanied by men of the Iron Cross and the President of the Junior Iron Cross, Dr. Garrett. There are 200 boys on the register of the Iron Cross Gymnasium, but the Junior Guild of the Iron Cross consists only of those who have, by good conduct, merited the Iron Cross, and of these there are 16.

The Chaplain, F. Field, thanks all those who have so kindly and generously helped the boys, most of whom have requested that their names may not be published. They are acknowledged as far as possible in the Iron Cross Papers. The expenses for Publications have been about $1200.00 and the receipts about 1000.

The expenses of the Iron Cross Parlors and Gymnasium have been about $700.00 and for boys excursions, $160.00.
The expenses of Secretary, &c., $300.00.

THE DISPENSARY.

The time between Easter, 1888, and Easter, 1889, nearly thirteen months, has been full of events in the history of the Dispensary. Just after Easter, 1888, the settlement on the new property, corner of Cherry and Claymont streets, was made by our paying $3800 and executing a bond and mortgage to the Fidelity Loan and Trust Company for the rest of the purchase money, $8000. During the year $1000 has been paid on this, thus reducing our debt to $7000.

As soon as the builders, Messrs. George F. Payne & Co., were through the work of remodeling the building so as to adapt it in part to our work, the service of benediction was held on the afternoon of Ascension Day. On May 16th, the Dispensaries opened in their new quarters. The upper floor has been used by the family of the Janitor, by the Committee to cut out the work for the Missionary Society, by the Embroidery Class of the Altar Guild and, on Sunday, by Fr. Convers' Bible Class for Men. The ground floor has been occupied by the various Dispensaries, all of which have grown largely during the year. That for Diseases of Women has been opened every week-day, since October 1st instead of twice a week as at first. The hour and the medical staff in charge have been changed also. Its work can be seen in the table below. The Dispensary for the Throat, Nose and Ear has so grown as to require the Physician in charge to stay much longer than his advertized hour, and will soon require to be opened one more day each week. The only other special Dispensary opened during the past year has been the Surgical. It is held on the afternoon of each week-day; and while still so new as to be an experiment, yet is growing quite vigorously. The General Medical Dispensary have increased very largely. For several months the experiment was tried of having a nurse to visit cases at their homes, thus enabling the Surgeons to perform some operations which otherwise could not have been done. But as there was very little demand for her services, the scheme was discontinued. In this connection can be given this list of operations in the Dispensary for Diseases of Women, every one of which has been successful: for cancer, 2; for lacerated cervix, 2; abdominal section, 1; removal of caruncle, 1, and currettement, 3.

The following table of the "new patients seen each month," of "old patients returned" and "total visits" for the last twelve months compared with the like figures for the proceeding twelve months will show the growth of the work.

THE HOSPITAL.

Now, for the first time we add this new head to our report. It seems as if the plan which Fr. Maturin proposed nearly six years ago is on the point of being realized. One lady, not a parishioner, has pledged us the generous sum of three thousand dollars for the running expenses of the Hospital during its first year. To use this will require that we make some changes in the building and furnish it for Hospital use. If there be any response to this help so kindly given from outside there seems to be no insuperable obstacle to our being able to open our first ward for patients about next S. Clement's Day. It is meant to receive chronic cases, which are not yet incurables, but which require longer treatment than can be given in Hospitals intended for acute cases. There will be no restriction of race or creed. To support the Hospital indefinitely upon the scale proposed, will require nothing more than the continuance of last year's income. To receive year after year as much as was given within the time covered by this statement is to enable us to carry on the work of both Dispensaries and Hospital. Is it castle building to expect this? Surely we can do what we have done in a year unmarked by any such special effort as the Fair.

How thankful we ought to be for the past! How we ought to do all in our power to relieve some more of our suffering neighbors! United earnest effort now will give us our Hospital.

In addition to the funds given in the Treasurer's Report, $250 is in bank towards the endowment of a bed.

The Christian Year.

The next great festival of the Church is Whitsuntide (June 9th). This Festival should be observed with special honor as the birthday of the Church. It is no small matter of thankfulness that in spite of all the efforts of Satan to break the chain, and the false assertions of those who would rob us of our privileges, the Anglican Church has retained Apostolic Succession as truly as the Roman or Greek portions of the Church. There can be no true Church without the Apostolic Succession, for there has been no new descent of the Holy Ghost since the first Whitsunday, or Day of Pentecost.

Our Blessed Lord sent the Holy Ghost according to His promise, and He has not left the Church, but makes the Church and Christ one by His continual indwelling.

The Festival of the Holy Trinity, which is properly the Octave of Whitsunday, or Pentecost, is appointed by our Church in honor of that first great cardinal Doctrine of the Church which Christians need to honor in these days of uncertain Faith. This is the concluding Great Festival of our Christian year.

And now, when all the great Festivals have been observed, it is hoped that all Christians will keep the whole Christian year with the grace that has been given them on these great days.

Parish Notes.

Father Hall is better, and will soon be able to be removed from the Hospital. His recovery was a very remarkable answer to prayer, which was continually offered for him by a large number of persons in the Church of S. John the Evangelist.

Father Maturin sailed for Africa on May 10th.

Father Osborn is not much better, and as yet has not in any way recovered the use of his arms.

Father Field will give a series of lectures at the Church of the Ascension, in Atlantic City, on Thursday evenings.

F. Convers will give a Retreat for ladies, at Boston, during the last week in June.

The Retreats for the Guild of S. Martha and S. Vincent held on the fourth and fifth Sundays after Easter were well attended.

On May 20th an Entertainment was most kindly given in the Iron Cross Parlor, by some ladies and gentlemen, on behalf of the Boys' Saturday Half Holiday Fund. Nearly a hundred dollars was realized. In the evening some ladies from Bryn Mawr gave a concert to the boys, and the athletic performances in the Gymnasium were extremely creditable, The prizes were awarded by Mr. Frank Wetherill.

The Sunday School Festival will take place on Wednesday, June 26th. Subscribers are requested to send their subscriptions to F. Field as soon as convenient. Every one in the Church is invited to contribute something towards this holiday in the country for all the children.

Anthem, Whoso dwelleth, Martin.

Whoso dwelleth under the defence of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty. I will say unto the Lord Thou art my hope and my stronghold; my God, in Him will I trust.

He shall defend thee under His wings, and thou shalt be safe under his feathers. His faithfulness and truth shall be thy shield and buckler.

Lord Jesus, King of Paradise,
O keep me in Thy love,
And guide me to that happy land
Of perfect rest above;
Where loyal hearts and true
Stand ever in the light
All rapture through and through
In God's most Holy sight.

Service, Tours in C.
8 P. M., Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Barnby in Eb.
Anthem, O clap your hands, Stainer.

O clap your hands all ye people, sing unto God with the voice of melody. For the Lord our God is terrible. He is the great King over all the earth. They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength. They shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary; they shall walk and not faint.

Trust ye in the Lord for ever, for in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength.

The Hospital.

Everybody who has taken any interest in our medical charity (that will include the whole of the parish and quite a large circle outside) will be glad to see that heading. Yes, it actually means that we are planning to open our wards for beds. And we can all thank God for the success with which He has crowned our efforts, and for the literal way in which He has answered our prayers.

How did it come about? In this way. One of our parishioners, who cared for the Dispensary, told one of her friends about it, and the account so interested the latter that she gave us three thousand dollars towards the Hospital funds. Scarcely had we realized that this insured the Hospital, or at least made it possible to begin; than the same kind heart increased the gift twelve thousand more. It has been so unexpected that it is hard, even yet, to realize it.

The additions to the building will be a memorial to one who has "fallen asleep." And if the object of a memorial be to keep alive the loving remembrance of the departed, what better way could be chosen? Every sufferer in these beds cannot but see the tablet which tells of one for love of whom stands the ward. Sometimes when pain will keep them awake at night, and the moonlight will faintly show the tablet to them, though they cannot then read it, they will recall the name and bless God for one whom they never saw in the flesh; for love of whom, it has come to pass, that they can leave the dirt of a neglected room for the cleanliness of the Hospital; they can leave the hot, stifling court for the cool, airy ward; they can have the skill of medical practitioners and the constant attendance of nurses instead of the neglect which is the lot of so many. They will remember with gratitude those to whom they owe it all.

How lasting such memorials are too. Wealth may polish its granite and carve its marble into a tombstone, and so long as it lasts and is cared for some will remember the departed. But soon heaven and earth go on a step; those who reared it fall asleep, and then silence and oblivion. The grass grows long and hides the mound, and love comes not to care for the grave, though some one may for hire do so. But so long as Christian charity incites Christian people to care for the suffering, so long shall the Hospital go on. The generations may go; but pity for the sick, religion which longs to continue Christ's work of healing will last on, and they will care for the memorial Hospital. Because such a memorial insures a loving memory and will be cared for as none other, it is the best.

As our wards shall be opened to the members of all creeds and of no creed; some will only think of the one to whom the ward is a memorial with gratitude; but others will, no doubt, breathe a prayer that God will grant rest and peace to one who is their benefactor.

The question of what use could the money be put to for the few months to elapse before it will be needed, was answered by taking a part of it to pay the mortgage and by putting the rest in bank so as to draw interest. So the mortgage is "satisfied." We shall have to replace this out of the Dispensary funds, as it is all to be used on the Hospital; but that can be managed without serious difficulty.

What do we intend to do? First, to build two stories more to our building. We shall then have four floors, one will be occupied (as at present) by the drug store, the Dispensary, and the office; one by the ward for women and girls (which we hope to open first); one by the ward for men and boys (to be opened as soon as we can see our way clearly) and one by the nurses and other attendants. The kitchen and laundry will be on the top floor. An elevator, working in the well of the stairway, will enable us to go up and down easily. The ground floor will be the only one without a bath room. The plans are now in progress. As soon as they shall have been approved by the Board of Managers and by the Building Commissioners of the city, the contracts will be let to the lowest responsible bidder, and the changes will begin.

The next step will be to furnish the Hospital. Something has already been done. Some of the bed linen is already made up. There is more to be done. Whoever wishes to give any article that will be made up, will please speak to Mrs. Grubb, who has that matter in charge. If some will give both materials and sewing, we shall be thankful. Mrs. Grubb will give those who ask her, the sizes, patterns, etc. To those who will give the sewing only, she will furnish the materials cut out.

Probably there are others who wish, either by themselves or with others, to do something towards furnishing the Hospital. Most other articles will have to be purchased, and cannot be made. What will be needed? A thousand and one things. There are iron cots for the wards, the chairs, tables, eating trays, screens, and other furniture for the wards; the furnishing of the nurses' rooms, the kitchen and the laundry, the dishes for the pantry; or, to speak of larger matters, there will be the elevator, the iron plate girders, the steam heating apparatus. Just so far as these are given us, will the money be saved to help in the current expenses of the first year. Probably some would rather give what will be a part of the permanent outfit, than contribute to the current expenses. If you are one of them, your best plan would be to decide what you will give, speak to one of the House Committee, give them your pledge; in the autumn (probably early in November) the Head Nurse or the Purchasing Committee will order it, and the bill can be sent to the donor. This will prevent several giving the same things, for we are not rich enough to stand duplication; and insure the best knowledge we have being used in the selection of the goods. The House Committee, who will receive your pledges, are Mrs. Neill, Mrs. Kilgore, Mrs. Erben, Mrs. A. C. Roberts, Miss Schell, and the Vice President.

The Hospital will receive chronic cases. It is easy to get acute cases cared for in the existing Hospitals; it is hard, but not impossible, to get incurables cared for; but those who are neither the one nor the other, are those for whom no one seems to care. We shall provide for these as far as we can. When one thinks of their numbers, our scanty accommodations seem very little; but we will do our little; and it may be God will prosper us and enable us to minister to more than we now expect. We do not expect to receive acute cases, incurable cases, or contagious cases.

For the support of the Hospital we shall depend on voluntary contributions in the future as in the past. Perhaps there may be some who will undertake, either by themselves or with others, to "support a bed." That is, they can give three hundred dollars in the year, and this we expect will pay the expenses of one patient during the whole of the year. If they should continue this year after year, the bed could be called by some special name, so long as they "support it," by giving that sum annually. To endow a bed forever will require five thousand dollars, that the interest may be three hundred each year.

Dispensary Notes.

The thanks of those connected with the Dispensary are due to the "Prospect Dramatic Association," for the entertainment they gave towards the endowment of a bed in the Hospital. It was much enjoyed by those who were present; and netted about one hundred and fifty dollars. The funds of "Jeremiah," for the endowment, amount now to a little over four hundred dollars.

C. L. Bower, M. D., 26 S. Eighteenth street, has been chosen one of the surgeons of the Dispensary.

There is one vacancy on the staff of the Medical Dispensary, which will shortly be filled.

The April work at the various clinics was larger than any month since we began, there being over eleven hundred visits.

The Iron Cross Parlor, Boys' Gymnasium and Saturday Half Holiday Fund.

Any person who would like to help on this institution can do so by giving a little time and work during the summer. An Amateur Art Exhibition will be held in the fall, and all who can draw, paint, or do embroidery are requested to send a specimen of their work to Father Field or any of the Committee.

There will be a long list of Patronesses who will guarantee the success of the Exhibition, and as the summer is a time when people are glad to have some object in view, and some direction in which to apply their talents, this will furnish what they desire.

The success of the Parlor and Gymnasium has well repaid all the expectations of its patrons, and it is hoped that every one will try to help forward its work among the boys.

There is no more lively scene in the city than this Parlor and Gymnasium every evening.

The Diocesan Convention.

The Convention of this Diocese was held in S. Luke's Church on May 14th.

The special sermon was preached by the Rev. Daniel Bates.

The first resolution offered in the convention was that of the Rev. John Bolton, who proposed that a fund should be raised for increasing the stipends of Rectors of feeble parishes. He drew a vivid description of the trials of a young man who enters a parish with the desire to give himself up to the service of God, but is hampered by an ignorant protestant vestryman, and a ritualistic young organist, and an orthodox schoolmistress, and sundry other well-known characters, who are the special trials of a country Rector.

The weak point of Mr. Bolton's argument came when he drew the dramatic picture of the young Recor with a young wife and six or seven children, all dragging the poor young man down with a load of anxiety which he is unable to bear.

In what profession except that of a clergyman would this be considered as anything but a gross indiscretion? What right has any man to marry till he can support a wife in comfort?

The Greek Church expects all the Parish Clergy to be married, but it expects that the Clergy should be supported by the State and a certain tax which keeps the Rector independent. There is no such way of a Rector being supported in this country. Feeble parishes can often support an unmarried man, but not a family, however advantageous it might be for them to have a model family in their midst. The true remedy for the lamentable state of things pictured by the mover of the resolution is the formation of missionary centres, from which men can go forth to minister to the villages and country places. The Methodists have long ago learned how to manage this problem, but they learned a practical lesson from those who had gone before, and adapted it to their own system.

Young clergymen will not be so eager to marry in haste, and find no place left for repentance, if they can only have the strength of association. Our Lord sent forth His disciples two and two to every place whither He Himself would come, and if this rule of association were more generally adopted, there would not be so many hasty clerical marriages.

Colleges are needed where men can live together plainly but in comfort. Clergy houses in the country, where two or three clergy can live together and have mission stations in all the settlements round, will enable the Church to do her work in the country without fear of man or woman in any Parish. The writer was once in such a clergy house.

There were three Clergy, and these Clergy easily managed two large churches (one holding 1600 people), and several mission chapels.

Take another well-known instance: Wantage, in England, is a model country parish. It has had its influence upon the whole of England. The Rector was married and lived in the Rectory. His curates, eight or nine of them, were all unmarried. They lived in a Clergy house and very few of them ever found time for courtship or need of society. They did an immense deal of work and were all well trained when they themselves became Rectors of parishes. Many of them are leading parish Priests in England to-day.

Compulsory celibacy has been proved to be an unwise method of discipline, but the answer to the argument of Mr. Bolton is to be found in the ease and power with which young unmarried men, with discretion, would be able to fill the same positions. Unmarried men are less hampered and entangled by the things of this world, and the clerical office is one which needs free men, independent, and able to speak the truth without fear of consequences. If young men will marry without looking ahead, and young women will be so foolish as to marry without any prospect of a home, Parishes will suffer, and the lamentable spectacle will often occur of a young man and a young woman, with young children, dependent upon charity for their support.

The next important subject before the Convention was proportionate Representation in General Convention. The resolution favoring this was adopted by the Clergy 69 to 42, and by the laymen 57 to 20. But the resolution to adopt it in the Diocesan Convention was lost.

The subject will be brought up in the next Convention. The proposition is that each parish shall send a delegate for each 100 communicants, but not more than seven, whereas it has been the custom for each parish, as a parish, to send the same number. The proposition is fair only without restriction. Some large parishes have 1200 communicants and 500 of them would have had no representation if the report had been adopted.

It was strange that only one or two of the larger parishes voted for it, while in these cases the Clergy and laity were not agreed.

Mr. Richardson L. Wright, as representing S. Mark's Church, Frankford, which had the largest number of communicants of any church in the diocese protested against it.

S. Mark's Church, Philadelphia, did not vote for it. Our own lay representative spoke strongly against it. What object could be gained by it? It might give the laity more power in the Convention. This may be the real secret of the resolution, but the Church has suffered already too much and too long from a secularized Clergy and half-instructed laity. Good laymen know that the proper persons to govern the Church are the Bishops and Priests in council assembled. The most devout, earnest, and religious churchmen shrink from meddling with the affairs of their spiritual Fathers. They are willing to aid them in the financial matters of the Church, but look to them to govern the Church according to her ancient customs and rules.

The Convention next considered the formation of new parishes. Great objection was raised to a requirement that there should be 40 communicants, of which 15 should be men. Some of the members were in favor of putting the word "worshipper" instead of communicant, but as to some minds it is not very clear what a worshipper means, and it might mean even an unbaptized person attending the church, it is a good thing that the report was accepted as originally put forth.

Letter from Father Maturin.

May 15, 1889.

MY DEAR F. FIELD:—I had meant to write you so as to mail the letter at Lisbon, but I thought I would wait until I had seen Lisbon and post this at Madeira which we hope to reach tomorrow morning early. I left London on Friday morning by a special train, which runs in connection with these boats, a cold, wet, dreary morning. F. Benson came with me to see me off at Dartmouth. By the time we got there it had cleared off into a beautiful afternoon, the sun shining and almost the last sound I heard before I left the harbor was the cuckoo, the first time this year.

A sea voyage is very much the same wherever it is and so are the passengers, of that peculiar type that one meets on board ship and never meets anywhere else, nor wants to meet, with a few exceptions. The first day I spent in bed, a cold, blowing, rough day, but since then I have been quite well and nearly every one else seems the same. The ship is very much like one of the smaller Atlantic boats, but a great contrast in size to the one we crossed on last year, that was 8000 tons and this 3600. The captain would not allow us to have any service on Sunday, partly he said, because there might be a number of Roman Catholics getting on next day at Lisbon, which seemed somewhat inconsequential, and partly because it was the first Sunday out which ought to be, I suppose, distinctly a day of rest. I hope, however, we shall be able to have celebrations frequently. There is a Mr. Hewlett on board with his wife and sister-in-law on their way to Madagascar where he has been doing mission work some years; he is an associate of the Society and a very nice fellow, so that I don't by any means feel alone; the Bishop of Praritzburg's wife on her way back to her husband and one or two young fellows going to different parts of Africa.

Yesterday morning we arrived at Lisbon at 5 or 6 o'clock and after breakfast most of the passengers went on shore and had several hours, as we were not supposed to weigh anchor until 3.30 and in fact did not until 5.30.

Lisbon is not very interesting—almost all the buildings were destroyed by the earthquake in 1755. The cathedral still remains standing and one or two other churches, but scarcely any of any interest or beauty. The cathedral might be handsome if it were restored; but it is in a wretched state of filth and untidiness and whatever beauty it has is lost—in the Church of S. Rock there is a very beautiful chapel with handsome mosaics and marbles; it was set up in S. Peter's at Rome temporarily and the Pope said the first mass in it, then it was taken down and transferred to Lisbon. About three miles off from the landing there is a most exquisite church, called the Church of Belem, it was built in fulfillment of a vow, about three hundred years ago—the carving is very rich and the whole building most striking, I believe all the stone was brought from India—it was the only thing I saw of any architectural pretensions. I had a kind letter before I got up in the morning from the American minister, Mr. Lewis, of Hoboken, who treated me with the usual American hospitality and put his carriage at my disposal, by which means I was able to see more than I could otherwise—so almost my last memories of Europe will be blended with the thought of America as indeed are all my thoughts of everywhere and everything.

To-morrow morning we stop for a few hours at Madeira and then we do not stop again until we reach the Cape.

To-day is a glorious day, the sea quite calm and the sun shining. We have been going for the past few days almost due south, in fact we have only altered the time once since starting, half an hour. We do not go it is true at the same furious pace that we reach across the Atlantic, our longest run in a day has been about 310 miles.

Will you tell the many kind people in Philadelphia whose letters I have not been able to answer, that it has not been through indifference, but I was giving a large retreat before I sailed, which kept me so busy that I had not a moment.

I see the Standard of the Cross has a correspondent who is very angry with my disloyalty to the Episcopal Church because I would be violating the Canons if I resigned against the will of the Bishop and of the Vestry, but as I did neither and as my resignation was my own act entirely; it was rather a wanton supposition. In the last number I saw, the same writer is not content with our Statutes on the ground of its being ex post facto legislation. As a matter of fact the only resignation before these Statutes, was one to which the Canons did not apply, being accepted by the Vestry. The whole of the communication between myself and my superior on the subject of my resignation could be summed up I suppose in two lines from him, when feeling myself that I ought to resign I wrote and asked him and he answered, "I think you ought, but it is not necessary to decide at present," that was last autumn and I took that as permission and acted upon it. I hope you will let me hear from you and of the parish, you may be sure you are all often in my prayers. Please thank F. Convers for his book.

Ever yours very affectionately,

B. W. MATURIN.

Parish Notes.

The alterations in the Services will be noted.

It is hoped that all who can will try to come to the daily Evensong, at 8 o'clock, and on Tuesdays and Thursdays to the Celebrations at 9.30.

Those who live in the country or occupy summer houses can so arrange their visits to the city as to be present at one of these Services.

The men of the choir will have a holiday in August. The boys will have their vacations in July. It is believed that in this way the character of the music will best be preserved during the summer.

On Trinity Sunday a sermon was preached on the Athanasian Creed, and as it was announced that copies of this Creed would be distributed after service, there was a great demand for it. The supply was not equal to the demand and it has therefore been republished in this magazine. The Creed has been electrotyped, and can be had by those who wish to put it as a leaflet in their prayer books as it stands in the book of our Mother Church of England.

A series of papers will be issued in the Magazine, on the religious opinions and errors of those who differ from us. The Unitarians, a large and philanthropic body, come first on our list.

The Children's Home at Falsington is opened and full of children. The next thing that is wanted is a convalescent home for boys. Who will give us a house in the country or at the seaside?

The month of June began with the news of the disaster at Johnstown and our Parish did its part in giving for the relief of the sufferers. Many gave privately and a collection was made in the evening of Sunday amounting to $171.

Private donations were given to Father Field for use in special case amounting to $71.40. The sum of $45 was collected at Newtown where the Rev. Mr. Westmacott has been taking the services for several Sundays.

Father Field went up to Johnstown on the Monday after the calamity, acting as Chaplain to the Red Cross Society. He arrived at Johnstown on the Wednesday and was for some days the only Priest of our Church in the city. He returned on the Saturday morning before Whitsunday to Philadelphia. After preaching on Sunday evening at S. Clement's, he went back with Brother Maynard to Johnstown. He baptised nine persons in Johnstown, one a baby born at the time of the flood. This is not the child called Moses who was baptised by the Presbyterian Preacher, Dr. Beale.

The Evening Canticles, Garrett in F.

The Unitarians.

The name they bear reveals to us something of their doctrine. They maintain that God exists in One Person only. They insist upon the Unity of the Godhead as opposed to the Trinity. The one God, however, is not with them banished to a remote corner of His Creation. He is the great All-Father who loves and compassionates His children. He is able and willing to help them.

Unitarianism is an attempt to escape from the mystery of the doctrine of the Holy Trinity. But it is not the first attempt. So early as A. D. 200 Praxeas was perplexed by the same doctrine. He tried to get out of the difficulty that it presents by merging the Three Persons of the Godhead into One Person. The Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit were but different names for the same Divine Person, who acted in different ways—sometimes as Father, sometimes as Son, sometimes as Spirit. So that it was even taught by the followers of Praxeas that the Father became Man, was born, and suffered. And on account of this they were called by their opponents Patripassians. Praxeas was followed about the middle of the third century by Sabellius, whose teaching was of a similar kind.

But the real ancestors of the Unitarians were the Arians, who tried to solve the difficulty in another way. Arianism made God the Father supreme at the expense of the two other Persons of the Holy Trinity. There was a period, they said, when the Son of God had no existence. He was created by the Father before all worlds indeed, but still created. He was specially enlightened by the Father, and in a lesser sense might be called God, for by His agency God made the world. In the fourth century Christendom was torn asunder by the dispute between the followers of Arius and the champions of the true Godhead of our Lord. A great Council of the whole Church was held at Nicæa in the year 325. Athanasius and the orthodox bishops on the one side, Arius and his followers on the other. There is a Latin proverb which says, "Truth is great, and will finally prevail." And so it came to pass that Arianism, casting as it did dishonor upon our Lord, was by the whole Christian world condemned, and the truth was vindicated.

The fruits of this council are gathered up for all time in the Nicene and Athanasian Creeds, which assert that Jesus Christ Himself is very God of very God, Begotten, not made; that He is equal to the Father as touching His Godhead; and that the Godhead of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost is all one; the glory equal, the majesty coeternal.

The decision of the Nicene Council was not given without much prayer and much searching of the Holy Scriptures. And we must believe that it was dictated by the Holy Spirit Who was expressly sent to guide the Church into all truth. There would be much weighing of our Lord's own words, such as: "I and the Father are (essentially) One." "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father." Or again of the statement of the beloved Apostle that "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God." Then, too, the Baptismal formula would be carefully considered, in which Christ bade His disciples baptize all the nations into the one Name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost.

Yet the Nicene Fathers recollected that the distinction between the Three Persons is as clearly revealed as their essential Unity. Thus our Lord says to His disciples on the evening before the crucifixion: "I will pray the Father and He shall give you another Comforter that He may be with you for ever, even the Spirit of Truth." Here, we observe, the Son prays; the Father hears and gives; the Holy Ghost comes.

It might have been supposed that the putting forth of these Creeds, drawn as they are carefully from Scripture, and bearing upon them the sanction and approval of the whole Christian world, would have settled these questions once for all. Unhappily it was not so. In the confusion and turmoil of the Reformation we find the same old heresies started again, and Socinianism called into question once more the doctrine of the Trinity.

It is difficult to distinguish between Socinianism and modern Unitarianism. They both agree in denying that the Son is equal to the Father as touching His Godhead, and both fall into the errors consequent upon such denial. The old Socinianism refused to believe that the Holy Spirit is a Person; denied that we inherit the corruption of Adam's Nature; asserted that Christ's merits consisted not in the death which He died upon the Cross, but in His life, His teaching, His example. Socinianism really undermines the doctrines of the Incarnation and the Atonement. If Jesus Christ was not God, then the whole fabric of Christianity falls to the ground. His Blood does not wash away our sins. Union with Him does not mean that we are really partakers of the Divine Nature. And if we are not sharers of the Divine Nature, where is the pledge of our immortality? In such a case S. Paul would have said that of all men we are the most miserable. What the ancient Socinians taught, modern Unitarians hold more or less definitely. The teaching and example of Christ, not His Person and His Sacrifice, are all important with them. We may imitate Him in His admirable life; but we cannot be made one with Him in any real sense and so be made one with God.

The existence ot Unitarianism warns us that we should carefully examine what is our faith. The Unitarian revolts from what he thinks is the creed of the Churchman—belief in three Gods. He is mistaken, of course. But how many there are who unconsciously think of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost as three separate Beings, each independent of the other, though acting in harmony together! As a matter of fact, the Creeds of the Church insist upon the Unity of the Godhead as fully as any Unitarian could do. "To say there be three Gods or three Lords is forbidden by the Catholic religion." With the Jew, with the Mohammedan, with the Unitarian, the Church asserts that "God is One." Though the Father is God and the Son is God and the Holy Ghost is God, yet they are not three Gods but one God.

The doctrine of the three distinct Persons in one God is a great mystery. Nor is it to be expected that created beings should be able to understand and measure their Maker. He is past finding out. The very terms we use to describe Him are inadequate for the purpose. And so the Creed teaches us to bow our whole being before Him and say, not we know or understand but we worship one God in Trinity and Trinity in Unity. We are like the angels in heaven, who dare not presume to do aught else than cast their crowns, the gifts of reason and affection with which He has endowed them, before the Throne, crying, "Holy, Holy, Holy is the Lord of Hosts! Heaven and earth are full of His glory."

The Unitarians have tried to reason out what God intended should be received with submission—the mystery of His own Being.

And now let us notice in conclusion that, though the Being of God is a mystery, and must remain so, to poor finite creatures like ourselves, yet Revelation has made clear what He is to us.

The Creed reminds us that we believe in God the Father Almighty, Maker of heaven and earth. That is, first we agree with the Deist that God made everything visible and invisible. But, as Almighty, we believe that He still has control over the world He has made. So far from being removed from it, He guides and regulates its affairs. Were His hand to be withdrawn, then all things would return to chaos out of which they were brought.

Then there is the word "Father" by which we acknowledge all that the Unitarian prizes so highly. God is our Father. We are His children. He loves us and desires our happiness. He does more, and here we go beyond the Unitarian. He gives His love practical effect. He sends His Only-begotten Son into the world, that the world through Him may be saved.

And so Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners, having emptied Himself of His glory which He had with the Father before the world was. He is perfect God and perfect Man. He shares the nature of God. He shares our nature. So by union with Him we are lifted up into the Divine Nature. He dies upon the Cross, He gives His life a ranson for many. His blood cleanseth from all sin.

Then arises the question, how shall we have union with Him? How shall we individually touch His Sacred Person? And the answer is, by the assistance of the Comforter whom He promised to send from the Father—the personal Holy Ghost proceeding from the Father and the Son. In Baptism the Holy Spirit brings us into union with Christ, so that we can say with S. Paul, "We are members of His Body, of His Flesh, and of His Bones." In Confirmation He comes to strengthen us in this union. And as we partake of Christ's sacred Body and Blood, He is there, helping us to discern so great a mystery. Cleansed and sanctified, our bodies become the temples of the Holy Ghost.

Thus we see the Three Persons of the Blessed Trinity co-operate in our redemption and sanctification. And, realizing this, we turn again to worship the One God in Trinity, and Trinity in Unity. And to the Holy Spirit we pray,

Teach us to know the Father, Son,
And Thee of both to be but one.

J. H. M.

The Athanasian Creed.

WHOSOEVER will be saved: before all things it is necessary that he hold the Catholic Faith.

Which Faith except every one do keep whole and undefiled without doubt he shall perish everlastingly.

And the Catholic Faith is this: That we worship one God in Trinity, and Trinity in Unity:

Neither confounding the Person: nor dividing the Substance.

For there is one Person of the Father, another of the Son: and another of the Holy Ghost.

But the Godhead of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, is all one: the Glory equal, the Majesty coeternal:

Such as the Father is, such is the Son: and such is the Holy Ghost.

The Father uncreate, the Son uncreate: and the Holy Ghost uncreate.

The Father incomprehensible, the Son incomprehensible: and the Holy Ghost incomprehensible.

The Father eternal, the Son eternal: and the Holy Ghost eternal. And yet they are not three eternals: but one eternal.

As also there are not three incomprehensibles, nor three uncreated: but one uncreated and one incomprehensible.

So likewise the Father is Almighty, the Son Almighty: and the Holy Ghost Almighty.

And yet they are not three Almighties: but one Almighty.

So the Father is God, the Son is God: and the Holy Ghost is God. And yet they are not three Gods: but one God.

So likewise the Father is Lord, the Son Lord: and the Holy Ghost Lord. And yet not three Lords: but one Lord.

So like as we are compelled by the Christian Verity: to acknowledge every Person by himself to be God and Lord;

So are we forbidden by the Catholic Religion: to say, There be three Gods, or three Lords.

The Father is made of none: neither created, nor begotten.

The Son is of the Father alone: not made, nor created, but begotten.

The Holy Ghost is of the Father and of the Son: neither made, nor created, nor begotten, but proceeding.

So there is one Father, not three Fathers: one Son, not three Sons: one Holy Ghost, not three Holy Ghosts.

And in this Trinity none is afore, or after other: none is greater, or less than another:

But the whole three Persons are co-eternal together: and co-equal.

So that in all things, as is aforesaid: the Unity in Trinity, and the Trinity in Unity is to be worshipped.

He therefore that will be saved: must thus think of the Trinity.

Furthermore, it is necessary to everlasting salvation: that he also believe rightly the Incarnation of our Lord Jesus Christ.

For the right Faith is, that we believe and confess: that our Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, is God and Man;

God, of the substance of the Father, begotten before the worlds: and Man, of the substance of His Mother, born in the world:

Perfect God and perfect Man: of a reasonable soul and human flesh subsisting;

Equal to the Father, as touching His Godhead: and inferior to the Father, as touching His Manhood.

Who although He be God and Man: yet He is not two, but one Christ;

One altogether; not by confusion of substance: but by unity of Person.

For as the reasonable soul and flesh is one man: so God and Man is one Christ;

Who suffered for our salvation; descended into hell, rose again the third day from the dead.

He ascended into heaven, He sitteth on the right hand of the Father, God Almighty: from whence He shall come to judge the quick and the dead,

At whose coming all men shall rise again with their bodies: and shall give account of their own works.

And they that have done good shall go into life everlasting and they that have done evil, into everlasting fire.

This is the Catholic Faith: which except a man believe faithfully, he cannot be saved.

Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost;

As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be, world without end. Amen.

The Parishioners of S. Clement's are now scattered among the mountains and seaside places, and there ought to be some result from this dispersion. A single individual of a congregation often has a great influence on the reputation and growth of the Church, and any frivolity or sin is immediately brought up as an argument against Religion. It is therefore especially necessary for churchmen to be without reproach and careful of offending any who are weak in the Faith.

There is no need for us to proselytize, which is to try to bring people over to our Religion for party reasons, but everyone who cares at all earnestly about the doctrines which they have received will quietly try to spread them among their friends, not so much by words or arguments as by good example and kindness. Everyone ought to be able to say, "I want to be of your Church if it makes you what you are."

Letter from Father Maturin.

The following letter has been received by F. Field, from Father Maturin, which will be of special interest as showing the state of things in the African portion of the S. S. J. E. work.

CAPETOWN, S. AFRICA,
78 Sir Lowry Road.

I must write a line by this mail, though I will not have time for more. I arrived here last Friday week, exactly three weeks to the day from the time or sailing from Dartmouth. The voyage was very unlike one across the Atlantic, and in many ways more pleasant, though one's fellow-passengers were not so nice or so interesting as Americans,—a lot of Jews, and a lot of Portuguese from Madeira. We had a week or so of the most perfect weather imaginable, and it was most enjoyable, exactly as if one were going up the Sound to Boston. The last few days, as we got nearer Capetown it was not pleasant, it got rougher and colder. We had three seasons in as many weeks. We left England in spring, and in about ten days we were in the Tropics, and about a week later in about mid-winter, but the winter here is more beautiful than English summer, glowing sunny days, and when the south-easters are not blowing, all that one could desire and more beautiful than one could imagine.

The work here is amongst all shades of color and a mixture of all the lowest natures. Frs. Puller and Sheppard have done a wonderful work, and got together a good congregation; they had to begin at the very beginning. A school building in memory of Fr. Sheppard is nearly finished. At the 8 o'clock celebration on Sunday there were between 60 and 70 present.

Parish Notes.

Tuesday, August 6th, is the Festival of the Transfiguration. Special attention is called to this festival, as it is but recently that our Church has put it among the Red Letter Days, or greater Festivals of the Church.

The Children's Home at Hillside, Falsington, is flourishing, and a great number of children have had two weeks' holiday in the comfortable Home under the care of the Sisters. The best evidence of the way in which the children enjoy their country home is their bright, happy appearance, and the unanimous expression of delight. As many as sixty persons have been hospitably received at one time in the Home.

Father Field spent two weeks in July among the sufferers at Johnstown. He lectured at Cresson on "the Red Cross," and the collection, $50, was given to the Society. F. Field also acknowledges, with thanks, $17.40 from the Children's Twenty Minutes Society, and $5 from a Parishioner, received at Johnstown.

Father Convers will give a Retreat to the Sisters, at Peekskill, at the end of August.

Father Longridge has been assisting at the Mission Church of S. John, Boston, and will remain till the middle of this month.

Dr. Garrett, the Superintendent of our Sunday school has been working most patiently at Johnstown ever since the flood, and his influence among the boys has been remarkable. There is scarcely a boy in the place who does not know the doctor.

Every one who can possibly do so, is asked to help the Art Exhibition which is to take place in the Octave of S. Clement's, November 23d, for the benefit of the Boys. Every one who can paint in oils or water colors is requested to give some specimen of their work. Some beautiful things have already been given. Among other things exhibited will be a most interesting collection of pictures and relics from Johnstown.

A new office has been opened by the Guild of the Iron Cross at 2021 Cherry street. It is open daily for the sale of religious publications and pictures. Religious books may be ordered here, and will be obtained as soon as possible.

All local business of the Iron Cross will be carried on at 2021 Cherry st. The wholesale business will still remain at 408 Commerce street.

The Employment Bureau for boys will have its quarters now at 2021 Cherry street. A few rooms will be rented furnished to young men at one dollar a week and twenty-five cents for attendance. This is likely to meet a great want, and we have long needed a lodging house for young men near the church.

The Hospital and Dispensary.

During the last month Dr. Mary Fisher has been elected to be Visiting Physician for the District north of Cherry street, so that now gradautes of the University, of Jefferson, and of the Women's Medical College are to be found on our Staff.

After a faithful and most satisfactory service of over two years, our Apothecary, Mr. Litzkus, is leaving us, much to our regret. Mr. Gregory Hovnamaire, the chief prescription clerk at Mulford & Co.'s drug store, follows him. The clinic continues to grow rapidly as can be seen by this comparative statement:

	New Patients.	Old Patients.	Total.
June, 1886,	52	94	146
June, 1887,	109	185	294
June, 1888,	195	204	399
June, 1889,	300	631	931

This last will be increased by the report of the District south of Cherry street, which has not yet been sent in. During this last month the Clinic for Diseases of Women has had 9 new cases, 16 old, in all, 25; the Surgical, 22 new, 57 old, in all 79; the Throat, 16 new, 89 old, in all 105; leaving to the Medical, 253 new, 469 old, total, 722.

To prepare for the alterations the gas has been turned off and the meter removed; thus we are reduced to the "light of other days."

By the way, the Dispensary would be very glad to have somebody donate to it a hand lamp. Our supply is not enough to light the building well. We are in need of bandages of unbleached muslin, about ten yards long and two inches wide, and also towels.

The contract has been let to McPherson & Sons, 325 and 327 Cherry street, who are bound to finish before S. Clement's Day. We shall have to pay them a little less than sixteen thousand dollars. This, too, when we have cut off several matters that we hoped to have. This is a large sum of money. Then we must look forward to furnish the Hospital and support it. If we could only open both wards instead of only one! But for all these we must strain every nerve. To do it all will need much more than we command; and the only thing to be done is to say our prayers. They have so often been heard, that it is easy to expect they will be again. Everybody who cares for the Hospital can say this prayer, which has been used by many:

O Lord Jesus Christ, Who didst lay Thy Hand upon the sick and they did live, bless, we humbly beseech Thee, our effort to continue Thy work of healing; and grant that S. Clement's Hospital may bring a blessing to those who help it, and to those who are helped by it, for Thy mercy's sake, Whom with the Father and the Holy Ghost we worship as one God world without end. Amen.

Prosecutions for the Faith.

The prosecution of the good Bishop of Lincoln is still going on, and the prayers of the faithful are also asked for a good priest at Liverpool, the Rev. J. B. Cox, who is being prosecuted for ritual and who has often been kind to the Fathers and others from S. Clements.

Mr. Cox has just issued his annual address to the congregation of S. Margaret's, Prince's road, Liverpool, in which he gives a short account of Church doings and other local matters. Alluding to the prosecution he says:—"While penning these lines I am expecting to hear at any moment that a Court of Peers has been formed, and that our appeal to the House of Lords is to be argued before it. What the decision of that Court may be, and what may be the result of it, it is impossible to say. In the meantime we will still endeavor to carry on our work amongst you, as we have tried to do in the past, with what results you know better than I can tell you. You are aware, I am sure, how incessant and heavy is the strain of sustaining a large work of ours, with so small a staff, and to keep it at that level at which it ought to be maintained. Let us hope and pray that the day is far distant when the restrictions that have been placed upon us may be removed, and that more clergy, men after God's own heart, may be found and allowed to come and join us. It is heartbreaking to see and know of so many things which either have to be left untouched, or which cannot be worked up as thoroughly as they should be, simply because we have not the strength at our command. 'The harvest truly is great: pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth laborers into his harvest.'"

The Methodists.

Of the two great religious movements which broke in upon the torpor and decay of the eighteenth century, Unitarianism, as we have seen, was the outcome of the struggle for intellectual freedom, and the assertion of the supremacy of reason. It appealed mainly to educated minds, while Methodism, which aimed at a revival of spiritual life within the Church, appealed to those entangled masses whom it has ever been the mission of the Church to gather in and care for.

The early history of this great awakening of religious consciousness begins with the efforts of a little band of earnest-minded Oxford men, who sought by meeting together for prayer and the study of God's Word to kindle and maintain their own spiritual life.

They were soon distinguished amongst their fellows for their regular attendance, on all Sundays and holydays, at the Holy Eucharist, and for their conscientious and methodical use of their time, from which it is possible their name of "Methodists" may have arisen.

Charles Wesley and George Whitefield held the leading place in this little society until the return to Oxford of John Wesley, who had been acting for a time as his father's curate, and from henceforward the history of the movement is mainly the history of his life and work. So entirely, indeed, did it centre around him as its leader that his followers have fallen into the error, which he himself would have been the first to deplore, of calling themselves after his name—Wesleyans. The means by which John Wesley and his fellow-workers proposed to accomplish their great purpose of a "Revival of Religion within the Church of England" was that of "religious societies," which should draw together the more earnest-minded members of the Church; and, first deepening their faith and quickening their zeal, use them "to give a new impulse to the Church at large, to awaken its dormant energy, infuse new life into a body where nothing but life was wanting, and lead the way to the performance of duties which the Church had long neglected."

This idea, far from being a new one, was really that which had lain at the root of the "Monastic System" of the Middle Ages, the description of which would apply equally well to the societies founded by Wesley. They were an assembly of persons whom God's grace had united to live under the banner of the Cross and to follow Jesus Christ crucified. "They composed that inner and spiritual kingdom which is not of this world, and wherein God reigns by His Grace." The description given by John and Charles Wesley of their "United Society" is that of a company of men having the form and seeking the power of godliness; united in order to pray together, to receive the word of exhortation, and to watch over one another in love, that they may help each other to work out their own salvation.

In their original design, then, the Methodist societies are one amongst many similar manifestations of the tendency which has marked all attempts at religious revival, "to form within the pale of the Church some order or brotherhood as the instrument by which the smouldering embers of spiritual life should be gathered together and rekindled by closer contact and mutual help."

The principles by which the Wesleys sought to guide their work offered at first but little ground for exception; originating within the Church, drawing its nourishment from her sacramental life, following the orderly and well-approved lines laid down in her Prayer Book; owing much, at least in its commencement, to the advice and encouragement of some of her bishops, Wesleyanism was in its early days marked by loyalty to Church principles and the Church's system.

The subsequent changes which so seriously affected this position are to be traced to the connection formed by John Wesley with the Moravians, from whom he borrowed what have since become two of the peculiar principles of Methodism: (1) instantaneous conversion, and (2) personal and absolute assurance of forgiveness.

Rightly understsod, both these doc-doctrines have always been taught by the Church. "Conversion," as a turning from sin to God, whether it takes place "suddenly or gradually, by some external stroke of God's providence, or by some internal awakening of His redeeming grace," is the very change which it is the object of her teaching and preaching to produce; and all her aids and stepping-stones and sacraments are meant to lead her children on to daily grow in grace more and more, till they reach a mature consciousness of their Sonship, and the assurance and peace of believing. And, in point of fact, it was this which Wesley himself preached "for above fifty years, never varying from the doctrine of the Church at all," which is, to quote his own words, "By Baptism we are admitted into the Church, and consequently made members of Christ . . . from which Spiritual Union with Him proceeds the influence of His Grace on those that are baptized. . . . By water, then, as a means, we are regenerated or 'born again' . . . and the terms, being 'regenerated,' or being 'born again,' or being 'born of God,' in Sacred Scripture always express an inward work of the Spirit whereof baptism is the outward sign . . . and the outward sign duly received is always accompanied with the inward grace."

Althoug John Wesley afterwards withdrew from the Moravian Society and repudiated their doctrine that "Sacraments and other means of grace were of no account," yet his connection with them had so weakened his hold upon the system of the Church, that, although to the end of his life he earnestly resisted the idea of separating from her, yet his movement from this time tended steadily "towards the formation of a religious community independent of the Church."

It must ever be a matter for deepest sorrow and regret that the attitude of the Church, and her rulers generally, towards the work of the early Methodists was not sympathetic; but, on the other hand, it must not be forgotten how soon this change in the principles which they taught rendered it impossible for the Church to continue to countenance them.

That the actual secession of the Methodists from the Church was contrary to the wishes of their founder cannot be doubted. He protested against it throughout his life, and, only a few months before his death, charged his preachers, "In God's name, stop there! Be Church of England men still! Do not cast away the peculiar glory which God hath put upon you, and frustrate the design of Providence."

Yet even in his lifetime several distinct steps were taken in the direction of separation. The setting up of "preaching-houses," the establishment of Wesleyanism by the Deed of Declaration in 1784, and the so-called consecration of two bishops for his Societies in this country were tokens of the spirit of separation, which bore rapid and abundant fruit as soon as his controlling influence was removed. The secession of the Methodist New Connexion in 1797, of the Primitive Methodists in 1810, of the Bible Christians in 1815, of the Wesleyan Methodist Association in 1835, and of the Wesleyan Methodist Reformers in 1849, are all evidences that when once the unity of the Church has been broken, the process of disintegration begins, and will go on indefinitely.

Two lessons, then, may usefully be learnt from the history of Wesleyanism; first the danger of "drifting" into disunion, through impatience, and so incurring the reproach of the Apostle, "While one saith, I am of Paul; and another, I am of Apollos; are ye not carnal?" and on the other hand the mistake of treating with coldness and indifference the enthusiasm of those whose hearts have been stirred by the Holy spirit of God, and whose zeal is all aglow to tell others what great things He has done for them. Enthusiasm is one of the motive powers in all religious progress; but enthusiasm needs to be watched and guided, or it will soon become mere excitement, and overwrought religious feeling will lead to confusion and error.

And have we not in our own branch of Christ's Holy Catholic Church, quickened and renewed by a later revival, also taking its rise from Oxford, in England, all that is needed for kindling the hearts of men of every class, and "garnering" them in? In the special missions which are so marked a feature of our recent Church life, in the careful preparation for Confirmation, in increased reverence and frequency in the administration of the Holy Eucharist, in the numerous Guilds and Communicants' Societies, in the ready welcome given to lay help—in all these and many other ways the Spirit of God is surely guiding His Church to "make full proof" of her ministry, and enabling her to fulfil the high office committed to her to the glory of God and the increase of His Kingdom.

Our Parish in August.

There are no Parish limits in America. A large city Parish contracts in winter within the city, and expands with the heat in summer. The Parish of S. Clement now extends to Cape May, Atlantic City, Bayhead, Point Pleasant, Sea Girt, Spring Lake and Newport. Under these circumstances it is not reasonable that parishioners of S. Clement's should expect to be called on very frequently, but thanks to the railroad it is even possible to call at these distant places sometimes within the limits of twenty-four hours, as the following experience may show. I leave Philadelphia by an early train, take breakfast with parishioners at Bayhead. Here a nice little church has been built, and it has been mainly dependent upon the clergy of S. Clements for services this summer. After breakfast a little cart, a dog cart or a go cart, waits at the door to take me to Point Pleasant, where the flags of S. Vincent's Guild are seen flying from the top of a nice, comfortable house, which the Guild has taken for two weeks for the benefit of its members. I am deposited here and received by the Sacristan and Acolytes without any ritual, and conducted all over the house; then write two letters on S. Vincent's own note paper, to prove that I was there and on such a date; then proceed to see all the Acolytes at baseball, being only stopped on the way by several ladies, all of S. Clement's, who greet one so naturally that except for the cool, refreshing air, it is hard not to believe oneself in Cherry street, Philadelphia; then we go on to see some invalid parishioners, giving half an hour's call; meet two Acolytes out for a morning's ride, one of them not having quite learned the ritual of horse riding yet and seeming to be more fond of the horse's neck than of the saddle. A mile or two by train brings me to Sea Girt. Here the New Jersey Militia are encamped; but our business is at the Beach House, a large hotel almost in the sea. A stage takes me there to pay a twenty minutes' call. I find several unexpected friends. At 12.30 another stage is waiting at the door on the way to Spring Lake. It is already full of Philadelphia people, but there is one seat left for a small person, and minimizing myself I proceed. Every one looks at me and no one speaks; I wonder why people get so unnatural in the presence of a Priest or of anything religious.

Our parishioners at Spring Lake are delighted by an unexpected call, give me some lunch, and send me on to the station; no time to call on all intermediate parishioners at Ocean Grove, Asbury Park, etc. The next call is beyond Newport. I go on board the steamer, write some articles for the Iron Cross, meet another Priest, do some reading, go to bed, and wake up at Newport, then take another boat and arrive at the house of another parishioner, three hundred miles from Philadelphia, and so begin another day's visitings, all in the Parish of S. Clement. C. N. F.

Parish Notes.

The work of the Parish may be expected to begin with fresh vigor this month. All the workers have not yet returned. It will be a great help if they will send in their names as soon as they return, to the clergy, or let them know that they are ready to take up their work again.

The recreation of summer to those who have been at the seaside or in the mountains ought to make them more willing than ever to undertake work for the benefit of others.

The work at Falsington has been carried on by the Sisters most indefatigably, and a large number of mothers and children have been greatly benefited by the holiday in the country. The long rains of the past season have made this work more difficult and less beneficial than usual. The House at Falsington, "Hillside," was given by Miss Williamson, and some of the furniture has been contributed by ladies of the Parish.

A large house at Point Pleasant, "S. Vincent's Cottage," was taken by the Guild of S. Vincent, the Guild of Senior Acolytes.

F. Longridge has been assisting the Fathers at Boston. The Fathers have taken services in turn at Bayhead during August. A nice little church has been erected there, mainly due to the efforts of some of our parishioners, and there have been three and sometimes four services on the Sunday, and all well attended.

Father Field will give a lecture at Bayhead on Wednesday, September 4th, in behalf of the Church Funds.

F. Convers is giving a Retreat at Peekskill, ending September 6th.

F. Field will give an address to the S. Andrew's Brotherhood on Holy Cross Day, and on the Octave of the Holy Cross will address the Branches of the Iron Cross at the Church of the Holy Cross in New York.

A Retreat for Clergy will be held at New Brighton, Staten Island, ending on Holy Cross Day.

Prayers are asked for a Retreat for the S. Mary's Sisters at Peekskill, conducted by one of our parochial clergy.

Attention is called to the advertisement of the Art Exhibition. If everyone will try to help a little it will be easy to carry on the Rooms for another year. The Gymnasium is a grand institution for the boys. The Parlor has been well used, and keeps the boys off the streets in winter. The Summer Excursions began with a camp at Florence, and the boys have been taken out to the country ten times, but our funds suffered through the Johnstown flood and we were not able to do all we wanted for the boys.

S. Mary's Guild.

The Annual Excursion was this year very late, going on August 15th to Augustine Pier, on the steamer "Thomas Clyde." The weather was all that one could ask, although it once clouded up and seemed to threaten rain. No accident occurred to mar the pleasure of one of the most successful excursions the Guild has ever had. The Chaplain must thank the anonymous friend who sent him money through the offertory, on the Eighth Sunday after Trinity; a part was used to pay for the transportation to and from the pier, and part was turned over to the Treasurer of the Hospital and Dispensary.

The Hospital and Dispensary.

The builders are at work on the building and all is confusion and dirt. The streets, the sidewalks and the yard are all full of the stone, the lumber, the iron work and other materials for the additions. The patients for the Dispensary pick their way between piles of new materials or debris to get in. For the clinics go on as if nothing was taking place; and their numbers have not seriously lessened. Before another issue of the Magazine the new stories ought to be up and the roof on. Meanwhile we hope for pleasant weather.

Dr. Harvey Shoemaker was chosen to fill the place on the staff made vacant by the resignation of Dr. Bliss. The latter has only resigned the General Medical Clinic and still continues his work for the Special Dispensary for Diseases of the Throat, Nose and Ear.

Even during the summer some of our friends have remembered us, and several letters tell of fairs, etc., held for the benefit of the Hospital. We shall need it all, and are very thankful to those who have done so much.

The list of donations this month includes some bandages from four different donors, and three lamps, in answer to the request in last month's Magazine. These will meet our present needs. Thank you for them.

General Church News.

THE BISHOP ELECT OF MICHIGAN.

The Rev. Thomas F. Davies, D. D., Rector of S. Peter's Church, Philadelphia, who forms one of the Committee of Revision, has just been unanimously elected Bishop of Michigan, in the room of Bishop Harris, whose death in England last year was so universally and so deservedly lamented.

At a Diocesan Convention held some time ago, the Rev. Dr. Satterlee, Rector of Calvary Church, New York, was the choice of the diocese. He followed the bad fashion of the day—for the second time, having previously been chosen as Assistant Bishop of Ohio, and declined the duty to which he was called.

In Churchmanship, as in profound scholarship, Dr. Davies is a great improvement on Dr. Satterlee. By ancestry he is a Herefordshire man, and his family were always pioneers of the Church in Connecticut, when to be a Churchman was to invite persecution. The Bishop elect was a graduate of Yale, and received his theological education at the Berkeley Divinity School, where he was afterwards Professor of Hebrew. He was ordained Deacon in 1856, and in 1857 Priest, by Bishop Williams, and after having been Rector of St. John's Church, Portsmouth, N. H., he was called in 1868 to his present parish.

He has greatly advanced the cause of the Church in Philadelphia, and was so much respected by the clergy and laity as to be put prominently forward as assistant to Bishop Stevens, from which candidature, however, he withdrew his name. He has served as a delegate to four General Conventions, and has been returned for that of this year, and has, besides, done most effective work as a member of the Board of Missions.

The Bishop of Lincoln.

A beautiful picture of the Bishop will be shown at the Art Exhibition, in November. He is now being persecuted for Ritual.

The charges against the Bishop are:—

1. The use of Altar-lights.
2. The use of the Mixed Chalice.
3 and 4. The Eastward position.
5. Causing the Hymn from the Litany, "O Lamb of God," to be sung after the consecration.
6. Making the Sign of the Cross.
7. Making the ablutions.

The proceedings against him have been as follows:—

i. The Church Association first applied to the Archbishop of Canterbury on June 2d, 1888. The Archbishop could then, of course, have refused to entertain the application; but instead of doing so he replied that he felt uncertain that he possessed jurisdiction.

ii. The Church Association consequently made an ex parte application to the Privy Council to determine whether or no the Archbishop could try the case.

iii. The Privy Council decided in favor of the Church Association, and remitted the case to the Archbishop to be dealt with according to law.

iv. The Archbishop cited the Bishop of Lincoln to appear before him, with five Bishops as assessors or advisors, on February 12th, 1889.

v. The Bishop of Lincoln, on February 12th, 1889, claimed to be tried by the Archbishop in Convocation—i. e. by the Bishops of the Province of Canterbury—instead of by the Archbishop alone.

vi. On May 11th, 1889, the Archbishop decided in favor of his own sole jurisdiction; and, although the Bishop of Lincoln has still an appeal to the Civil Power on the question of jurisdiction, it is felt by the Catholic Party generally that it would be better to submit to the Archbishop's jurisdiction under protest. He will again be brought before the Court in November. In the meantime the English Church Union with its 26,000 members and the Church of England Workingmen's Society with 12,000 members are unanimously passing such resolutions as the following.—

"That the members of the English Church Union, and other Churchmen present at this Meeting, desire to approach the Right Rev. Father in God, Edward King, by Divine permission Bishop of Lincoln, with an expression of deep affection and respectful sympathy, and with the assurance of all the support in their power under the trouble to which he is now subjected; and they further assure his Lordship that they will not fail to offer earnest prayers to Almighty God that this evil, like so many others, may be overruled to the glory of God and to the advancement of His Church."

The Presbyterians.

There are few questions which need to be more carefully considered by Christian people at the present time than that of the nature of the authority which resides in the Church, and of the origin and character of her ministry. Every society must have its officers to administer its laws, to be the instruments of the society in carrying out the objects for which it was formed, and through whom the identity and corporate life of the society is continued.

The Church of Christ, as an outward, visible organization, has her officers and rulers in the three fold order of her ministers—the Bishops, Priests, and Deacons; and what is most important for all to know is whence they derive their authority, and in whose name they speak. "By what authority doest Thou these things, and who gave Thee this authority?" were questions put to Jesus Christ, nor did He refuse to answer them and to give proofs of His mission.

There are two possible theories of the origin of the Christian ministry; of these one makes the ministry of the Church derive its authority from below, and regards the minister as the delegate of the congregation, appointed to represent the rest, and to perform sacred duties which might be as well performed by any Christian. The other view traces the ministerial authority back to our Lord Jesus Christ, and regards the ministers as His ambassadors and the stewards of His mysteries. According to this latter view their mission takes its rise from those words of our Lord—"As the Father hath sent Me, so send I you," and has flowed down the ages in one appointed channel ever since.

There is an element of truth in the first view, in so far as the faithful laity are permitted to take part in the selection and approval of those who are to be ordained to any holy function, but it is absolutely reserved to the highest order of the ministry, the Bishops, to admit them into the sacred order by the appointed rite.

The convention may nominate to a bishopric, or elect their Rector, but in neither case is the ministerial character conferred by those who nominate or elect, but only by the laying on of hands by the Bishops of the Church. It has always and everywhere been held that the government of the Church and the continuance of the ministry of the Church by ordination were committed to the chief of the three orders, the Bishops. And as we trace back the stream of Church life, flowing by the power of the Holy Ghost through her ministry from her Divine Head, we cannot but feel the significance of the fact, that those who have separated from the Church have lost or abandoned the highest order of the ministry, even when in name retaining the others.

One body, the Presbyterians, make this the distinctive ground of their separation from the Church, their leading principle being the assertion "that by Divine appointment the discipline of the Church lies with the body of Presbyters, not with the Bishops." They maintain that the call or invitation of a Christian congregation constitutes a Christian minister, and that all ministers of the Word are on a level with respect to office and authority.

The founder of Presbyterianism in Scotland was John Knox, one of the most violent and headstrong among the leaders of the reforming party in that country. Solicited by the people of S. Andrew's to become their pastor, Knox at first refused, declaring that he would not run where God had not called him, that he would not without a lawful vocation intrude as a teacher in the Church. His objections were, however, overruled; he was brought to believe that the will of the Church, thus expressed, imposed an obligation which no man could lightly disregard. Knox accepted the decision and became their pastor, and thus laid the foundation of the Presbyterian schism. The inflammatory discourses of the fanatical reformer soon aroused the passions of all classes of the citizens. They rushed to the beautiful cathedral of S. Andrew's, tore it down, and left it the naked ruin which it now stands—a monument of the deplorable effect of religious fanaticism and intolerance.

A confession of faith drawn up by Knox, assisted by five ministers, on the basis of a rigid Calvinism, which asserts that one portion of mankind is predestined and elected by God to salvation, while another portion is doomed to everlasting perdition, was laid before the Parliament of Edinburgh, and accepted as the standard of faith in Scotland. To Knox and his five companions was also committed the task of framing a scheme of Church government which has since become the established religion of Scotland.

Presbyterianism has never taken much hold in England, although under the long Parliament (1645–1654), it was for a short time the established religion. Unlike the Independents, by whom they were soon supplanted, the Presbyterians hold the theory of the Divine authority of the ministry, and that the various congregations of Christians were not so many distinct churches, but parts of the one Universal Church; and in so doing have departed less than other Nonconformists from the faith and practice of the Church; but they have abandoned the unbroken tradition from the earliest times of the threefold ministry, there being no example of a single church without a bishop for fifteen centuries after Christ.

There is a part of our prayer book with which it would be well if all Church people were more familiar, and that is, "The form and manner of making, ordaining, and conscerating of bishops, priests, and deacons." If this were read and compared with the New Testament many mistakes would be corrected, both as to the nature of the ministry of the Church and of the solemn duties to which her ministers are called. In the preface to this form we read as follows: "It is evident unto all men diligently reading the Holy Scriptures and ancient authors, that from the Apostles' time there have been three orders of ministers in Christ's Church—bishops, priests and deacons. Which offices were evermore had in such reverend estimation that no man might presume to execute any of them, except he were first called, tried, examined, and known to have such qualities as are requisite for the same; and also by public prayer, with imposition of hands, were approved and admitted thereunto by lawful authority."

Now what is this lawful authority, and whence is it derived? None can doubt that in the first instance it was bestowed by the Lord upon His apostles, who in addition to the fulness of power of administering the Word and Sacraments, and the privilege of founding the Church of Christ, had also the power of transmitting and handing on to others the sacred ministry. It was not long before they found it necessary to create the order of Deacons, with the special duty, at first, of caring for the poor and dealing with the funds of the Church, though also authorized, as we see in the case of Philip, to preach and baptize; then, as the Church spread and new congregations were formed, the apostles appointed a second ministerial order—that of the priesthcod, and devolved upon it all the powers which they themselves possessed, except that of continuing and transmitting its ministry; to this second order the names both of Presbyter (elder) and of Bishop (overseer) were often applied, but before long the latter title was reserved for those who, as the Apostles fell asleep in death, took the oversight, not only of one congregation, but perhaps of many, and who succeeded to their special office and privilege of handing on to others the ministerial character.

Our materials for the history of the end of the first century and of the beginning of the second are very scanty, and we may well understand that the distinct lines of church government and organization, as we have them now, were at first less clearly marked; but there are one or two facts which clearly indicate the establishment of the episcopate even in Apostolic times. Timothy and Titus, though not yet distinctly called bishops, received authority from S. Paul for the ordination of presbyters and to deal with charges brought against presbyters. The position of S. James, at Jerusalem, seems to have been that of a bishop, exercising his jurisdiction within certain definite limits; and within the lifetime of those who had learned from the apostles it had come to be recognized that no church could be complete without the three orders of the ministry. Bishops alone could ordain, and by whatever steps this came about, if we believe the promise of guidance given by Christ to His Church, we must believe that it was the work of the Holy Ghost.

That the Bishops are the successors of the apostles is a fact of history, and in this apostolic succession we have the assurance of the unbroken identity of the Church, and the rallying point for her unity.

A great English teacher and divine has recently pointed out that "of public institutions in Modern Europe the episcopate is the most venerable. It is older than any secular throne; it is by some centuries older than the Papacy. It had reached its prime while the Empire was still standing. It could shed its blood with Cyprian; it could illuminate the world by the consecrated genius of an Irenæus, of an Augustine, of Chrysostom, and Basil. The episcopate, as it traverses the centuries, is like a weather-beaten barque, on whose hull clusters many a shell and weed, and tells of the seas of feudal and political life behind it; but as these incrustations fall away we discover that the essential feature of a spiritual fatherhood, which was always there, remains intact. The title 'Father in God' has never disappeared from the language, whether of the Church, or of the law, or of general literature, and its reality, even in the worst times, has never been without a witness."

It is in their character of "Fathers in God" that we shall be best able to understand and appreciate the office and work of the Bishops; themselves first receiving their ministerial power by successive delegation from the Apostles, they transmit the power to others, as an earthly father hands on to his children the gift of physical life. As the father of his diocese, the bishop is the one* responsible teacher in it, the clergy being regarded as his assistants and subject to his oversight and correction in what they teach. It is his first duty to be the guardian of "the faith once given to the saints," to see that it is taught in its fullness and in its purity. As "Fathers" the Bishops are the natural rulers of the diocese, which is their family, their right to rule being derived not from those over whom they are "set in the Lord," but from the character and position which they have inherited from the Apostles of Christ.

It is as our "Fathers in Christ," who by His appointment have been the means used to convey to us the highest gifts, that they claim our respect and loyal submission; it is as such that the Apostle exhorts us to "obey them that have the rule over you and submit yourselves; for they watch for your souls as they that must give account, that they may do it with joy and not with grief."

H. W. O.

*This, of course, does not mean that Bishops may teach what they choose or omit what they dislike. Bishops are bound to teach the whole faith and to see that it is taught by their clergy. Editor S. C. M.

Parish Notes.

The full number of services has been resumed since the middle of September, and there are now Celebrations regularly on Sunday at 7, 8, 9 and 11, children's service at 2.30, and evensong and sermon at 8 o'clock.

Evensong will be at 5 o'clock, daily.

Every child in the parish who is old enough to understand the hymns should attend the 9 o'clock Celebration on Sunday and be taught to worship at the Divine Service of the Holy Eucharist. If the parents would bring the children to this service they would themselves be benefited, and would help the Priest and the children by joining in the worship. A great number of children are absent because their parents are too careless or lazy on Sunday morning to get them ready.

There is a Commemoration of the faithful departed every Monday morning, and persons who wish any friends remembered at this Celebration should give the name to one of the Fathers, at least the day before.

All persons should be brought to church for funeral services unless they die unbaptized or of some infectious disease. As it was said to one of the Fathers, by a mother, that she did not know that he would take all that trouble for children; he wishes it to be understood that Christians are not regarded as to size, and a little Christian has as much right to be brought to church as a great man. The church is always open. Funerals or marriages in houses are most irregular, and every Christian should protest against such irregular customs.

Children may be brought to Baptism at any service, but Sunday afternoons and Thursday evenings are the most convenient times. Notice should be given, if possible, beforehand, to the Clergy.

The Guild of S. Vincent (Acolytes), meets on Wednesday, October 2d, at 6.30.

The first meeting of the Guild of the Holy Cross will be held on Sunday, October 6th.

The Altar Guild will resume its meetings on Thursday, October 10th. There will be an address by the Chaplain after the Celebration at 9.30.

All the members of the parish are naturally looking forward to the next two great Festivals, the Festival of All Saints (November 1st), and the Festival of S. Clement, Saturday, November 23d. Festivals can only be properly kept and enjoyed in proportion to our religious anticipation and preparation for them, and, therefore, it is hoped that all will constantly bear these coming Festivals in mind during the present month.

The Art Exhibition will take place on November 25th, 26th, 27th. Tickets, $1.00, 50 cents, 25 cents. The proceeds of tickets will be given by the Guild of the Iron Cross to S. Clement's Church, where it was founded.

The choir is in a very prosperous condition, but there is always room in the choir for one or two men who are willing to give their services in return for the instruction in music. The organist will be glad to receive their names after any service.

Edward Rogers, one of the most faithful members of the parish, has been called to his rest. He has been a regular communicant of S. Clement's for many years, was a wood engraver of great skill, most diligent in the exercise of his art, and never more painstaking in his work than when engraving some sacred picture. He was a member of the Guild of the Iron Cross, and his first work as a member of the Guild was the engraving of a picture of Christ upon the Cross for the first book of devotions published by the Guild. He was always ready to do, without any charge, the work for the Church and the Guild. He died of cancer, after a short but most painful illness, as a private patient in the University Hospital, September 7th. May he rest in peace and may perpetual light shine upon him.

Father Field will be very grateful for any carpets, rugs, stair carpets or furniture, not wanted.

The wilderness, and the solitary place shall be glad for them; and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose. It shall blossom abundantly, and rejoice even with joy and singing.

The glory of Lebanon shall be given to it, the excellency of Carmel and Sharon. They shall see the glory of the Lord, and the excellency of our God.

Strengthen ye the weak hands, and confirm the feeble knees. Say to them that are of a fearful heart, Be strong, fear not, Behold your God will come with vengeance, even God with a recompense, He will come and save you.

Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb shall sing. For in the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert.

And a highway shall be there, and a way, and it shall be called the way of holiness. The unclean shall not pass over it; but it shall be for those: the wayfaring men, though fools shall not err therein. No lion shall be there, nor any ravenous beast shall go up thereon, it shall not be found there; but the redeemed shall walk there.

And the ransomed of the Lord shall return and come to Zion, with songs, and everlasting joy upon their heads, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away.

Anthem, Praise the Lord, O my soul, Goss.

Praise the Lord, O my soul; while I live will I praise the Lord, yea, as long as I have any being, I will sing praises unto my God.

O pray for the peace of Jerusalem. They shall prosper that love thee. Peace be within thy walls, and plenteousness withing thy palaces.

For my brethren and companions' sake I will wish thee prosperity; yea, because of the house of the Lord our God, I will seek to do thee good.

They that put their trust in the Lord shall be even as the Mount Zion; which may not be removed but standeth fast for ever.

As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so the Lord is round about His people, from henceforth even for ever.

The Hospital.

Work on the building has gone on as rapidly as weather allowed. The roof timbers are partly in place and the masons have nearly finished their part. The rain has so hindered the men that they are nearly two weeks behind their calculations. However, they yet hope to be through by S. Clement's Day.

The rain was so severe that the work of the Dispensary had to be moved. We were driven out by the wet. When prescriptions had to be put up under the protection of an umbrella, it was time to do something desperate. So the Iron Cross kindly took pity on us, and allowed us to use, for a time, their quarters in 2021 Cherry street. It is too narrow for us, and is very inconvenient for them to have us; therefore we hope to move back as soon as the roof is on.

We have paid the contractors their first installment of four thousand dollars, and have been cheered by the pledge of the eight hundred and sixty dollars, needed to pay them in full, from the same kind friend who has given us the building fund for the Hospital. A fair for its benefit was held in the Catskill's during the summer, realizing over fifty dollars.

A walk down Cherry street will show you now what the building will look like. It is tall, and overlooks every thing in the neighborhood, the church not excepted. There will be plenty of fresh air up there.

The work of the Dispensary for August and September compares with that done in the corresponding months of last year in the following manner:

	New Cases.	Old Cases.	Total.
August, 1889,	351	757	1108
August, 1888,	214	333	547
Sept., 1889,	244	537	781
Sept., 1888,	186	332	518

The work for September, 1889, does not include those visited at home since the 9th, as the reports have not been made. The building changes have evidently lessened the clinics.

"In Memoriam, George Edmund Sheppard, S. S. J. E."

This is on the cover of the little pamphlet published by Hayes, 17 Henrietta street, Covent Garden, London, whose fuller title page explains that it is "Memorials of a Cowley Father. A short account of the life and work of George Edmund Sheppard, who died at Cape Town, South Africa, on April 28th, 1888, from the effects of fever contracted while on Mission work." Everybody here will remember Fr. Sheppard, and so like to know something of this very short biography, if they do not send for it and read it. Fr. Benson's brief introduction touches on the impression Fr. Sheppard's character made on him, on the pastoral work and love of nature which marked the latter.

There is an anecdote told of Fr. Sheppard's early life which is most characteristic of his music, his desire to give others pleasure and his enjoyment of their laughter. Once, when three years old, his father took him to London, and tells of how he tried to amuse a grave looking little girl. He sang to her "The neat little clock." She was indifferent. Not discouraged, he sang "A fox went out one moonshiny night;" but even the charms of the fox's adventures did not enchant her. Out came his picture book. But as music had no power, so the pictures failed to win a look or word from the demure young maiden. Going quietly to her side, looking most earnestly into her eyes, Master Three-years old asked, "Do you ever laugh?"

Less than a page and a half is given to the story of the first eleven years of his ministry, from 1864 to 1868 at Whittington, 1868 to 1870 at Wolverhampton, on the edge of the "Black Country," 1870 to 1875 at Shrewsbury. Perhaps there was not much of popular interest to tell, certainly nothing very striking; only some poor body comforted whose heart was near breaking, only a man here and there rescued from drink, only a boy strengthened to be honest, only a sinner converted to his God. But all counted for much in the unknown lives of the parishioners. All counted for much in the training of his own character. But when one thinks of some of his own anecdotes, one is struck with the truth of the saying, "No one sees the comical side of life half so much as a priest," and one wishes that some, at least, had been rescued from oblivion.

May 7th, 1875, he became a postulant at Cowley; and in July, three years later, he and Fr. Black made their professions. In 1879 he came to this country and was at first in Boston, afterwards with us in Philadelphia. This Magazine was one of his works in our parish. When he had charge of it, it was larger, had much more matter in it; and he meant it to be more than a parochial paper. To him more than to any one is due one feature of our parochial life which has been expanded since—the Guilds. Nearly a quarter of the whole of the memoir is devoted to his letters telling of the Mission he and Fr. Hall preached in British Columbia. One does not wonder or complain of it, for there is a charm of novelty and romance about that experience which gives it an interest the routine of parish work can never have; and it is told in a fascinating way in his letters. Whoever was so fortunate as to have him for a correspondent does not need to be told what a genius he had for letter writing. If you don't understand it, get the memoir and read the letters—then you will.

After a little visit in England he went to the Cape of Good Hope and spent there the rest of his life. Here we have some more of his letters. Then follows the story of his taking the fever from those he visited and his peaceful end. A martyr for his religion? No, not exactly that. No more that than Bishop Patterson, who was killed to satisfy the vengeance of South Sea savages for the death of one of their people. No more that, than Bishop Hannington, killed lest he should open a road for others to come to the home of a central African tribe. A martyr to his duty? Yes—that he was, and the little book's fitting motto consists of two verses:

"Those eternal bowers
Man hath never trod,
Those unfailing flowers
Round the throne of God.
Who may hope to gain them
After weary fight?
Who at length attain them
Clad in robes of white?

He who gladly barters
All on earthly ground,
He who like the martyrs
Says, 'I will be crowned,'
He whose one oblation
Is a life of love,
Clinging to the nation
Of the blest above."

The little memoir is printed to help, by its sale, the building of the Sheppard Memorial School in Cape Town. One of the local papers has this account of the opening of the new building.

[From the Cape Argus].

THE SHEPPARD MEMORIAL SCHOOL.

The Sheppard Memorial Infant School was formally opened yesterday afternoon. The building, which is situated at the back of the S. Philip's School Chapel, and connected with it by a cloister, is seventy-five feet in length and twenty-five feet in breadth, and is built of mountain stone. The roof is open and lined, the beams of the roof giving the building a very pleasing appearance. It is designed in the old English style, and reflects great credit upon the architect, Mr. G. M. Alexander, F.R.I.B.A., and the builder, Mr. Jenkinson, of Rondebosch, who has carried out his contract in a thoroughly business-like manner.

There was a large assemblage of people at the ceremony, including Mrs. Smyth and Captain Baden-Powell, Military Secretary, and many other ladies and gentlemen. The children of the schools, to the number of about five hundred, were arranged in spacious galleries at either end of the room, which was simply crowded with the parishioners and friends. The service opened with the hymn, "Onward, Christian Soldiers," during the singing of which the choir, clergy, and Bishop proceeded from St Philip's to the new school. The clergy present were:—Canon Peters, the Ven. Archdeacon Lightfoot, the Revs. W. U. Watkins, H. H. Hanham, J. G. Sutton, C. Samuels, A. A. Dorrell, and J. Taylor, Father Puller, and Father Maturin. The Bishop than began the service, which included Psalm viii., and two collects appropriate to the occasion. After the hymn, "Christ, Who once amongst us," the Bishop delivered a short address, in the course of which he said that they were met together to take part in a ceremony of the greatest interest to many then present, not only because it was the opening of a school which was in itself a matter of the profoundest interest, but also because these schools were dedicated to the memory of one of whom they had sweet recollections, and in whom sweetness of disposition was so marked a feature. It was one of the brightest thoughts that the Bishop, when he left the shores of South Africa last year, had, that Dr. Parson had told him that Father Sheppard was so greatly improved that the tide had turned, and there were hopes of an ultimate recovery. But shortly after he (the Bishop) got to England, he received the news of Father Sheppard's death, the way in which it was received by all classes at the Cape, and the touching incidents of the funeral ceremony in Claremont Churchyard, which was attended by such a large number of the parishioners of S. Philip's, as well as many others. Few who had gone to their rest lately, and had lived so short a time amongst us, had had so many to follow their remains to their last resting-place as George Edmund Sheppard. Though he had been so short a time out here, yet his labors had been wonderfully blest. As one who had heard the calm and simple way in which he expressed the Gospel truths, clothed in different words to those in which they usually heard them, he had been very much impressed, and he did everything thoroughly. The graphic way in which he gave full and descriptive accounts of what he saw in his (Father Sheppard's) tour in the east and south-east portions of the Diocese, for reading at home, showed that he had a thorough grasp of the subject.

And now Fr. Maturin has gone to carry on his work for a time, as the following letter shows.

78 SIR LOWRY ROAD,
July 30th, 1889.

MY DEAR FATHER:—I am writing to-night, though at present there seems little prospect of the mail being able to start to-morrow. It is blowing a fearful nor'west gale. Yesterday there was not a breath of air nor a cloud in the sky. This morning the gale began, and has been getting worse and worse. There were three sailing vessels in the bay; about 4.30 o'clock this afternoon one broke loose from her anchor, and was drifting steadily on to the shore when the darkness came on. They sent out a life-boat, but I have not been able to find out yet whether they were able to get alongside and take the crew off; she was knocking about so much that it would have been a difficult task. The coast is a smooth sand, no rocks, but shallow for some distance, and it would be hard for a man to get to shore through such a surf.

The Infant School was opened yesterday. The Bishop spoke so nicely about Fr. Sheppard; he seemed very fond of him. He read out one or two extracts from the memoir. The room was packed. We had about fifty chairs for invited guests, the General's wife, &c., and behind a solid mass of colored people. It went off very happily, and the children were all in it to-day. It will be an immense gain, as it will enable nearly twice as many children to come to school. The Sister had to be refusing them all the time. Last year I believe it was the largest school in Capetown. With the added accomodation it may become double the largest. The Bishop and Archdeacon and several others came in to tea afterwards. It was a most perfect day—such days we get here between the rains one scarcely meets with anywhere else that I have been.

I gave the Sisters Retreat last week from Tuesday to Saturday.

B. W. MATURIN.

Our Relations to Roman Catholics.

It would be impossible to put the relations which ought to exist between ourselves and the Roman Church more skillfully and kindly than in the words of Lord Halifax to the English Church Union.

All true Christians must regret the division of the Church into Eastern and Western, or Roman, Greek and Anglican, when our Lord prayed that His Church might be one. The sins of men and the pride of parties have caused these divisions, and each portion of the Church has its faults. The only hope of union lies in the frank confession of each that it has faults which may be amended. The Greek Church has shown herself extremely friendly to the Anglican Communion during the last year, and letters have passed between the Bishops of the Greek Church and the Archbishop of Canterbury, which are of great value as signs of future union.

The Roman Church is now better understood than formerly by Anglicans. There is no desire on our part to puff ourselves up as Protestants or to think that our salvation depends upon our protesting against the faults of our neighbors.

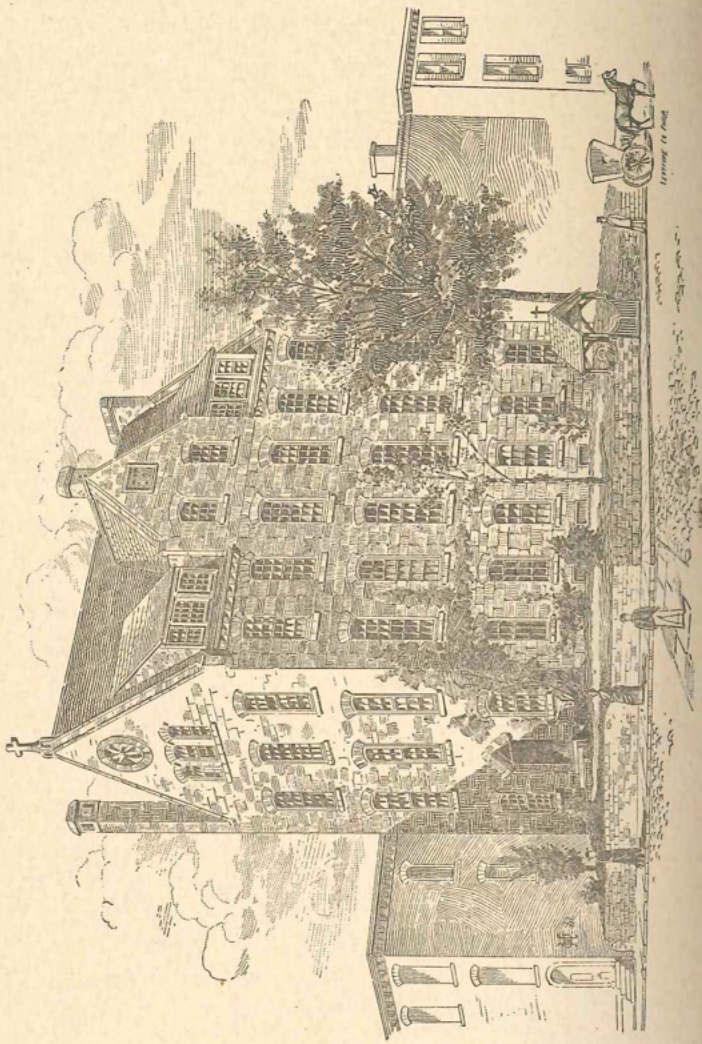
As Lord Halifax says:

"Would it not be better frankly to recognize, more fully than we sometimes do, the existence of the evils which prevail amongst us; and to admit how far, in many important respects, we fall short of the principles we profess: must we not acknowledge that the practice of the Primitive Church in important particulars condemns our own? that many of our clergy show very little of the supernatural in their lives; that some of them seem to contradict with impunity much that it is difficult to distinguish from fundamental truth?

"If all our people conformed to the teaching of the Prayer Book, if we all honestly accepted everything for which the authority of the whole Church could be claimed, our attitude might be different. As long as there are Churches where there are no Celebrations of Holy Communion on Sundays and Saints' days, have we any right to be surprised at harsh judgments being passed upon us, or even to hear doubts cast upon our Orders and Sacraments, when members of our own communion appear to doubt those Sacraments and Orders themselves?"

The individuals who, within our Church, deny her Orders and Sacraments, are doing the work of the Roman Church most effectually. There is nothing which drives the weaker members of the flock so hastily into the Roman Church as the contradictions of Catholic belief and custom which are expressed in the language and conduct of some who are Bishops and Priests, but who not only do not magnify their office, but drag it in the mire.



There is much for the Anglican Church to repent of, much that she has to amend before she has a right to throw any stones at a Roman Catholic as a member of that Church. Protestants may talk of the persecutions which they had to endure from Roman Catholics, but if they know anything of history they know that they too have persecuted Roman Catholics when they had the opportunity. We know now, in our own country, Presbyterians have persecuted the Anglican Church. We ought to know by experience that where any portion of the Church has predominant power it is likely to use it in oppression. Authority which is assumed is always oppressive, and tries by crushing to make itself felt and acknowledged as supreme.

There are errors and assumptions in the Roman Church which the Anglican Church has never tolerated or allowed. The Infallibility of the Pope and the doctrine of the Immaculate Conception are barriers which absolutely prevent our union with the Roman Church.

But the Roman Church does not want union. It would laugh, and probably does laugh, at our desiring it, for the Roman Church has only one idea of union, and that is authority over every nation and every individual.

Our position is that the Pope of Rome is a Bishop, and that though certain honors may attach to the see of Rome on account of its antiquity, yet that every Bishop is equal as Bishop to any other Bishop. To make the Pope of Rome anything more than a Bishop, is to make another Order in the Church than that which was ordained by Christ and His apostles. No apostle was ever called infallible and any such assumption of authority would have brought down upon its author the censure of all.

The pews in this Church are rented. Strangers and others not renting sittings, will be assigned places by the Ushers. Information in regard to the renting of pews may be had of the Accounting Warden, or of the Ushers.

Strangers and persons wishing to be visited are requested to leave their names and addresses in the letter-box on the vestry door, or at the Clergy House. The Clergy are always glad to visit those who desire it.

This MAGAZINE is published monthly through Mr. Samuel Williams, 201 S. Thirtieth St., Philadelphia. Subscriptions, exchanges and communications may be sent to this address. Subscriptions may commence with any number.

Single copes of the MAGAZINE can be purchased at 2021 Cherry Street, or of James Hammond, 1224 Chestnut St.

Our Dedication Festival will come this month. It makes us think of the blessings which come to us through our own Parish—the Parish whereby the Church reaches each and teaches each—the Parish wherein the Incarnate Christ pours through sacraments into faithful souls His blessings—the Parish which gathers us for services to knit us into the one communion of worshippers wherein we mingle with angels and with saints—the Parish which make us a human brotherhood wherein the rich help the poor and the poor help the rich. For these and other blessings gained through our Parish we will keep the feast with joy and brightness. Each communicant will make a point of receiving the Body and Blood of our Lord on that day.

This year we shall keep the feast with full hearts, remembering one who has filled so large a place in our parochial history who will not be with us; and fervent prayers will go up for him who remembers us so well in his far off work beyond the sea.

The clergy have much to be thankful for. The cross of leaving the work in which they have been engaged for years has been spared them. They have not been withdrawn.

Some of the parishioners will rejoice on their side that the traditions of the past will continue unbroken. For nearly fourteen years the Society of S. John the Evangelist and the Parish have been connected. And to have it settled that the connection is to continue, will help some to keep the feast. May all our hearts be so open towards God, that we may have His fullest blessing in our communion on S. Clement's Day.

Parish Notes.

The usual classes will begin with the first of November. On Sunday afternoon Fr. Convers will begin his Bible Class in the Vestry Room at 3; in the past this has been for men only, but it is intended to have it open now to all.

On Monday afternoons at 4 Fr. Field will conduct a class in Church History in the chapel.

On Fridays at 12 the Meditations will begin. Fr. Convers during November will give them on Types of the Holy Eucharist in the Old Testament.

November 23d, S. Clement's Day, will fall on Saturday this year and will be observed as usual. The first Evensong (festival) will be sung at 8 P. M. on Friday; the celebrations will be at 6, 7, 8 and 11. The music at the high celebration will be Mozart's First. In the afternoon at 4 it is hoped to have the public benediction of the new Hospital building, if the builders permit. Their contract requires this and they assure us that it will be possible to have it, although their work may not be fully done. Trusting to their promise we put it in the Kalendar with some hesitation. In the evening at 8 P. M. there will be the usual procession of Guilds, every one must make a great effort to be present. S. Vincent's Guild and Junior S. Vincent will meet in the Acolytes' Room, the other Guilds for men and boys in the Chapel; the Guilds for women and girls in the Sunday School Room; visiting clergy in the Vestry Room. All should be in their places by 7.30 P. M.

The music sung on S. Clement's Day will be sung also on the Sunday in the octave.

The Parish Tea will be on Tuesday, November 26th, at 8 P. M. Tickets can be had as usual from the Sisters or the clergy.

The Art Exhibition will be open on the three days preceding Thanksgiving Day.

The services on Thanksgiving Day will be as usual. Celebrations at 7, 8, 9 and 11. The one at 9 will be for the children of the Sunday School. That at 11 will be choral, singing the same music as on S. Clement's Day. In the evening at 7 there will be the children's festival. The offertory at 11 o'clock will be for the Episcopal Hospital.

Father Hall spent both the first and the last Sunday in October at S. Clement's at the beginning and end of the General Convention. On the latter visit as Provincial Superior he appointed and received Father Convers as Superior of the Society's House in Philadelphia.

Father Osborne accompanied Father Hall at this time having just returned from the South where he has been since Easter under medical orders. While distinctly better he is forbidden to resume work for some time longer, and he will probably go abroad for the winter.

The Magazine will be handed only to subscribers in the Church corridor. All who wish to buy a single copy will find it for sale at the office of the Iron Cross, 2021 Cherry street, open from 9 until 12 and 5 to 6 every week-day, or at Hammond's, 1224 Chestnut street.

The Magazine, the Sermons, and all other publications of the members of the Society of S. John the Evangelist are on sale at the Publication Office of the Iron Cross, 2021 Cherry street. which is open from 9 to 12 every week-day.

If any of the parishioners have books suitable for the Lending Library of the Church which they do not care to keep themselves, the clergy would be glad to receive them for that Library. There are probably many such in the various homes. Look and see what you have.

An organ recital will be given by Mr. Tipton in the Church on Wednesday evening, November 13th, at 8. The offertory will help pay for the water motor.

The Sisters will be very glad to arrange classes or to give private instructions in English, French and Music. Please make application at the Home any evening of the week.

The Sisters very much need for their work clothing of every description. They would also be grateful for new material, even short lengths to make up into children's garments.

The Sunday School.

F. Longridge will take charge of the Sunday School this year. He requests every member of the Parish to read the following paragraphs attentively.

The Sunday School cannot be carried on without money. Besides the ordinary expenses for books and printing, there are three entertainments or festivals to be provided for the children each year.

(1) An entertainment in S. Clement's week.

(2) An entertainment in Christmas week, together with the annual prizes for the scholars.

(3) An excursion during the summer.

I do not wish to have to appeal to the Parish each time one of these Sunday School festivals comes round. I would far rather that at the beginning of Advent all would consider with themselves how much they will give to the Sunday School for the whole year, and would let me know before Advent Sunday what their subscription for the year will be. The subscriptions might be paid either in full for the year, or in two portions half-yearly. But it would be best for them to be paid in full when possible.

This will enable me to know exactly what amount I shall be able to count upon for the year. And I wish it to be distinctly understood that I intend this to be the only appeal I shall make. I think most subscribers will prefer to give once for the whole year, rather than to be asked each time anything is wanted, and at the same time it will very much smooth the way and lighten the labor of the Priest in charge of the Sunday School.

The Sunday School is undoubtly one of the most important pieces of the Parish machinery. Certainly in this Parish we ought to have a larger school and better equipped. For instance, we ought to be continually adding to the stock of books in the School Library, which is at present quite inadequate.

I ask therefore every one to give as liberally as possible, remembering that besides the current expenses of maintaining the school and library there are three entertainments and the Christmas prizes to be provided for each year. And in giving I ask every one to remember also that this is to be the only appeal made till Advent comes round again.

Hallelujah! What are these that are arrayed in white robes, and whence came they? These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Therefore are they before the throne of God and serve Him day and night in His temple. They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more, neither shall the sun light on them nor any heat. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters; and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes.

The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures. He leadeth me beside the still waters. He restoreth my soul; He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for His Name's sake Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for Thou art with me; Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me. Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies Thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over. Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life and I shall dwell in the house of the Lord for ever.

Nov. 23, S. Clement's Day.

Service, Mozart in C.
Offertory Anthem, Praise the Lord, O my soul, . . . Goss.

Praise the Lord, O my soul; while I live will I praise the Lord, yea, as long as I have any being, I will sing praises unto my God.

O pray for the peace of Jerusalem. They shall prosper that love thee. Peace be within thy walls, and plenteousness withing thy palaces.

For my brethren and companions' sake I will wish thee prosperity; yea, because of the house of the Lord our God, I will seek to do thee good.

They that put their trust in the Lord shall be even as the Mount Zion; which may not be removed but standeth fast for ever.

Carol for S. Clement's Day.

It was about November tide,
A long, long time ago.
When good S. Clement testified
The faith that now we know.
Right boldly then he said his say
Before a furious king:
And therefore on S. Clement's Day
We go a Clementing.

Work in the mines they gave him then,
To try the brave old Saint;
And there two thousand Christian men
With thirst were like to faint.
He prayed a prayer, and out of clay
He made the waters spring;
And therefore on S. Clement s Day
We go a Clementing.

An anchor round his neck they tied
And cast him in the sea;
And bravely as he lived he died,
And gallantly went free.
He rests a many miles away,
Yet here his name we sing,
As all upon S. Clement's Day
We go a Clementing.

Our fathers kept it long ago,
And their request we make,
Good Christians one small mite bestow,
For sweet S. Clement's sake;
And make his feast as glad and gay
As if it came in spring,
When all upon S. Clement's Day
We go a Clementing.

The Hospital and Dispensary.

There is a vacancy on the medical staff to be soon filled, also the post of visiting physicians to patients south of Cherry street is vacant by resignation. The medical clinic has been growing, but the special ones seems to have felt the effect of the change from our own building and are quite light. The Iron Cross still shelters us while the work goes on to make our own property habitable. The builders yet promise to have two floors quite ready by S. Clement's Day. If so we shall then open; if not, the formal service will have to be put off. Donation Day will be on Tuesday, November 26th, from 10 to 12 M. and 2 to 5 P. M. The House Committee will be glad to receive gifts of money and of such supplies as can help to furnish the wards, the nurse's rooms, the kitchen and laundry. It would be wisest for those who intend giving any article to furnish it to send word to the Committee before buying it; thus to avoid duplicate giving and to enable one donation to be of the proper size, etc., to fit in with others. How soon can we be ready to receive supplies of food will depend on the unknown future. The Fourth Annual Report will be soon issued. The "Cowley Album" has been enlarged by a photograph of the Hospital which is now on sale at 2021 Cherry street.

The Children's Faith.

Father Osborne's new book for children has just been published. It is called THE CHILDREN'S FAITH and contains twenty-six instructions on the Apostle's Creed, with pictures. Though primarily intended for the Sundays after Trinity, it may be read or used at any time. We think that all Sunday-school Teachers would do well to study this work and that Christian parents who wish to teach their children at home will find it most valuable. Many parents have thanked Father Osborne for the assistance they have obtained from his other two books for children.

We may again call attention to these books as they are not so well known as they might be, and some of our friends might like to begin their use with the season of Advent. THE CHILDREN'S SAVIOUR contains instructions on the life of our Lord Jesus Christ. THE SAVIOUR KING, or Old Testament types and illustrations of our Lord's life. Both books are arranged for use from Advent to Whitsunday and have beautiful outline pictures in them. Of the first the American Literary Churchman said, "Exactly what instructions for children should be, in matter and form;" while of the second the Church Record said, "This is a grand stimulus to true adoration of Jesus on the part of children, by a master-hand. The writer's sympathy with childhood is evident in every line, and the delicate touch will compel the interest of young readers and enforce lessons that added years will only deepen."

All three books can be had at the Iron Cross Office. The Children's Saviour, $1.00, the other two, $1.25 each.

At the same place may be obtained "THE WORK OF AN ASSOCIATE," being three addresses given by Father Osborne to Associates of the Girl's Friendly Society. These addresses may be usefully read by any Churchwomen who are trying to help working girls, or those younger than themselves. Price, 10 cents.

The Churchman's Kalendar.

ILLUSTRATED. 1889.

This Kalendar will have fifty two Meditations on the Gospels of the Christian year. Each Meditation will contain seven points so that it may be carried on through the week. The expense of bringing out this Kalendar is considerable, and it will be a great help to the Editor, 2021 Cherry street, if persons will send the number of copies which they will be willing to take. All members of the Parish can get the publications of the Iron Cross and any others published in St. Clement's Parish, at 2021 Cherry street.

Our Relations to Roman Catholics.

But the Roman Church is not governed by the Pope. It is governed by a party of men, the most disciplined, refined, cultivated, skillful and worldly-wise of any body of men upon earth. A political-religious ring, bound together by a vow which gives religious sanction to crime if it can increase the political power, not of the Pope, but of the papacy. No men on this earth are better fitted by their training to carry out this purpose, Every one is fascinated by them, and a worldly man could find no more interesting companion than a complete Jesuit. No more holy man can be found in missionary work than the good Jesuit, but what hope can there be of union in the Church so long as the Jesuit keeps his vow.

"I, A. B., now in the presence of Almighty God, the Blessed Virgin Mary, the Blessed Michael the Archangel, the Blessed St. John the Baptist, the Holy Apostles St. Peter and St. Paul, and the saints and Sacred Host of Heaven, and to you, my Ghostly Father, I do declare from my heart, without mental reservation, that the Pope is Christ's Vicar General and is the true and only Head of the universal church throughout the earth; and that by virtue of the Keys of binding and loosing given to His Holiness by Jesus Christ, he hath power to depose Heretical Kings, Princes, States, Commonwealths and Governments, all being illegal without his sacred Confirmation, and that they may safely be destroyed. Therefore, to the utmost of my power I will defend this doctrine and His Holiness' rights and customs against all usurpers of the Heretical or Protestant Authority whatsoever, especially against the now pretended Authority and Church in England, and all Adherents, in regard that they be usurped and heretical, opposing the Sacred Mother Church of Rome.

"I Do Renounce and disown any Allegiance as due to any heretical King, Prince, or State, named Protestant, or obedience to any of their inferior Magistrates or Officers.

"I do further declare the doctrine of the Church of England, of the Calvinists, Huguenots and other Protestants to be damnable, and those to be damned who will not forsake the same. I do further declare that I will help, assist and advise all or any of His Holiness' agents, in any place wherever I shall be, and to do my utmost to extirpate the heretical Protestant doctrine, and to destroy all their pretended power, legal or otherwise. I do further promise and declare that notwithstanding I am dispensed with to assume any religion heretical for the propagation of the Mother Church's interest, to keep secret and private all her agents' counsel as they entrust me, and not to divulge, directly or indirectly, by word, writing, or circumstance whatsoever, but to execute all which shall be proposed, given in charge, or discovered unto me by you, my Ghostly Father, or by anyone of this convent.

"All which I, A. B., do swear, by the Blessed Trinity and Blessed Sacrament which I am about to receive, to perform, and on my part to keep inviolably; and do call on all the Heavenly and Glorious Host of Heaven to witness my real intentions to keep this my oath. In testimony whereof I take this most Holy and Blessed Sacrament of the Eucharist, and witness the same further with my hand and seal, in the face of this holy convent."

The man who keeps this vow is the sworn enemy of those who differ from him in religion, and to kill them is as meritorious with him as it is for a Mahometan to kill a Christian.

The Roman Church is a great political organization, and the Jesuits are those who carry out her policy. The Roman Church would be the mistress of the world, like the Roman Empire of old, if she could.

The Catholic Church is a great religious organization, of which the only Head is our Lord Himself, and all Christians are His members. All members, indeed, have not the same office, and some members rule the action of others, but no Head of the Church exists on earth. As long as the Pope of Rome claims the place of Christ, or as long as it is claimed for him by the Jesuits, union is impossible. Christ only is the Head of the Church, and the Church only is infallible by union with her Lord. The Church, apart from Christ, is as liable to be deceived as Eve apart from Adam. Rome with its claim of independence has been deceived into thinking herself mistress of the world, and has forgotten that the true position of the Catholic Church is that of the Bride of Christ.

It is this worldly position against which every Christian should protest and which every Catholic should abjure. The Church is Catholic, not Roman. Our Lord did not found a Roman, but a Catholic Church. An American Roman Catholic Church is a contradiction in terms. When there is an American Catholic Church, independent of the Pope, Catholics of all nations will be able to breathe freely, but at present they are divided.

It is of no use for any to try by any spasmodic efforts to obtain unity. It is of no use to think that we are more safe by catching hold of a great fragment of the boat—the greater portion of the Catholic Church is in Paradise—but we are divided, and while we should pray for peace and unity, we cannot, as individuals, worship at the same altars.

Parish Notes.

The Festival of S. Clement was a day of great thanksgiving in the Parish for the settlement of affairs. The last three years, in which things were in so undecided a condition, were a great trial to the Parish. The Rev. Alfred G. Mortimer preached on the morning of S. Clement's day, and the Bishop of Delaware addressed the Guilds in the evening. The Parish Tea was postponed owing to the sickness of the Rector.

The Bible class for ladies will be held at 4 o'clock on Sunday afternoons, in the vestry.

The Bible class for men will be held in the Iron Cross Rooms, Twenty-first and Market street (3d floor), at 4 o'clock, each Sunday afternoon.

The lecture on Church History, on Monday afternoons, at 4 o'clock, will be resumed in Advent. One century will form the subject of each afternoon's lecture.

The regular meetings of the Iron Cross will take place on Tuesday evenings, at the Iron Cross Rooms, Twenty-first and Market streets, at 8 o'clock.

The Art Exhibition at the Iron Cross rooms was a great success, and every one was surprised at the beautiful collection of embroideries, pictures and curiosities. The weather was unpropitious, otherwise the financial success would have been equal to the merits of the exhibition. The expenses of the exhibition were very considerable, and the proceeds from the tickets were scarcely sufficient to cover them. Large numbers of tickets, were, however, given away, and on the one fine day the rooms were crowded. It did not seem to be understood that the pictures were for sale.

An Art and Fancy Fair will be held on Wednesday, December 18th, for the sale of Works of Art, &c. Things will be sold as reasonably as possible, and it will be a good opportunity for those who admired the things in the Exhibition to buy them as Christmas presents. The sale will take place in he Iron Cross Rooms, from 12 to 9.30.

The Sunday School.

Father Longridge wishes it to be known that one of the alms boxes in the corridor of the church is now appropriated to the use of the Sunday School. There may be many persons who would like to give small sums from time to time to the Sunday School Fund; they can be given in this way.

Father Longridge also hopes that those who have not yet sent in their subscriptions or donations, would do so as soon as convenient, or at least would let him know how much he may expect from them in the course of the year.

The Guild of S. Vincent has received the following letter from Father Puller in acknowledgment of receipt of their offering.

78 Sir Lowry Road, Capetown,
September 25th, 1889.

Walter B. Reed, Esq.,
Sec. S. Vincent's Guild,

My Dear Sir:—I have received your letter of the 16th of August, with its enclosed money order for £6.3.7, and I heartily thank you, and through you the Guild of S. Vincent, for the generous gift. I have arranged with the All Saints Sisters, who are working in Capetown, for the making of a set of red vestments for the use of the celebrant, and when they are made we shall always connect them in our mind with the memory of Father Sheppard, and also with the Guild of S. Vincent, at S. Clement's, Philadelphia.

Father Maturin would, I am sure with me, send his kind regards to all, if he were at hand; but he started two days ago for Kimberly, in the Diamond fields, and for Johannesberg, in the Gold fields, where he is to do a little work during the next three weeks. He is very well in health.

Give my kindest remembrances to the Fathers at S. Clements.

I am yours faithfully,
F. W. Puller.

Letter from Father Maturin.

October 21, 1889.

I take the opportunity of the train's stopping here for half an hour for dinner to write you a line, which I may finish before getting to Capetown, and post by the Wednesday mail. I am now at Orange River Station on my way back to Capetown, after a month's absence of very interesting and varied experience. We have just crossed the Orange River, a very wide bed with a very narrow stream flowing through, soon to rise when the rains come, which seems at present very far off. Up in these parts the rains come in Summer, at Capetown in the Winter. But so far they have had almost no rains here for several months; and things are becoming very serious for Johannesberg, as all provisions are carried by mule or bullock wagon, and they have to depend for food for their cattle upon what they find by the way. At present there is not a blade of grass to be seen, or anything that any beast apparently could feed on. Johannesberg when I left, was really on the verge of a famine. It takes about sixteen days by bullock wagon from Kimberly to Johannesberg, and I saw scarcely any food going up on my way back. Prices are fabulous up there. How any one can live I do not know. They ask simply what they like.

Darragh, the rector of the only English church there, was once a curate of my father's. He has built a large hall as a temporary church, and has enormous congregations at night, almost entirely men, as there are not many women in Johannesberg. I preached for him two Sundays and some week day evenings and had good congregations. I should think the men there could easily be won. My visit was supposed to be preparatory to a mission in July (if I am still here).

I went on from Johannesberg to Pretoria (four or five hours by coach) to preach at the cathedral one evening; returned the next day and started last Wednesday on my way back to Kimberly, to reach there on Friday afternoon, staying over Sunday, and then go back to Capetown.

I had a most strange experience on my return trip by coach from Johannesberg to Kimberly. We got lost on the wide plains which are as level and trackless as the ocean. We were due for the night at a place called Christiana, and were to reach there about 9.30, but we lost our way. A storm suddenly came up, and the driver said he had no idea where we were. One man lit a lamp, went ahead, found a track, and the coach followed, guided by his light. Soon we saw, as we thought, the light of the town, but after going on a long time we got no nearer. Our lamp went out and we had to stop. Presently the light moved towards us. We thought some one was coming with a lantern, and one of us went on to meet him. But as we got nearer the light began again to recede, and when we turned, it followed us, as bright as a good lantern held by a man. Presently two bright lights came quickly towards us, so bright that you could see the shadows as they moved; and then went out and disappeared. We all then got into the coach, "outspanned" the horses, and determined to wait till morning. While we were in the coach (it was now twelve o'clock,) suddenly a light came quickly towards us, passed close by the windows of the coach, burnt up so brightly that the coach was illuminated, and then went out, just as if it was a torch struck against the coach. We could see the sparks as it went out. We all sat there looking and wondering and a good deal awed. One gentleman, a surveyor, who had spent half his life on the plains, said he had never seen anything like it, and was quite sure it was supernatural. One man went along the road where the light was alluring us, and found that if we had gone a few yards farther, we must all have capsized in a very dangerous place. It was impossible to put it down to any man. No soul was near, and it was not a night in which any one would have stayed out. The wind was blowing and the rain falling, and we were not on the regular road. Two men then started out to look for the town, and after about two hours and a half came back, having found the town about a quarter of a mile off in the other direction. By this time the moon was up, so we got out and walked, and got to the hotel about three o'clock, where a supper had been waiting us since ten o'clock. But there were no beds. We slept where we could, I, in the coach, till 5.30 next morning, when we started again and got to Kimberly at eight next evening. On our arrival we found detectives waiting to arrest one of our fellow passengers for embezzlement.

Traveling when one leaves the limited district of the railway, is not very luxurious in South Africa. The coaches to Johannesberg are considered exceptionally luxurious, leaving little to be desired! They certainly are excellently managed when one considers the difficulties; but it makes one somewhat indignant to feel that all this inconvenience is caused by the Dutch Government of the Transvaal wishing to spite the English. They do not want to use the English ports, but to open a line to Delagoa Bay, which is in Portugese hands, meantime Johannesberg runs the risk of starvation, and multitudes who go there daily are put to all kinds of inconvenience.

I believe the Dutch Boers really think they have conquered England. Certainly the English here have no reason to love Gladstone, and a few months in the Cape goes a long way to cure one of any weakness towards Home Rule. Since the Cape has had a responsible government, the Dutch have organized the Africanda bond and reign supreme, at present at any rate, in the Colony. Fancy in the Transvaal how we are treated! Everything is taxed to the utmost, which means a tax on English people, as almost all comes out of Johannesberg. A few years ago the Transvaal Government was almost bankrupt. They had to mortgage some of the public buildings, etc., to get £5,000. Now they have £1,500,000 in the treasury, and keep piling on taxes. I was told that from Johannesberg district, which is almost entirely English, a quarter's return for taxation was £100,000 or £150,000; and for the richest farming district, which is Dutch, for the same period, the return was fifteen shillings. If England had possession, it is impossible to conceive of any limits to the growth of Johannesberg. It is a strange place, lying in the midst of the desert, like an island in the sea; without one thing to attract, save the gold beneath the soil. A dreary, dusty place, without a tree or flower in sight, all intent on the wealth below. I went down one of the mines, and stayed about two hours under ground. It was most interesting but rather alarming to have dynamite exploding almost under ones nose. Once the concussion put out our candle. It is wonderful to find out here so much of the machinery and almost all tools, etc., American. The only cigarettes used here, I believe, are imported from Virginia. Certainly America promises to be the country of the future.

Ever yours affectionately,

B. W. MATURIN.

Accident at Capetown.

Father Puller writes from Capetown about the accident to the Sisters and children:

We have had a cloud of sadness overshadowing our Cyprian-tide and Michaelmas this year, and yet S. Cyprian's Festival began so happily and brightly. On S. Cyprian's Eve the Bishop came to S. Cyprian's, and was present at evensong in chapel, and gave a beautiful little address to the children on the happiness of loving our Lord. The next morning we had a Choral Celebration in the chapel, and five of the children, who had recently been confirmed, made their first communion. Later on in the morning there was a service for the Guild of S. Cyprian, which mainly consists of old S. Cyprian's girls. I spoke to them a little about the life and example of the Saint. That was the last time I saw Sister Mary Agnes alive. She was looking a little worn and tired, as was natural at the end of the term; but she was going to start in the afternoon for Camp's Bay, where a house had been taken, and where she and some of the children were to spend the Michaelmas holidays. She said to one of the Sisters before starting: "I feel so tired, but now I am going to have a rest." Little did she think at the time what that "rest" was to be. In the afternoon Sister Mary Agnes, Sister Mary Pauline, Miss Gye (one of the S. Cyprian's teachers), and five of the children, went by team to Sea Point. There they were met by a waggonette, in which they were to drive along the beautiful new road to Camp's Bay. All went well until just as they got to Camp's Bay. They were coming down a steepish bit of road, when one of the horses stumbled, and on recovering himself took fright, and then both horses bolted, and went tearing down the hill with the waggonette careering after them. In front was a small cart, and the gentleman who was driving it tried to get on one side, so as to leave room for the waggonette, but somehow he did not get as much to the side as was necessary. Anyhow, the result was that in passing the cart the waggonette overturned, and all the people in it were thrown violently out just at a place where there were large boulders and pieces of rock, which had rolled down the mountain side. The accident fortunately happened close to the Camp's Bay Hotel. Help was speedily got, and the Sisters and Miss Gye and the children were carried into the hotel. All were very much hurt and bruised and shaken, but it was evident that four were more seriously hurt than the others. The two worst cases were Sister Mary Agnes and one of the children, Edith Jones, and next to them in seriousness were Sister Mary Pauline and another of the children, Emily Pattison. It happened that Mr. Browning of S. John's, with all his Sunday School children, was having a picnic at Camp's Bay that afternoon, and Sister Mary S. John, who does parish work in Mr. Browning's parish, was there also. She had gone with Mr. Browning's party to help in taking care of and amusing the Sunday School children. The news soon spread that an accident had occurred, and Mr. Browning and Sister Mary S. John went to the hotel to render what help they could. Also Dr. Herman happened to be at Camp's Bay, and he also came to the hotel and took charge of the sufferers, medically. A message was sent into Capetown, and soon three other doctors came out. The accident happened about 4 p. m. We heard of it at S. George's Home between 6 and 7. As soon as the news came, a cab was sent for and Sister Isabella, Miss Crane and I started for Camp's Bay. We got there at about 8.15, and when we arrived we found that Sister Mary Agnes had passed away about half an hour before. She must have come down on her head, as there were terrible gashes in it, and the blood was flowing profusely. She never recovered consciousness from the time of the accident until she died. We found on our arrival that Edith Jones was in a state of coma, and that the doctors thought very seriously of her condition. Three of the doctors had gone away, and Dr. Anderson was remaining for the night. Sister Mary Pauline and Emily Pattison were also in great pain. The others had been able to walk across from the hotel to the house which had been taken for the S. Cyprian's party. I spent the night at the hotel. In the middle of the night Edith Jones passed away without recovering consciousness. Early the next morning (Friday), Dr. Anderson and I were driven back into town, and I went to make arrangements about the funeral. In the course of the day, Sister Mary Pauline and Emily Pattison were moved to the Hospital, where they are still. The other sufferers were able to come back to S. Cyprian's. The next day (Saturday), Sister Mary Agnes and Edith Jones were buried side by side at Claremont. Sister Mary Agnes lies next to Sister Laura, and at the foot of Miss Katherine Buller. Edith Jones lies at the foot of Bishop Gray. Sister Mary Agnes' coffin was carried by two priests and two deacons. The service in the church was taken by Gresley (the rector of the Parish), and myself. The Bishop officiated at the grave. A number of the S. Cyprian's children were pall-bearers. A good many of the clergy were present. It was a beautiful day and a beautiful service. I forgot to mention that the bodies had been brought in the course of Friday to S. George's Home, and had been placed side by side in the chapel, and on Saturday morning I celebrated, using the Collect, Epistle and Gospel provided in Edward's first Prayer Book.

Please remember us all very earnestly in your prayers. F. W. PULLER.

P. S.—I have just heard from the Hospital that Sister Mary Pauline is better, and Emily Pattison slightly better, but the doctors are still very anxious about Emily Pattison.

Swedenborgians.

The minds of men differ as much, or even more, than their outward appearance; no two are exactly alike, and as a crowd of people looking at the same object must each one see it from a slightly different point of view and under different condition, so those who have their minds directed to the same subject will each approach it in a somewhat different spirit. Speaking generally, however, those who concern themselves at all with the facts and problems which meet us on every side may be divided into two classes, those who are content to deal with the questions which arise only on the practical side, and those who seek to penetrate their hidden depths, to understand the causes and origins of things—who are speculative rather than practical. The Church has always contained both classes, and there is work for each to do; the Catholic Faith is not only a creed to be accepted and believed: it is also a philosophy; in it the various questions which have tried the intellects of men will find their true and complete solution, if not immediately, yet in due time; the great difference beween the Christian Faith and Christian philosophy is that the Faith is a Revelation, it has been "once delivered to the saints," and must be by them kept whole and undefiled, and so handed on to those that come after them. He who has the Faith starts from a position of real knowledge; speculation must be constantly failing, because it is concerned with matters which from their very nature cannot be fully understood by such powers as men at present possess. The religious philosopher is doing a useful work when he helps us to understand how the truths contained in Revelation bear upon the questions of our own time, but when he leaves the safe ground of the Faith, and seeks to go beyond that which has been revealed, he enters upon an adventure involving many risks, and which has too often ended in the shipwreck of faith.

Those who have sought to surrender themselves to devout meditation, who, not "careful about noticing things," have chosen the better part, have gained a deeper comprehension of divine things, and greater earnestness in religious life, and have often recovered for the Church the application of truths which had been neglected. Such were S. Bernard of Clairvaux, S Francis de Sales, Fénélon, and in later times the author of "The Serious Call"; but we are not without warning of the dangers which attend mere speculation, unchecked and unaided by revelation, in the wild eccentricities and strange perversions of the truth into which some have been betrayed.

A very noticeable instance of this is furnished by the history of the "New Jerusalem Church," or, as it is more commonly called, "The New Church."

Emanual Swedenborg, the apostle of this system, was the son of a Swedish Lutheran bishop, and in many respects a remarkable man. Born at Stockholm 200 years ago, he seems to have anticipated many of the conclusions to which men of science have but lately come. The year of his birth, 1688, is that marked by the English Revolution. He occupied for some time the position of assessor to the Royal School of Mines, under Charles XII., by whom he was ennobled. From the study of physical science he turned his attention to speculative theology, and is one among many instances that such study of science, and even a considerable mastery of it, does not necessarily qualify a man as a theologian. "A good scientist," says Professor Momerie, "may be a bad metaphysician" (investigator of the laws and processes of thought). "The greatness of his achievements in science does not give any authority whatever to his views upon other subjects. No one can be an expert in everything." Swedenborg was a very volumious writer, his earlier works dealing with the special subjects of his calling as an engineer, and, according to his own account, his spiritual manifestations did not begin until the year 1745. He thus decribes their commencement: "I have been called to a holy office by the Lord, who has most graciously manifested Himself to me, His servant, and has opened my sight into the spiritual world, endowing me with the gift of conversing with spirits and angels." He "conversed," as he tells us, "with apostles, departed popes, emperors and kings, as well as with the late reformers of the Church—Luther Calvin, and Melancthon." Of Luther he says that, "As soon as the reformer learnt what was taught by the New Church, he began to ridicule his own former tenets!"

A statement which is of interest in connection with the probability that his own theological speculations orginated in a violent recoil from the current Protestant doctrine of justification, which he regarded as destructive of morality; but in rejecting Lutheran doctrine he rejected with it the great body of the traditional belief of the Church. He refused to acknowledge the Three Person in the Blessed Trinity, and asserted that the same Divine Being who is called Jehovah in the Old Testament is in the New Testament called Jesus Christ.

Like all other attempts to illustrate and explain the great doctrine of the Holy Trinity, and to bring that which is incomprehensible (without bound or limit) within the narrow limits of human language and expression, this attempt by Swedenborg only adds to the difficulty by substituting a fanciful theory for the simple statement, expressed so clearly in the Athanasian Creed, of the Truth, which claims the acceptance of all who recognize the authority of Holy Scripture.

Parish Notes.

The General Confirmation Class will begin on Tuesday evening, January 6th, 1890. Every body who has been confirmed can come, if they wish. The unconfirmed are especially asked to come, even if they should not now be seriously thinking of the matter. You, who read this, try your best to have all you know, who are not yet confirmed, come to these classes. The instructions given will answer many of the questions so frequently asked the Clergy, and may also recall to us the time of our confirmation, with all its resolutions and intentions.

The lectures on Church history will be resumed in February.

F. Field will be absent during most of the month of January.

The Churchman's Kalendar, illustrated, has been greatly in demand this year. All who wish to get a copy should send to the office of the Iron Cross, 2021 Cherry street.

The Iron Cross Art Union will supply persons with a good opportunity of getting good religious pictures at a low rate, for particulars inquire at the office.

There are now 242 boys on the Iron Cross Register. The homes of all the boys have been visited, and in many cases the parents, who went nowhere, have been brought to the Church. A committee of ladies is organized to be present in the boys' parlor every evening and to visit the homes.

COMMUNIONS, November 20th to December 20th, 776.

OFFERINGS, November 20th to December 20th, $500.86.

The Sunday School.

The Sunday school had their Christmas Festival on Saturday evening, December 28th. After singing some carols an excellent performance of the time-honored "Box and Cox," greatly delighted the children. Our thanks are due to the actors, and not least to Mr. George Robey and others who took all the trouble of erecting the stage and its appointments. After the Christmas presents had been distributed, the children left the school room class by class, each boy and girl receiving, as they went out, a box of candy and a piece of cake. The arrangement both for this and also for the distribution of the presents were admirably carried out by some of the older members of S. Vincent's Guild.

Service List for January.

Jan. 5. Christmas I.

11 A. M.

Introit.

While all things were in quiet silence, and night was in the midst of her swift course, Thine Almighty Word leaped down from heaven out of Thy royal throne.

The Lord is King and hath put on glorious apparel: The Lord hath put on His apparel and girded Himself with strength.

Glory be to the Father, etc.

Communion Service, Tours in C.

Gradual.

Thou art fairer than the children of men: full of grace are Thy lips.

My heart is inditing of a good matter. I speak of the things which I have made unto the King.

My tongue is the pen of a ready writer.

The Lord is King and hath put on glorious apparel: The Lord hath put on His apparel and girded Himself with strength.

8 P. M.

Magnificat, } . Gadsby in C.
Nunc Dimittis, }

Anthem, Sing praises unto the Lord, Gounod.

Sing praises unto the Lord, sing praises unto the Lord O ye saints of His, and give thanks unto Him for a remembrance of His holiness.

For His wrath endureth but the twinkling of an eye and in His pleasure is life. Heaviness may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning.

O my God I will give thanks unto Thee for ever.

Jan. 12. Epiphany I.

11 A. M.

Introit.

On the highest throne I beheld a man sitting whom a multitude of angels worship singing together; and behold His Name and empire are for everlasting.

O be joyful in the Lord all ye lands; serve the Lord with gladness, and come before His presence with a song.

Glory be to the Father, etc.

Communion Service, Tours in C.

Gradual.

Blessed be the Lord God, even the God of Israel; which only doeth wondrous things from the beginning.

The mountains also shall bring peace and the little hills righteousness unto the people.

O be joyful in the Lord, all ye lands.

Serve the Lord with gladness. Alleluia.

8 P. M.

Magnificat, Nunc Dimittis, } . Barnby in E.

Anthem, When Jesus our Lord, Mendelssohn.

When Jesus our Lord was born in Bethlehem of Judea; Behold, from the East to the city of Jerusalem, there came wise men, and said, "Say where is He born the King of Judea? For we have seen His star, and are come to adore Him."

There shall a star from Jacob come forth, and a sceptre from Israel rise up and dash in pieces princes and nations.

As bright the star of morning gleams
So Jesus sheddeth glorious beams
Of light and consolation;
Thy word, O Lord, radiance darting,
Truth imparting, gives salvation,
Thine be praise and adoration.

Jan. 19. Epiphany II.

11 A. M.

Introit.

All the world shall worship Thee O God, sing of Thee, and praise Thy Name, O Thou most Highest, O be joyful in God all ye lands: Sing praises unto the honor of His Name, make His praise to be glorious.

Glory be to the Father, etc.

Communion Service, Eyre in Eb.

Gradual.

The Lord sent His Word and healed them; and they were saved from their destruction.

O that men would therefore praise the Lord for His goodness; and declare the wonders that He doeth for the children of men.

Praise the Lord, all ye angels of His.

Praise Him all His hosts. Alleluia.

8 P. M.

Magnificat, Nunc Dimittis, } . Barnby in E.

Anthem, O clap your hands, Stainer.

O clap your hands, all ye people; sing unto God with the voice of melody, for the Lord is high and to be feared, He is the great King over all the earth.

They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength. They shall mount up with wings as eagles, they shall run and not be weary, they shall walk and not faint.

Trust ye in the Lord for ever, for in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength.

Jan. 26. Epiphany III.

11 A. M.

Introit.

Worship Him, all ye His angels.

Zion heard of it, and rejoiced, and the daughters of Judah were glad.

The Lord is King, the earth may be glad thereof; yea, the multitude of the isles may be glad thereof.

Glory be to the Father, etc.

Communion Service, Eyre in Eb.

Gradual.

The heathen shall fear Thy Name, O Lord; and all the kings of the earth, Thy Majesty, when the Lord shall build up Zion, and when His glory shall appear.

The Lord is King, the earth may be glad thereof; yea, the multitude of the isles may be glad thereof. Alleluia.

8 P. M.

Magnificat, Nunc Dimittis, } . Stainer in Bb.

Anthem, Whoso dwelleth, Martin.

Whoso dwelleth under the defence of the most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty. I will say unto the Lord, Thou art my hope and my stronghold, my God, in Him will I trust.

He shall defend Thee under His wings and thou shalt be safe under His feathers. His faithfulness and truth shall be thy shield and buckler.

Lord Jesus, King of Paradise,
O keep me in Thy love,
And guide me to that happy land
Of perfect rest above,
Where loyal hearts and true
Stand ever in the light,
All rapture through and through
In God's most holy sight.

The Missionary Society.

One of our parochial delinquencies has been the little interest felt in the matters this society has in hand. The interest has been deep enough in the few who have felt any; the evil has been the small number who care for the cause. The first meeting in December, however, was attended by more than any before—so far encouraging. At it was read a most interesting letter from the Rev. Mr. Chapman, in Alaska, to whom we sent our boxes last year. He acknowledged their receipt, told of his work, and asked our prayers for a most unusual object—that somebody who can manage a steam saw mill will volunteer to help them. It seems that he has received such a gift which is of the nature of a white elephant until somebody will come to the rescue. So we must say our prayers for that.

The society this year will keep the pledges made by F. Maturin, viz.: to help S. Mary's Orphanage, in Baltimore, and to help some Theological students; and in addition will give their work to an orphanage for girls, and to a missionary in Arkansas. Whatever money will be over will go to S. Philip's Mission, in Cape Town, where F. Maturin is now working. It is hoped that the affection for him will enable the Missionary Society to do more than ever before. Our two organizations which look beyond themselves primarily are the Altar Guild and the Missionary Society, others indeed look beyond themselves, but as a secondary consideration. Is it too much to hope to see all interested either in one or other of these? There is no reason why a person should not be interested in both.

The addresses at the meetings will be upon "Women's work in Missions;" and as a first subdivision, the mission work done by Sisterhoods, with some notes of the early work of our present existing communities—a topic too recent to be a matter of history, and yet too old to be a "burning question" now. The next meeting will be on Tuesday, January 7th, at 4 P. M.

Bishop Talbot will preach on Sunday night, January 26th.

The Iron Cross Convention.

The Annual Convention and Festival of the Iron Cross will again take place at S. Clement's. The appointment had been made for New York as the place of meeting, but there has been a difficulty in finding a church with all the requirements of rooms, etc., at liberty for a whole day. The Guild has therefore been obliged to fall back in its old home, S. Clement's, Philadelphia, and the church will welcome the Guild and all its representatives from the various Branches to a grand and solemn service such as will be worthy of the occasion.

There will be a solemn Celebration of the Holy Communion with sermon at 9.30 on Wednesday, January 29th. All persons are requested to offer their prayers for the Iron Cross on that day at the service.

Choir Items.

Willie Haas, the solo alto, who had a bad accident—cutting off two of his toes in an elevator, a little time ago—was with us again on Sunday after Christmas.

We have missed him a great deal, and are glad to welcome him.

A great many of the choir were down with "la grippe" on the Sunday after Christmas, and those who were there seemed troubled with a good deal of coughing.

Mr. C. H. Burling has been appointed to fill the vacancy caused by Mr. Auty's resignation.

The following is a complete list of the choir.

Trebles.—E. Allen, C. Coulston, W. Pelham, G. Orf, S. Long, A. Stein, J. McCormick, J. Ithel, W. Orf, W. Peters, G Bauerle, T. Bauerle, A. Schelhas, A. Johnson.

Altos.—W. Haas, H. Brearly, F. Markland, A. Lang, W. Kirby.

Tenors.—Messrs. C. H. Burling, H. W. Kneedler, J. H. Carr, J. D. Thomas, F. Pryor, H. H. Sturm, C. Parker, L. H. Burr, A. S. Stanford.

Basses.—Messrs. Gordon D. Thomas, C. Wright, W. W. Minchin, Decatur Smith, Jr., J. F. Ritter, E. Young, C. Parham, G. Conner, F. R. Merritt, G. Durang, E. Hart, W. Harding.

The music which was announced in the last number of the Magazine for Christmas Day, Sir John Stainer in Eb, had to be foregone. Messrs. Novello failed to get the copies for us in time. We hope, however, to have them before long. Meanwhile it was necessary to fall back upon Mozart's Mass in C, the same that was sung at our Patronal Festival on S. Clement's Day. We cannot say that it is so much to our taste as music originally written for the words of our own service; nevertheless, Mr. Whitney's (of Boston) skillful adaptation and the excellent singing of the choir made it, on the whole, better than such adaptations are wont to be. Our hearty thanks are due to Mr. Whitney for so kindly lending us the copies, and also to our own choir for the manner in which they got up the music at very short notice.

During the Offertory on Christmas Day, Handel's chorus, "For unto us a Child is born," was sung, and we have seldom heard it sung better. We were glad also to hear last Sunday morning, for the first time these many years, the beautiful hymn "Of the Father's Love begotten." We hope it will become a special favorite, and always, henceforth, find its place at our Christmas Festivals. There are no hymns so majestic and so full of the spirit of worship as those ancient Latin hymns sung to their proper plain-song melodies. We wish there were many more of them in our Hymn Book; and that the "Proper" hymn for the day and season might always be sung throughout our churches. The wishy-washy sentimental verses which so often do duty for hymns which are really hymns, is to us one of the saddest features of popular religion at the present day. In this connection, we heartily commend to the attention of our readers some excellent remarks taken from a review of the last edition of Hymns Ancient and Modern, which appeared recently in the London "Guardian," and which we print in this number of our Magazine.

We cannot close this brief notice of the doings of the choir without saying how beautiful we thought the music throughout the season of Advent. The Missa de Angelis, with the Creed from Dykes in F, was sung each Sunday at the eleven o'clock Celebration, and, to our mind, few services we have ever heard in S. Clement's Church, have been more full of that solemn beauty and reverence which befits the Service of the Sanctuary. And the two settings of the Magnificat which were used at the Evening Services during the same season, viz, Turle in D, and Dr. Garrett in D, are, we think, by far the most beautiful that we have sung for a long while. Turle's especially is beyond all praise for its quiet gracefulness, and the perfect balance of its parts We are sure that it is a special favorite with the choir, or they would not sing it so well as they do.

Finally, our hearty thanks and congratulations are due to Mr. Tipton, and to every member of the choir for the excellent work they have done of late; and we hope that we shall have many more such words of commendation to repeat in the future.

We have just heard that the boys of the choir presented Mr. Tipton with a Christmas present of a handsome silk umbrella. We are glad to notice such tokens of a good feeling on the part of the boys, and to see that they appreciate the work that their Master does for them.

Hymns.

We print the following excellent remarks from "The Guardian," decidedly the ablest and most weighty of English Church newspapers. They are from a review of the new and enlarged edition of "Hymns Ancient and Modern." We have not space for the whole article, and have therefore omitted several paragraphs of detailed criticism, retaining only what is of more general application. But this portion is so admirable, and its strictures so much needed at the present time, that we hope our readers will consider every word attentively.

"The compilers of Hymns Ancient and Modern seem to be conscious that this supplementary volume requires some excuse, for they begin their Preface by alleging, like every poetaster who burdens the world with his verses, that they have been "repeatedly urged to supplement their book with some additional hymns." We wish those who urged this had made the further recommendation to cut out of the original book at least one hymn for every hymn added, for the compilers themselves seem to be strangely blind to the fact that reduction far more than amplification is needed for these vast collections of poor poetry and doubtful theology.

As it is, the Church of England will now have thrust upon it 165 additional hymns, of which we will undertake to say not ten are really wanted, while no attempt has been made to diminish the original mass of 473. Yet in the original book there are many hymns which are very seldom used, and many others which are often used but ought to be disused.

The compilers show themselves conscious of the exceeding badness of many of their hymns for saints' days, which, so far as we know, are very generally avoided, by adding a few to be used, we suppose, as substitutes. But the original offenders remain, and indeed no substitute is offered for the worst of them, for the strained and almost ludicrous stanzas on S. Bartholomew or for the very unsatisfactory hymns on the Conversion of S. Paul. Again, it is well known that some of the hymns in the original book on the Seven Words are hardly ever sung, so inadequate are they; but no attempt is made in this volume to provide any substitutes. We can well believe that it is an impossibility; but then why are the original failures allowed to stand? With regard to the other class of hymns which we should have been glad to see removed —the class of those which are undeservedly popular—the compilers show themselves in this volume unrepentant and unashamed. Instead of cutting out "Hark, hark, my soul," and its congeners, they have added others of the same kind, some of them indeed unredeemed by any touch of that poetical beauty which never wholly deserted Faber. Such hymns as those numbered 530, 537, 541, 542, 584, violate the principles of liturgical worship. They are, in different ways, sentimental, individual, sensational, extravagant. It will be said against this, as it is generally said of "Hark, hark, my soul," that they are popular; but that is precisely the reason why we so strongly deprecate their admission into a collection which ought to set the standard of liturgical propriety. In worship men should be taken out of themselves, and should be forced to associate great thoughts and lofty words with the beauties of music and architecture. As it is, the charm of early association, and of the reverent memories of Church worship is too frequently, by the perversity of popular hymn writers and compilers, conferred upon vacuous and prosaic commonplaces or extravagant sentimentality. Many common hymns, instead of exalting men's thoughts, lower their standard of what is good and fitting. The compilers of Hymns Ancient and Modern, who had a grand opportunity of reforming popular taste, have condescended to follow it, and have included in their collection many hymns of which the only possible justification can be that they are favorites with the untrained majority of worshipers.

Perhaps it may be thought that hymns ought not to be criticised too closely as poetry, or in regard to the ordinary canons of versification. We do not agree with this idea, but we will concede the point and pass on to ask what emotional or intellectual benefit is conferred on churchgoers by many of the hymns in this volume? Of the actual faults of taste we have already spoken, but most of these hymns are guiltless of any fault except that of insignificance. Insignificance is, however, a very serious fault when we are concerned with acts of worship.

We could multiply instances of the feeble dullness of the hymns which, as we have said, are almost forced upon the Church by the compilers of the most popular hymn book in use. But we do not care to dwell upon details in comparison with the general principles of worship which seem to us at stake. It is the business of the clergy, as ministers of the Church's worship, to lead people to a higher standard of taste, to a nobler level of thought, than they would reach by themselves. The Bible and the Prayer Book provide unrivaled materials for the greater part of our services. But it is conceded that in one direction the Prayer Book does not give enough latitude; the popular wish for metrical singing is harmless, even laudable in itself, and should be indulged. There is no reason, however, why it should be indulged at the expense of the principles of dignity and solemnity which are observed in the rest of the service, and why in hymns, as well as in the Psalms and the prayers, a lofty and pure standard of worship should not be maintained. Such a standard is quite compatible with simplicity, fervor, and even popularity. There are many noble hymns which possess all these qualities; but there are many which do not, and a powerful and representative body of Churchmen like the compilers of Hymns Ancient and Modern might have accomplished a task of inestimable value had they courageously and firmly set themselves to weed out the weak and sentimental and erroneous hymns which have grown into popularity. As it is, they have followed instead of guiding popular taste, and in this supplemental volume, in spite of the bright exceptions, some of which we have noticed, have afforded yet another illustration of the cynical remark, "Ce qu'il ne vaut pas la peine de dire, on le chante."

Swedenborgians.

And here it is we discover the foundation of this as of most other departures from the true faith. A "New Church," indeed, if it professes to be founded upon God's Word at all, can only be so upon some new interpretation of that Sacred Word; and this is the case with the "New Church" of the Swedenborgians. One part of their system is "the doctrine of correspondencies," a favorite idea with both Jewish commentators and early Christian Fathers, though their application of it of course differed very widely; it means that over and above the apparent and literal sense of Scripture, there is a spiritual sense, only to be read and understood by the eye of faith. These two senses are united and "correspond," like the soul and body of man. When we, for instance, describe any human being as a wolf, a fox, or a lamb, we mean that the ideas these words convey to our minds "correspond" with the characters of those whom we thus describe. The allegorical interpretation of the Bible is one which has always commended itself to those of a devout and somewhat visionary nature; but it is one in which the imagination needs to be under careful control, lest it run wild, and neglect the plain and obvious meaning of the Scriptures to search for something which may be but a pious fancy, and in seeking to grasp the shadow lose the substance. Although Swedenborg died in the year 1772, it was not till some years after that any society was formed of those holding the doctrines which he taught; and, indeed, the members of the "New Church" do not acknowledge him as their founder. That he himself had no intention of founding a religious sect is probably true, but it is also true that the sect has grown out of the society formed for the study of his writings and to promulgate the teaching which they contained. Known at first as the "Theosophic Society," the title of the "New Church" was adopted in 1788, when the first chapel was opened, and a settled ministry obtained. The method used to originate a succession of ministers was curious; it was agreed to elect by lot one of their number to ordain certain others to the ministry. The lot fell upon Robert Hindmarsh, a journeyman printer, who proceeded to ordain his father, James Hindmarsh, and Samuel Smith, both of them preachers who had left the Wesleyan Society. The ritual used in the Swedenborgian chapels resembles very closely that of the Church of England, and neither the worship itself nor the arrangement of the building gives much indication of the opinions held by the worshippers, nor do the members of the "New Church" show any feeling of Sectarian bitterness to the "Old Church;" but it is on this account the more necessary to warn the unwary of the serious and fatal errors which are involved in their teaching. The very name of a "New Church" must make us more than suspicious that those who belong to it have abandoned, not only the "fellowship" of the Apostle, but "the doctrine" also; and the more we understand the "new" interpretation they put upon the Scriptures, the wider is that departure seen to be; and while we do not doubt the earnestness and sincerity of many of those who have been attracted by the writings of Swedenborg, we cannot disguise the fact that many of the delusions of modern Spiritualism may be traced to these writings, and find there such support as they have.

In conclusion, we cannot do better than to quote the words of Swedenborg himself. When asked if it was possible for anyone to come into the same state of seership as he enjoyed, he answered: "Take good care; this is the direct road to insanity; for when a man pores over spiritual and hidden things, he cannot protect himself against the delusions of hell—when by his own speculations he tries to fathom heavenly things which transcend his comprehension."

Parish Notes.

The Rector and Brother Maynard sailed for Europe in the Ohio on Saturday, January 25th. Father Convers expects to return soon after the beginning of Lent.

The Bishop will administer Confirmation on Friday, March 21st. All persons desiring to prepare are requested to give their names to the clergy or to the Sisters and to attend the instructions on Thursday evenings or make appointments for private instruction.

Few extra services or sermons are provided in Lent, but it is hoped that persons will try to attend regulary the daily services, and especially the celebrations of the Holy Communion.

It is hoped that every one in the Parish will try to assist the clergy in their efforts to keep up the work. A great deal of time may often be saved if persons will send a postal to the clergy in case of sickness and will bring those who are unbaptized or unconfirmed to the classes.

The Children's Clinic at the Dispensary will open on the first Monday in February.

It is a matter of general regret that Mr. W. W. and Mr. C. S. Minchin have severed their connection with the choir. The former gentleman has been in the choir as boy and man for twenty years, and both brothers have shown the utmost zeal and enthusiasm in their work. We wish to place on record our appreciation of their good and faithful service.

The choir is now divided so that there is a complete choir on each side.

This is as it should be and more evenly-balanced singing is the result.

We are glad to welcome Mr. J. A. Coxe, who has volunteered his services as second Bass.

The organist would be very glad if members of the church having boy relatives who sing would send them to him for trial. The importance of the musical education received by a boy in a choir singing such music as we have at S. Clement's, cannot be too highly estimated.

Introit.

The sorrows of death compassed me, the pains of hell came about me: in my trouble I called upon the Lord, and He heard my voice out of His holy temple.

I will love Thee O Lord my strength: the Lord is my stony rock, my defence and my Saviour.

Glory be to the Father, etc.

Communion Service, Eyre in Bb.

Gradual.

The Lord will be a refuge in due time of trouble, and they that know Thy Name will put their trust in Thee.

For Thou, Lord, hast never failed them that seek Thee.

For the poor shall not alway be forgotten, the patient abiding of the meek shall not perish for ever: up, Lord, and let not man have the upper hand.

Out of the deep have I called unto Thee, O Lord; Lord, hear my voice.

O let Thine ears consider well the voice of my complaint.

If Thou, Lord, will be extreme to mark which is done amiss, O Lord who may abide it.

For there is mercy with Thee, therefore shalt Thou be feared.

No shadows yonder—all light and song,
Each day I wonder and say: How long
Shall time me sunder from that dear throng.

No weeping yonder—all fled away,
While here I wander each weary day,
And sigh as I ponder my long, long stay.

No partings yonder—time and space never
Again shall sunder, hearts cannot sever,
Dearer and fonder hands clasp forever.

None wanting yonder—bought by the Lamb,
All gathered under the evergreen palm,

Anthem, The Lord is my Shepherd, Smart.

The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures: He leadeth me beside the still waters. He restoreth my soul: He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for His Name's sake. Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for Thou art with me; Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me. Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies: Thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over. Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life: and I shall dwell in the house of the Lord for ever.

O Saviour of the world, who by Thy cross and precious blood hast redeemed us. Save us and help us, we humbly beseech Thee, O Lord.

78, Sir Lowry Road, Capetown,
December 11th, 1889.

My Dear Father:—The Bishop came to us on Thursday, and confirmed between 40 and 50 of our people.

Will you thank —— very much for his most kind offer? I wish that I could hope to get out here the sum which is necessary to meet his £100 by Easter, but I am afraid that there is no prospect of doing anything of the kind. It is not very easy to get the well-to-do classes out here to give to things with which they are not brought into contact. I do not suppose that our work is much known. We minister in a part of Capetown where rich people hardly ever come. However, we will do our best.

Capetown is at present in a state of loyal expectation. Our new Governor, Sir Henry Loch, is to arrive from Melbourne to-morrow, if all be well. Triumphal arches are being prepared, and the streets are being decorated with Venetian masts, flags, &c. The Governor and his wife were very much liked, I believe, in Melbourne, and before that in the Isle of Man. The Governor here has more governing to do than any other Colonial Governor in the Empire. Within the Colony he is no doubt tied by his constitutional advisers, but outside the Colony he acts as High Commissioner for himself.

On Saturday, I conducted a quiet day for Church workers, at the Parish Church, at Rondebosh. We had 50 or 60 there from different parishes.

F. W. Puller.

—o—

18A, Nagata Cho, Tokyo,
November 26th, 1889.

My Dear Father Benson:—The change from American parish work to the life here, with no priestly work to do, was very trying. In our Mission there are no celebrations in English, and only four a month in Japanese, at four different places, so that an extra Priest is left without celebrations or work of any kind, except the study of the language. The English Bishop and his Clergy were, however, very kind, giving me opportunities to celebrate, etc., as soon as they found out that I had none anywhere else. Since May we have been in our own house, which is a couple of miles distant from the concession, my position in a Japanese school giving me the privilege of living anywhere in the city. Two English ladies have the larger part of the house, ours being a wing which was added after the rest was built. In Mrs. Kirkes' part, there is an oratory, licensed by Bishop Bickersteth, where we have an Early Celebration in English every Sunday morning and Evensong in the afternoon. These services give me much comfort, and I hope are a comfort to those who attend them. They do not clash with any other services, and so do not take any away from the Church. Since September I have had definite Japanese work in Bishop Williams' congregation. I wish I was able to do the preaching as well as to take the services, for the congregation is an important one, being largely made up of the students in the Divinity and Boys' and Girls' schools. Bishop Williams has resigned, leaving me in full charge of the congregation until the arrival of a new Bishop. We have heard, indirectly, that a Cambridge (Mass.) man has been elected by the House of Bishops. On Advent Sunday, a new church built by the Bishop, is to be consecrated. The exterior of the building, though disappointing in many details, is, on the whole, very good; the interior is disappointing. The event to which we are looking forward with most interest is the ordination of the first native Priests. Bishop Bickersteth will ordain one in the South on the second Sunday in Advent, and two here on the fourth Sunday, when Bishop Williams will also ordain one. I think all the men are very good, they have all been well-tried, and ought to put new life into the work. There will also be several Ordinations to the Diaconate, I am told. One is a very interesting case. About fifteen years ago he was attracted by a foreigner's name on the gate of a house in Tokyo, and on making inquiries found that he was an English clergyman. Being anxious to learn English, the young Japanese regulary attended services and sermons, until, finally Mr. Wright offered to teach him the Bible every morning. They began with S. John's Gospel, and in a short time Mizuno was baptized. For thirteen years he has been a most faithful, earnest worker, and as a catechist has done much good. He has been coming to our house every week for the instruction of a class we have had, and now he is to be ordained and go back to his former work at Kobe. We shall miss him very much, and for our own sakes I wish Bishop Bickersteth had been able to keep him here. Will you remember these newly-ordained in your daily intercessions? One of my great comforts has been the remembrance that intercession is daily made at Cowley for the Associates and their work. I wish you had some Fathers to spare for Japan.

Confirmation.

Confirmation is:

(1) A first principle, or foundation truth of the doctrine of Christ (Heb. vi.)

(2) An Apostolic ordinance, doubtless commanded by Christ to His Apostles, when He taught them concerning the organization and development of the Kingdom of God, i. e., the Church, during the forty days before His Ascension into heaven.

(3) A special channel of Divine grace to strengthen and confirm Christians in the faith of Christ, in the fellowship of the Church, and in holiness of life; even the gift of the Holy Spirit.

(4) The completion of the Baptismal Covenant on the part of the person confirmed. What is the nature of this Covenant? A Covenant is an agreement or contract between two or more persons. The Covenant of Baptism is an agreement entered into between God and the person baptized. What is the agreement? It is, of course, in two parts. There is God's part, and there is man's part.

God's part of the Covenant is this: He accepts us in Holy Baptism, through the merits of the Precious Blood of Christ; He gives to us His Holy Spirit, and makes us His children, and heirs of eternal life. In one word, God undertakes to save us.

But when God admitted us into Covenant with Himself, we were unable, as infants, to make any response to His grace, or any return for His love. That is to say, we could not undertake our side or part of the Covenant. Did God then keep back His blessing until we could fulfill our duty? No. He is so loving that He will not deny us a share in the wondrous Redemption, purchased by the Saviour's Blood; He is so just that He will not require what we in the helplessness of infancy and childhood, cannot give. So He accepted a pledge and promise, made by our God-parents, on our behalf and in our name. What that promise is the Church Catechism teaches us in the answer to the question, "What did your sponsors then for you?" The fulfillment of this solemn promise of renunciation of sin, of faith in God, and of obedience to His blessed will, is our part of the Covenant of Baptism.

Confirmation calls us to the carrying out of this duty. See the words of the question put by the Bishop to every candidate for Confirmation. "Do ye here in the presence of God . . . renew the solemn promise and vow that was made in your name at your Baptism, ratifying and confirming the same in your own persons, and acknowledging yourselves bound to believe, and to do all those things, which your sponsors then undertook for you?" To this question every person answers "I do," and thereby pledges himself to fulfill his part of the Covenant of Baptism.

But Confirmation is, on man's part, even more than this. It is

(5) The public avowal of our Conversion to God. It is the great I will in act, as well as in word. When, in the Confirmation Service, the person answers "I do" to the question put by the Bishop, he makes a very solemn promise, viz., that he will be in deed, as well as in name, a Christian. But by coming out before the world, and making a public confession of Christ, he does a bolder thing; he avows himself to be on the side of Jesus Christ. In the Confirmation Service the Church provides an opportunity for her children to express before the Church and the world their conversion to God, and their determination to live a converted life. Lastly,

(6) Confirmation is the entrance-gate to the highest privileges of the Church of Christ. Only those who have been confirmed are full members, if I may use the term of the Catholic Church. Only those who have been confirmed or are ready and desirous to be confirmed, may come to the Sacrament of the Lord's Body and Blood.

Confirmation is a special channel of God's grace which has existed in the Church from the days of the Apostles until the present time.

Now, "Grace" is the communication of the Divine life to the soul of man; and it comes to us through Jesus Christ (S. John i: 17), the Incarnate Son of God, by the operation of the Holy Spirit. "Grace" is the gift of life, spiritual life; and, as the Nicene Creed teaches us, the Holy Ghost is "the Lord, and Giver of life."

But God's gift of "Grace," that is of His own life to man's soul, depends upon man being in living union with Jesus Christ. Every one of us was made a "member of Christ," that is, a real part of Christ's Body, the Church, in Holy Baptism. But all are not now in living union with the Head; for this union can only be maintained, on man's part, by faith, and a right use of the Sacraments, and other means of grace. So it comes to pass that our sins, our neglect, our indifference, our unbelief stop the flow of "Grace" into the soul. Most people know what paralysis is. When it attacks a limb, or any part of the body, the part attacked is virtually dead. So it happens to the soul when sin enters. It paralyzes; it bars the way to God's grace, and the soul withers and dies, unless and until the healing power of the Precious Blood is applied.

There are many channels through which the Divine life reaches us. We call them "means of grace:" such as prayer, worship, the Word of God, Holy Communion. But there are times and seasons when the soul needs special help; and for these times special grace is provided. For example, when a man is set apart by Ordination for the Office and work of a Priest in the Church of God, special grace is given and assured, to enable him to be a faithful Dispenser of the Word of God, and of His Holy Sacraments. Or, to take another and more familiar case. When a man and woman go to Church to be married, their intention is, or ought to be, to seek the blessing of God upon their marriage. This blessing God undoubtedly gives in answer to faithful prayer; and an abiding blessing for the married life is assured, so long as they remain faithful to God and to each other, even the blessing of His special grace, that "they may so live together in this life, that in the world to come they may have life everlasting."

The grace of Confirmation is a special grace. In the Apostles' days certain miraculous signs—the gift of tongues, prophecy, healing, &c., accompanied the outward sign of the laying on of hands, for a proof that a Divine gift had really been bestowed; but these, like other miracles, ceased with the Apostles. But the ordinary gifts of the Holy Spirit, which are far more important to the growth of the individual Christian in faith and holiness, were continued, and still continue in the Church. From the earliest days Christians have believed that grace is conferred in the "laying on of hands," and that the baptized are thereby confirmed and strengthened for their spiritual warfare. Confirmation is the call of God to those who have come to "years of discretion" (that is, to a time of life when they can judge for themselves, aud make an intelligent choice and decision in the matter of their religion) to come to their Heavenly Father for His special blessing.

It reminds the young of the flock of Christ that they are soon to feel the power of evil in their own hearts and in the world, as they have never in their child-life felt it; and it bids them equip themselves with that special grace which God will give to them when they confess Christ, and seek His help in confirmation.

The beautiful prayer in the Confirmation Service, describes in words drawn from Holy Scripture (Isaiah xi: 2), the riches of God's grace bestowed in the laying on of hands, or Confirmation:—"Strengthen them, we beseech Thee, O Lord, with the Holy Ghost, the Comforter, and daily increase in them Thy manifold gifts of grace; the spirit of wisdom and understanding; the spirit of counsel and ghostly strength; the spirit of knowledge and true-godliness; and fill them, O Lord, with the spirit of Thy holy fear."

The Church in Africa.

This is a special object of interest to us at the present time, when F. Maturin and F. Osborne are both in that country, and the great African traveler, Mr. H. M. Stanley, is now on his way to Cairo, and no doubt will forestall in this country many of the letters which he despatched before the conclusion of his African march. The last letter to hand is one written from Ugogo to Mr. Bruce, Dr. Livingstone's son-in-law. It is a remarkable letter, inasmuch as it contains the story of a progress which, to use Mr. Stanley's own words, "would have kindled Livingstone, and cause him to say, like Simeon, 'Now let thy servant depart in peace.'" It tells of the troubles which ensued in Uganda shortly after the death of Mtesa, of the fall of Mwanga the murderer of Bishop Hannington, and the persecutor of the Christians, overthrown by a united force of Christians and Moslems who placed Kiwewa upon the throne. This unnatural alliance, however, ended in the usual way. The Christians found that their Moslem allies were plotting with the new King against them, and they were alienated from the new régime. Kiwewa was shortly after slain in resisting a forcible attempt by the Moslems to bring him under the rite of circumcision. A further revolution placed Kerema, another of Mtesa's sons, a fratricide, upon the throne. In the meantime Mwanga, the former persecutor of the missionaries, had taken refuge with the French mission at Ukumbi, and had, mirabile dictu, become a Roman Catholic. By this move he won over the Christian converts, and was about to attempt the deposition of Karema, and to reign once again in Uganda, when a deputation from the wily African chief waited upon Stanley to ask him to assist him in the matter. But the great explorer had not only his instructions from his Committee to avoid all attempts to inveigle him in tribal wars, etc.; he was also too doubtful of the conversion of the murderer of Hannington, or that "such a wicked fellow could become so pious a Christian all at once," to embark in so perilous an enterprise.

We have heard from other sources of the events which Mr. Stanley here describes, and perhaps the chief interest which attaches to this particular letter, is the favorable view which he adopts of the future of Christianity in Africa, as well as the evidence here afforded of a deepening conviction in his own mind of the valuable work done by the missionaries. Mr. Stanley, who owns Livingstone as his master, has a strong predilection for the Scotch missions, with Mr. Mackay at the head; but, and it is noteworthy as being contrary to his first impressions, he clearly embraces all in the generous tribute of praise which he accords in this letter. We cannot do better than allow the great traveler to speak for himself. Writing of the events mentioned above, he says: "If the narrative is true—and I have no reason to doubt it—what would have pleased Livingstone so much is that a body of Christians can become in twelve years so numerous and formidable as to depose the most absolute and powerful king in Africa, and hold their own against any number of combinations hostile to them. What can a man wish better for a proof that Christianity is possible in Africa? I forgot to say that each member of the deputation possessed a Prayer Book and the Gospel of Matthew printed in Kiganda, and that so soon as they retired from my presence they went to study their Prayer Books. Five of their following accompanied us for the purpose of pursuing their religious studies on the coast. I take this powerful body of native Christians in the heart of Africa—who prefer exile for the sake of their faith to serving a monarch indifferent or hostile to their faith—as more substantial evidence of the work of Mackay than any number of imposing structures clustered together and called a mission station would be. The native Africans have endured the most deadly persecution—the stake and the fire, the cord and the club, the sharp knife and the rifle bullet have all been tried to cause them to reject the teachings they have absorbed. Staunch in their beliefs, firm in their convictions, they have held together stoutly and resolutely, and Mackay and Ashe may point to these with a righteous pride as the result of their labors to the good kindly people at home who trusted in them."—Church Times.

Lent.

The season of Lent is looked on by many as a long, dreary, sad season, with no brightness in it. They dread its coming, and are glad when it is over.

But the very meaning of the word Lent is anything but sad. It is a good old Saxon word, and means spring, a time full of brightness and hope.

There is something grand and inspiring about the season of Lent! It means to us a time for a fresh start, a time for refreshment and strength, as well as for fasting and self-denial, a time for getting a firmer hold of what we know is true, a time of storing up power to do battle for the right.

Lent should mean all this to us.

We are so apt to grow careless, and to forget our good desires and resolutions, that we need a special time to remind us of what our Heavenly Father wants us to be and to do.

We need to make clear again the blurred lines of daily duty.

For example, in regard to early rising, in regard to keeping a closer watch on each thought, word, and deed, in carefully saying grace, in offering ordinary work to God, like the good woman who swept her house to God's glory, in avoiding gossip and meddling in others' matters, in regard to light reading; to prayer, Bible-reading, self-examination, and in regard to our whole duty towards God and Man

In short, Lent is a time in which to learn thoroughly how to live, it is a time to bring us into closer fellowship with Christ, that we may work in His strength, rest in His Peace, share in His Purity, and live in His Life.

Parish Notes.

The Parochial Retreat on Ash Wednesday was well observed by a large number of parishioners.

The Retreat for the members of the Guild of S. Martha will be held March 9th.

The Guild of the Iron Cross will keep their annual Retreat on Palm Sunday.

The Guild of the Holy Cross will have their Retreat on Mid-Lent Sunday in the Sisters' Chapel. It will be conducted by the Rev. Robert Paine, Rector of Mt. Calvary Church, Baltimore.

The Retreat of the Guild of S. Mary will take place on Thursday in Passion Week.

The Retreat of the Guild of S. Vincent will be held as usual on Passion Sunday.

The sermons on Tuesday evenings in Lent will be preached by the Rev. Howard Thompson, the Rev. H. Le Roy, the Rev. A. B. Conger, the Rev. R. Ritchie, the Rev. H. I. Meigs.

The Way of the Cross will be sung on Friday evenings in the Chapel, at 8 o'clock.

Evening Prayer will be sung in Church at 5 o'clock daily.

All parishioners are asked to attend if possible, one of the daily celebrations of the Holy Eucharist, and to attend Evensong.

The Cantata "Bethany," will be sung by the Choir on Wednesdays, March 19th and 26th, at 8 P. M.

March 2. Lent II.

11 A. M.

Introit.

Call to remembrance, O Lord, Thy tender mercies and Thy loving kindnesses which have been ever of old: neither let mine enemies triumph over me; deliver Israel, O Lord, out of all his troubles.

Unto Thee, O Lord, will I lift up my soul. My God I have put my trust in Thee: O let me not be confounded.

Glory be to the Father, etc.

Communion Service,

Missa de Angelis and Dykes in F.

Gradual.

The sorrows of my heart are enlarged. O bring Thou me out of my troubles, O Lord.

Look upon my adversity and misery; and forgive me all my sin.

The Lord said unto the woman of Canaan: It is not meet to take the children's bread, and to cast it to dogs.

And she said, Truth, Lord, yet the dogs eat of the crumbs which fall from their master's table.

Jesus said unto her, O woman, great is thy faith, be it even unto thee as thou wilt.

Anthem, O Saviour of the world, Goss.

O Saviour of the world, who by Thy cross and precious blood hast redeemed us. Save us and help us, we humbly beseech Thee, O Lord.

March 9. Lent III.

11 A. M.

Introit.

Mine eyes are ever looking unto the Lord, for He shall pluck my feet out of the net: turn Thee unto me, and have mercy upon me, for I am desolate and in misery.

Unto Thee, O Lord will I lift up my soul; my God, I have put my trust in Thee, O let me not be confounded.

Glory be to the Father, etc.

Communion Service,

Missa de Angelis and Dykes in F.

Gradual.

Up, Lord, and let not man have the upper hand: let the heathen be judged in Thy sight.

While mine enemies are driven back: they shall fall and perish at Thy presence.

Unto Thee lift I up mine eyes: O Thou that dwellest in the heavens.

Behold, even as the eyes of servants look unto the hand of their master, and as the eyes of a maiden unto the hand of her mistress; even so our eyes wait upon the Lord our God, until He have mercy upon us.

Have mercy upon us O Lord: have mercy upon us.

8 P. M.

Magnificat, Nunc Dimittis, } . Garrett in D.

Anthem, All who ye weep, Gounod.

All ye who weep, O come unto Me, I will comfort you; All ye who suffer, O come to Me, I will console you: All ye who mourn, O come to Me, I am your peace; All ye who die, O come to me for life eternal.

March 16. Lent IV.

11 A. M.

Introit.

Rejoice O Jerusalem and be glad with her ye that love her; rejoice with joy with her all ye that mourn for her that ye may exult and be satisfied with the breasts of her consolations.

I was glad when they said unto me, We will go into the house of the Lord.

Glory be to the Father, etc.

Communion Service,
Smart in F. and Agutter Bb.

Gradual.

I was glad when they said unto me, We will go into the house of the Lord.

Peace be within thy walls and plenteousness within thy palaces. They that put their trust in the Lord shall be even as the Mount Zion which may not be removed but standeth fast forever.

The hills stand round about Jerusalem even so standeth the Lord round about His people from this time forth for evermore.

8 P. M.

Magnificat, } Nunc Dimittis, } Turle in D.

Anthem, Sweet Lord and Saviour, Williams.

Sweet Lord and Saviour, come!
Without Thee life nor light
Hath this poor world.
Our hearts are dark and cold,
We dwell in gloom profound
When Thou'rt afar.

Come quickly, dearest guest;
Thy people call for Thee
They watch for Thee:
Lord Jesus enter in,
O Blessed, enter in
That we be blest.

March 22. Lent V (Passion Sunday).
11 A. M.

Introit.

Give sentence with me O Lord and defend my cause against the ungodly people: O deliver me from the deceitful and wicked man for Thou art the God of my strength.

O send out Thy light and Thy truth that they may lead me and bring me unto Thy holy hill and to Thy dwelling.

Glory be to the Father, ete.

Communion Service,
Missa de Angelis and Dykes in F.

Gradual.

Deliver me O Lord from mine enemies: teach me to do the thing that pleaseth Thee.

It is the Lord that delivereth me from my cruel enemies and setteth me up above mine adversaries. Thou shalt rid me from the wicked man.

Many a time have they fought against me from my youth up. Yea many a time have they vexed me from my youth up, but they have not prevailed against me.

The plowers plowed upon my back and made long furrows: but the righteous Lord hath hewn the snares of the ungodly in pieces.

8 P. M.

Magnificat, } Nunc Dimittis, } Turle in D.

Anthem, God so loved the world,
Stainer.

And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up. God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whoso believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life.

For God sent not His Son into the world to condemn the world: but that the world through Him might be saved.

March 30. Lent VI (Palm Sunday).
11 A. M.

Introit.

Be not Thou far from me O Lord, Thou art my succor, haste Thee to help me: Save me from the lion's mouth. Thou hast heard me also from among the horns of the unicorns. My God, my God look upon me; why hast Thou forsaken me and art so far from my health and from the words of my complaint.

Glory be to the Father, etc.

Communion Service
Missa de Angelis and Dykes in F.

Gradual.

Thou hast holden me by my right hand: Thou shalt guide me with Thy counsel and after that receive me with glory. Truly God is loving unto Israel even unto such as are of a clean heart, nevertheless my feet were almost gone, my treading had well nigh slipt and why, I was grieved at the wicked: I do also see the ungodly in such prosperity.

My God, my God look upon me: why hast Thou forsaken me and art so far from my health and from the words of my complaint. O my God, I cry in the daytime but Thou hearest me not and in the night season also I take no rest. And Thou continuest Holy O Thou worship of Israel.

Our fathers hoped in Thee; They trusted in Thee and Thou didst deliver them. They called upon Thee and were holpen; they put their trust in Thee and were not confounded.

Some Plain Helps Towards Making a Good and Useful Lent.

(1) Keep your times of devotion with special strictness: morning and evening prayers at home, with daily reading of the Bible. (2) Give a short time each day, if only ten minutes, to self-examination, with a meditation on our Blessed Lord's Life and Passion. (3) Make a fixed rule, of more frequent attendance on the services of the Church, especially at Holy Communion. Resolve to be present twice or thrice each week, at least, if not daily. Increase the number of your actual Communions at the Altar, with careful preparations. Determine to profit more, in a personal way, by the Sermons and Instructions. (4) Deny yourself all luxuries, such as smoking, attendance at theatres, popular amusements, parties, etc. Save the expense of these and devote to charity. (5) Give up meats, at least on Wednesdays and Fridays. Use actual fastings, and self-denial, as a help to more earnest prayer, and as a means of expelling the devil, and his many works, from the heart. (6) Overcome your sloth by early rising, thereby insuring also more time for secret prayer and devotion. (7) Fight wisely—by choosing some one special sin to be overcome, and some one special grace to be won.—S. Mark's Parish Paper.

The Trial of the Bishop of Lincoln.

In a Parish like S. Clement's, which has itself known so much persecution, both public and private, for the use of that ritual which is part of the true inheritance of every part of the Catholic Church, the case of the Bishop of Lincoln has peculiar interest.

The persecutions of Dr. Pusey, Canon Carter, Mr. Green, Mr. Enright, Mr. Edwards, Mr. Bell Cox, the Bishop of London, and now, last but not least, the good Bishop of Lincoln, form darker pages in the history of the Anglican Communion, more to the discredit of the days in which we live than the trials conducted by the Inquisition in days when persecution was the fashion, and all men thought that persecution was the legitimate way to put down the opinions held by a minority or an individual.

It does not matter that the persecutions of to-day are not accompanied by bloodshed. There are good and pious sensitive men who feel slander and misrepresentation more keenly than the stabs which could be inflicted on the body, and the special blessing which belongs to the persecuted of the present day seems to be that which the Bishop of Lincoln once pointed out to the writer, in his quieter days, "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you and say all manner of evil against you falsely for My Name's sake."

Every pious churchman will echo the indignation expressed by Dr. Phillimore at the beginning of his defence of the action of the Bishop in using lights, and the proper sacerdotal position, &c., at the service of the Holy Communion.

It is an outrageous thing that men should be hired by a persecuting society and should be able to cause trouble to a Bishop renowned everywhere for his sanctity, goodness and liberality.

The Archbishop of Canterbury felt himself bound to hear the case, and it is hoped that its settlement may set at rest any difficulties and put an end to the plots of the Protestant Persecution Association.

Sir W. Phillimore, on behalf of the Bishop of Lincoln, said he proposed, as part of his argument, to read the following short paper, in which the Bishop of Lincoln submitted his own views upon the subject.

"May it please your Grace,
"My Lord Archbishop,

"Your Grace's clemency in allowing me to make an informal statement of my position at an earlier stage of this trial emboldens me to hope that the same indulgence may be granted to me at the present time, when we are entering upon what may be called the merits of the case.

"I am anxious to state very briefly the principles which have guided my actions and my words in the matter of ceremonial.

"I.—In regard to the externals of worship generally, I believe, with Bishop Butler, 'that the form of religion may indeed be where there is little of the thing itself, but the thing itself cannot be preserved amongst mankind without the form.'—Durham Charge (1751), p. 314; Works, vol. ii., Oxford, 1850.

"II.—As to the ceremonial prescribed or allowed within the Church of England, I believe that the rubric immediately preceding the Order for Morning Prayer is to be taken in its literal and grammatical sense; and that so taken, it establishes the lawfulness of 'such ornaments of the Church and of the ministers thereof,' as were in use under the first Prayer Book of King Edward the Sixth.

"III.—I believe, further, that this rubric, with other rubrical directions of the Book of Common Prayer, ought to be interpreted—

"(a) On the principle of the continuity of the Church of England—that is to say, that omission is not, as such, equivalent to prohibition, but that intrinsic reasonableness and ancient usage are, on points not expressly determined, the recognized guides of the English Church.

"(b) On the principle of equity. Absolute uniformity of practice in all places and under all circumstances being unattainable and undesirable, this fact ought to be taken into account in the administration of the law. Otherwise, endless prosecutions for defect as well as for excess must follow.

"(c) The liberty thus conceded upon the ground of equity must be regulated by two principles—

"(1) Loyalty to the doctrine of the Church of England, and

"(2) The edification of her children.

"In judging of the latter I should attach great weight to national temperament and to local customs.

As to the former, I hold that, as it is laid down for preachers by the Convocation of 1571, 'that they shall never teach anything from the pulpit to be religiously held and believed by the people but what is agreeable to the doctrine of the Old and New Testament, and collected out of that very doctrine by the Catholic fathers and ancient Bishops,' so we must repudiate any ceremonial observances which express beliefs or tend to bring back usages which the Church of England, following the authority of the primitive Church, rejected at the time of the Reformation.

"The same principle would apply with still greater force to doctrines or forms of devotion which have grown up or been authorized in the Roman Communion since that period, which bear the stamp of novelty upon their face. E. LINCOLN."

Sir W. Phillimore, continuing, said it was difficult to restrain within measured language the feelings which he imagined all those who had been present must feel at the way in which this case against this man had been launched before his Grace. To think that, in order to make a case against—he would say no more—a hard-working, self-denying Bishop, people should be sent beforehand from London, hired and paid by a society to make a report and give evidence, and to think that upon that report and evidence a Bishop should be drawn from his natural work and duty, the ministering of his diocese, and the saving of souls, to answer charges which the able counsel for the promoters was obliged to say involved no questions of doctrine at all, he confessed was enough to make it very difficult to restrain one's language in addressing the Court, but he would endeavor so to do and to confine himself to a strict legal argument. In the beginning he submitted that there were certain legal principles in this case which might be matters of discussion by trained legal minds, and with regard to which they should not ask his Grace to do otherwise than accept decisions already given. He admitted that to use any other rite or ceremony than that which the Prayer Book allowed was illegal, but it was obvious to any practical man that the Prayer Book was not explicit or exhaustive, and that the book contemplated a body of knowledge or practice with which the minister was to start, and, moreover, referred to outside authority as the guide in several cases. In other words, to use the language of a very distinguished writer now dead, the question how the Church's Prayer Book was to be carried on could only be answered if they went to previous and outside knowledge. This was true not only of the present Prayer Book of 1662, but of the earlier ones, and as they were all enforced by the same or similar Acts of Uniformity, each Act forbidding any other rite or ceremony in substantially the same words, the rule which would determine what constituted variations from one book would apply to determine what constituted variations from another. There was a distinct Parliamentary statement that there was no variety of doctrine between the first and second Prayer Book. They would find that where the Second Prayer Book, which might be called one end of the scale, as the First Prayer Book might be called perhaps the other end, with regard to the amount more or less of ceremonial to be used in the Church of England, was enacted. Parliament expressed its entire approval of the First Prayer Book, and he submitted not only that it was not a right argument to say that any doctrine contained or implied in the First Prayer Book was unlawful, but it would be wrong to say that any doctrine which was connoted by the First Prayer Book was not tenable in in the Church of England. The Act of Uniformity of Elizabeth represented the reaction from the one end of the scale which had been reached by the Second Prayer Book. It kept the Second Prayer Book; it struck out one passage, which might be offensive, it put in that very important addition with regard to the words of administration to the communicants, and while keeping the Second Prayer Book, quoad prayers, and so forth, it brought back the ornaments of the Church and of the minister of the First Prayer Book, and further enabled the Queen, with the consent of the Metropolitan or of the Commissioners, not to reduce the standard, but to order additional ceremonies and rites for edification. When they had settled that an ornament was in use by authority of Parliament in the second year of King Edward VI. then the process was perfectly simple; that ornament must be used, and, as he apprehended, must be used in the same way in the present Prayer Book. It was very doubtful whether the Second Prayer Book of Edward VI. ever came into general use, except in London and in places near the Court and the centre of life. It was only in force for a year and some months. At the end of that time Edward VI. was dead, and Queen Mary had ascended the throne. When they were looking at the state of things which Elizabeth and her Parliament had to deal with, they must remember that Mary had been on the throne some five or six years, had re-introduced ritual of before the time of Edward VI.—possibly had made it a great deal more Roman than ever it was before—and that the standard of the Second Prayer Book of Edward VI. had never really got hold of the people. Therefore, it was only natural that the Parliament of Elizabeth should have a compromise which would keep the last Prayer Book with one or two material alterations, but would keep these ornaments to which the people practically had been continually accustomed because they had been in use in all Edward VI.'s reign, except a year and a half, and they had been in use during the whole of the reign of Mary. When they came to the specific charges they should submit that, where they got an ornament which his Grace should be of opinion came within the meaning of that rubric as an ornament of the Church in use by the authority of Parliament in the second year of Edward VI., under the present rubric there was a direction to use it now. It was idle to say that there was no mention either of that ornament or of the use of that ornament in the present Prayer Book. The answer was, it was contained in the general direction at the head of the Prayer Book that they were to use that ornament. Approaching the question how was his Grace to arrive at the ornaments which were in use by authority of Parliament in the second year of Edward VI, the learned counsel said first and clearly they were any ornament which was mentioned in the First Prayer Book of Edward VI, or in use by authority of Parliament in that year; and, secondly, any ornament which, though not mentioned by name, was required by a rubric directing a particular practice, directing, in fact, its use, though not by name. For instance, if a sermon was required to be preached, and the word pulpit were not mentioned in the First Prayer Book, pulpit was yet to be implied as an ornament, and it was from that that the sermon was to be preached. But, thirdly, it was not only ornaments mentioned by name, or the use of them mentioned by name, in the First Prayer Book; but, as was stated in Westerton v. Liddell, ornaments used under the First Prayer Book were ornaments within the meaning of that section and might still be used. That opened a considerably larger field. When the Act of Parliament said, "You shall use no other rite or ceremony but what is prescribed in the Book of Common Prayer," that did not prevent them from using an ornament if the use of that ornament was consistent with, and still less if it was subsidiary to, the rubric. That was just as true of the First Prayer Book as the last, because the language was the same. In inquiring what were the ornaments of the Church referred to in the rubric they had first to enumerate ornaments prescribed, secondly, ornaments impliedly prescribed by their proper use being ordered in the room, and, thirdly, ornaments used under that Prayer Book. That, of course, was a question of historical inquiry, but though he admitted that, so far he was untrammelled by any adverse decisions. He next wished to suggest that the words "authority of Parliament" were larger than the First Prayer Book. The rubric was peculiar. It did not say such ornaments as were used under the First Prayer Book or commanded by it; it said, "were in the Church of England by authority of Parliament." He submitted that if an ornament was directed by a canon before the time of the 25th of Henry VIII, that ornament was in use by Parliamentary authority in the second year of Edward VI, unless its use was inconsistent with the Prayer Book of Edward VI, or any other Act of Parliament passed at that or previous times. So far as this case involved the question of user of ornaments, his Grace must apply the knowledge which he and his assessors possessed to investigate the historical question, what ornaments were in use consistently with that Prayer Book in the second year of Edward VI? If his Grace found, say, for example, lights were in use at the time as an ornament, they were to be retained now, and not merely retained, but used, but, of course, not converted into something else quite different. Having gone so far as that, they should ask his Grace to use historical knowledge, and they should fearlessly, so far as regarded that question, ask his Grace to believe that the constant threshing out of these cases had brought to bear further facts which made it necessary from time to time to revise and reconsider conclusions, which had been arrived at. As an example of how things had progressed, he mentioned that in 1847 flowers were, to use the Bishop of Exeter's language, an innovation, and that prelate jumped to the conclusion that they were illegal. In 1890 practically nobody questioned that they were legal. They were not inconsistent with the rubrics; they were not such things as they would expect to find mentioned in the rubrics; but the silence of the rubrics upon them was of no importance. That was one example of how these matters required restating and reconsidering from time to time, and above all from the way in which prejudice against change, prejudice against anything to which the people had not been accustomed, had operated with regard to all these ecclesiastical cases.

A Happy Easter

"Sorrowful, yet always rejoicing," would seem to be a good motto for those who have much experience in trouble, but are trying to keep the Christian Festivals with joy in their Lord, in sympathy with Him who after all His suffering entered into the joy of the risen life in which it was impossible for Him to suffer more. "Christ being dead, dieth no more, death hath no more dominion over Him, for in that He died, He died unto sin once, but in that He liveth, He liveth unto God." Thank God for this, that He can suffer no more. His members on the earth may have suffering for a short time, but joy cometh in the morning. Whatever may be in store for us as a people, let our loyalty to our Lord and sympathy with Him in His past suffering and His present joy keep us from despondency. Never did the world look so dark to the disciples as on that Holy Sabbath when their hopes were buried with Christ in the grave, but this was but the prelude to the first Easter morning when He appeared to the weeping Magdalene. All sorrow should be the preparation for the great Easter when God shall wipe away all tears from the eyes of His penitents.

Parish Notes.

Since the last issue of the Magazine the Vestry have received the resignation of F. Convers as Rector, in which he states that his health is such that he feels that it is his duty to sever his connection with the Parish. The Vestry declined to accept his resignation and cabled him urging him to withdraw it, and also sent him a letter signed by each member of the Vestry personally urging him in the most forcible terms to reconsider his decision.

The congregation have also sent a letter to F. Benson, stating their desire for F. Convers' return.

The Iron Cross and some of the Guilds have sent letters to the same effect.

Thus the matter remains at present and the Vestry and congregation await replies to these various letters, hoping that they will prove effectual, and that the resignation of the Rector will be withdrawn.

On Easter Monday from 12 to 2 P. M. will be held the annual election of the Vestry. The Vestry will hold their first meeting Easter Tuesday.

The May number of the Magazine will contain the annual reports of the Parish and its work for the past year, which may delay its issue one week.

The reports of Father Convers' health are very distressing. He is at present in the Hospital at Eastbourne, on the South Coast of England, a magnificent hospital under the care of the Sisters of All Saints, and it is hoped that the sea air and careful attendance may restore him.

There will be a sale of needlework by the Guild of S. Mary on Thursday, 10 A. M. to 9 P. M., April 17th in the school room, on behalf of the Mission Work of the parish. This includes the charitable work in the homes of the poor; clothing, shoe clubs, sick relief, etc., and the mothers of the Guild of S. Mary deserve every encouragement for their industry in getting up this sale. We hope that everybody will come.

The boys of the Iron Cross will have an Athletic Exhibition at the Iron Cross Rooms, Twenty-first and Market, on Wednesday, April 9th, 8 P. M. The rooms have been kept open all winter, and hundreds of boys have enjoyed both the gymnasium and the parlor. A committee of ladies have most kindly been present in the parlor every evening. Anyone who cares for the happiness of the boys would be intensely pleased if they could look in some evening and see their enjoyment. Funds are needed for the rooms. Who will help. Come to the Exhibition on Wednesday, April 9th, and the good work done for the boys will speak for itself. Tickets 15 cents.

During the last month a series of Retreats have been held in the Parish on the Sundays of Lent. The Guild of the Holy Cross, S. Martha, S. Vincent, S. Mary, and the Iron Cross have each had their day of Devotion.

Father Field conducted two Retreats at Washington, one at S. James Church and the other at the House of Mercy, and another at Mt. Calvary, Baltimore.

The Retreat of the Guild of the Iron Cross was attended by forty-five men, and at the close several members received the Iron Cross kneeling before the altar.

The Bishop Confirmed 49 persons. Three others will be presented at S. Mark's on Easter Eve, making 52 in all. The number of adults (35) was remarkable, and the greater number of these were converts from the Sects. Twelve of them were Baptized a week before Confirmation.

78 Sir Lowry Road, Capetown,
January 29th, 1890.

My Dear Father.—You will have been wondering that you have not heard from me by the last three mails, but I have been away for my holiday for nearly three weeks, and there seemed to be nothing very special to write about, and so the three mail days slipped by.

I began my holiday on the Feast of the Epiphany, and went to Bishop's Court for a week. I had a very pleasant time there. In town, the south-easters were raging uninterruptedly, but at Bishop's Court no south-easter intrudes. Mrs. Jones was away part of the week. The surroundings of Bishop's Court are just at present in the perfection of beauty. After spending a week with the Bishop, I went on the 13th to stay at Rondebosch Rectory with Canon Ogilvie. Both he and Mrs. Ogilvie were most kind, and I enjoyed very much the five days which I spent with them. The weather at Rondebosch was delicious; the south-easter makes itself felt there as a gentle, cool breeze. It seems curious that the same wind can be so pleasant in one place, and so overpoweringly disagreeable five miles off. On Saturday, the 18th, I went with Fr. Osborne and his cousin, Mr. Boodle, to Cape Point, which forms the entremity of the Peninsula of the Cape of Good Hope. We went by train to Kalk Bay, then by mail cart to Simon's Town, and then we walked about seventeen miles to Cape Point, where we found Canon Peters and Young awaiting us, they having preceded us by two days. There is a light-house on the summit of Cape Point, and a short distance below the light-house there are two cottages for the light-house men and their families. We have provided ourselves with a Government order permitting us to stay there, and the chief light-house keeper gave up three rooms to us, while he and his family managed to live on pic-nic in holes and corners. I hardly know where. We stayed there four days, from Saturday, the 18th, to Wednesday, the 22d. It is a most beautiful place. The rock scenery is magnificent, and the various sea views are very fine, especially the view over False Bay, which looks like a great inland lake surrounded by mountains. The vegetation also is most varied and peculiar. Here also we played a good deal of chess, and Fr. Osborne soon established himself as a prime favorite with the children, who never tired of his stories. The time spent at Cape Point was very refreshing. One was away from the turmoil of the newspapers and the anxieties of work, and one was drinking in pure air and taking a good deal of healthy exercise. On Wednesday, the 22d, we walked back to Simon's town, and then drove on to Kalk Bay. The others went on to Capetown, but I stayed two nights at Kalk Bay, sleeping at the boarding-house, and having my meals with the Suttons. Sutton is a Cambridge man, a Priest, who has a flourishing proprietary school in Capetown, and who is also brother-in-law of President Reitz, the President of the Orange Free State. On Friday I came on to Rondebosch, where I attended a "Quiet Day," conducted by Mr. Dermer, of SS. Philip and James, Oxford. In the evening, Canon Ogilvie held a Parochial Missionary Meeting, at which the Bishop and I spoke. I slept that night at the Ogilvie's, and on Saturday got back safely to Sir Lowry Road, and so my holiday ended.

I forgot to mention that while I was staying with the Ogilvies, I went over to Leliebloem to receive the new Governor, Sir Henry Loch, and Lady Loch, who came with the Bishop and Mrs. Jones to inspect it. Earlier in the afternoon, the gubernatorial party had been inspecting St. George's Home. They seemed to approve of the arrangements at Leliebloem, and to admire the situation very much. It was unfortunate that Sister Mary Pauline had sailed for England two days before. On other grounds, however, I am very glad that she was able to get away. She has been over-strained for the last twelve months, and on the top of it all came the Camp's Bay accident.

On my return home I found that Sister Francis Teresa was very ill. Miss Waterston, the lady doctor, who has been attending her, pronounced the illness to be diphtheria, but other authorities declare that it is a diptheritic sore throat, and not diphtheria proper. I saw her on Sunday and her throat was then much better, and she has been improving ever since. She is to make her Communion this morning. At first, her life was nearly despaired of, but now there is every hope of her full recovery.

The Bishop of Lincoln's Trial.

In the last number the first portion of the defence of the good Bishop of Lincoln was given, and now the continuation of Sir Walter Phillimore's argument gives us the authority for the elevation of the Blessed Sacrament, the sign of the cross, bowing at the name of Jesus, turning to the east at the Creed and the ablutions or careful cleansing of the sacred vessels at the conclusion of the service.

Sir Walter Phillimore continuing his argument said: With regard to the charge that the Bishop raised his right hand looking towards the congregation, &c., he submitted that whatever else was possible it was impossible to hold that the rubrics of the Prayer Book were so exhaustive that gestures were prescribed, and that no gestures except those prescribed were to be allowed. The rubric at the end of the First Prayer Book of Edward VI. said:—"As touching kneeling, crossing, holding up of hands, knocking upon the breast, and other gestures which may be used or left as every man's devotion serveth without blame." It was said that that rubric was not repeated. but he would be a bold man who said that that principle was repealed. He submitted that the principle was laid down once and for all by the Church of England in that rubric. To give a parallel example, the elevation of the Blessed Sacrament was forbidden in the First Prayer Book; the forbidding of it never recurred in any subsequent Prayer Book; so in the same way this common-sense rule, that these matters should not be imposed or prohibited, but left "as every man's devotion serveth without blame," was, he submitted, enacted once and for all. There was no doubt that the making of the sign of the cross had been highly controversial matter, but the Church of England insisted upon it in baptism and by the 30th Canon, which enacted it at that time, and defended it upon the ground that it was consistent with the usuages of other Churches, and was not in itself a superstitious sign. It was not re-enacted, neither was the prohibition as to elevation re-enacted. In itself the sign of the cross was not superstitious. It was attacked as superstitious in baptism by a certain set of reformers, but the Church of England considered it necessary to insist upon it with regard to baptism, leaving it optional, as he submitted, with regard to everything else. It was impossible to say that what was required in baptism and what was required by the 30th Canon could be in itself superstitous or offensive. It could only be got at by an extension of the principle of omission being prohibition to its utmost extreme. As the highest authorative exposition of the fact that gestures were free, he referred to Canon 18 of 1603. If gestures were matters with regard to which omission was prohibition at the time that this canon was passed, bowing at the name of the Saviour would have been unlawful, because there was no rubric directing it. But the canon ordered it, and spoke of it also as having been accustomed. The canon, as he said, removed it from the category of those things which might be done or left undone. A canon could not repeal a statute, and, therefore, if there was a statute forbidding a particular gesture or forbidding all gestures except those mentioned, this canon would have flown in the face of the statute; and so far from its being right or competent to order that they should bow at the name of the Saviour the canon would have ordered people to do that which the statute forbade.

A canon, therefore, not being capable of repealing a statute, it being, on the other hand, impossible to conceive that the Convocation of the province of Canterbury, acting under license from the Crown, and having their canons ratified by the Crown with the advice of its law advisers, would have enacted an illegal canon, they got the very highest authority for that being the construction of the Acts of Uniformity, that they were not restrictive as to gestures, so that it lay within the scope of outside regulation, or—in the absence of regulation—of every man's discretion. He gave but one other example from common usage. Where in the rubric would they find a direction to turn to the east at the Creed? But if the action of the hands in making the sign of the cross, a sign in itself unobjectionable, was unlawful simply on the ground that it was not mentioned, so must the action of the whole body in turning to the east at the Creed be unlawful, because it was not mentioned, and therefore the canon of construction which would condemn the cross simply on the ground that omission was prohibition, would condemn also turning to the east at the Creed. In the rubric of Edward VI., kneeling, crossing, holding up of hands, knocking upon the breast, and other gestures were left to a man's discretion. Said his learned friends, that rubric was gone, and therefore it was no longer left to their discretion; they could not make the sign of the cross; then they could not hold up their hands. Holding up of hands, knocking upon the breast, and crossing were all put in the same category. A Bishop or a priest turning, as he was bound to do, to the people when giving the blessing at the end of the service, if he happened to hold up his hand or two fingers would come under his learned friend's ban. They were all gestures; they were all left to every man's discretion in the First Prayer Book, but his learned friends said they were removed from every man's discretion by the omission of that rubric subsequently.

Coming to the last charge with regard to what happened at the end of the Communion service, what his learned friend Sir Horace Davey had called the ablutions, he submitted that he might almost invite an expression of opinion from his Grace and his Assessors as to whether there was anything that he ought to answer in respect to that charge. The evidence was simply this—that to the eye of the witness the Bishop consumed, first of all, the apparent fragments of bread and drank of the cup, that then water was poured in the way described, and that the Bishop finally finished by drinking off the contents of the cup. There was no evidence or suggestion that any prayers were made, that any hymns were sung. Most of the congregation were present, some had begun to leave, and he submitted to his Grace whether it was really necessary that he should say anything about this matter, which was a very reasonable and proper compliance with the direction of the rubric as to the consumption of the remaining elements, a scrupulous and punctilious compliance. He had now concluded his argument. He had endeavored to show that they could not so read the Prayer Book as to conclude that every gesture, usage, accessory, and decoration, not therein mentioned was to be taken as forbidden; that in the language of a writer in the Quarterly Review in 1851, if it was not by the help of custom supplying the omissions, explaining the obscurities, and reconciling the inconsistencies of the rubrics, it would be absolutely impossible to take one single step towards the performance of Divine service. The rubrics were lights placed here and there for their guidance, but they were not, as they believed they should be able to prove, the active principle that enabled them to walk. That article, said to have been written by Mr. Croker against the Tractarians as an attack upon the rubrical revival or restoration from the slumber of the 18th century, had been in its turn treated as Popish. So even when they were in compliance with the plain terms of a rubric, the Church Militant prayer, surplice in pulpit, or "preaching in whites," as Mr. Croker called it, surpliced choirs, weekday services, saints'-day services, early communions, frequent Communions, credence table, colored altar-cloths, reredoses, all alike had been treated for a time as rags of Popery; all alike were now admitted to the light of popular favor, though the skirts of the cloud of disapproval possibly still hung on the last. A quarter of a century hence those of them who might be alive would smile at that trial; but there was one man for whom it was no light matter; that was the Bishop of Lincoln, distracted from his work of winning and saving souls to answer the charge of being a criminal because he had taken his share in the revival of primitive, Christian, and simple reverential usages which happened to be displeasing to a rich and powerful association.

Lecture on America.

From the "Cape Times," of January 30th

One of the most interesting and instructive lectures it has been our lot to hear was given last evening by Fr. Osborne in the Exhibition Building. The lecturer, who is a stranger to this country, is possessed of a rare charm of manner, and a power of illumining the subject under discourse with occasional flashes of humor, delivered in an easy conversational style, which would gain for him the sympathies of an audience far colder and more critical than that which attended last evening. The subject was America, or a flying visit through the land of big sights and big cities. The lecture, which never flagged in interest during the two hours of its delivery, was illustrated with an admirable selection of limelight views. The opening scene depicted the American bison standing like Rob Roy on his native heath, an animal which, as the lecturer assured his hearers, was one of the attractions that drew sightseers to the western world, but which is now extinct. This, like a vague suspicion of cannibalism, and a dimly-formed idea that Americans are all more or less remote scions of the red man, which pervade the mind of the untraveled Englishman, might be classed as one of the delusions regarding that land of real and more enduring wonders. Some views of Boston followed, one of which was taken from a balloon, and which gave a better idea than any description could have conveyed of the utterly incomprehensible but marvelously picturesque circuitousness of the streets, and which gave credence to the old story about a stranger from some more regularly-planned city asking the same policeman thrice unwittingly for guidance to a certain quarter. At Boston, as most readers of Wendell Holmes know, and as Fr. Osborne carefully informed his audience, some of the nicest and most refined folks in America were to be met with. There were others again quite the reverse, such for instance as the women's rights' woman, who never ceases to regret that she was not a man, but who, like many other disagreeables, may be avoided by "dodging round a corner." Three very clear and life-like views were shown of Chicago, and the lecturer took occasion to point out the bad pre-eminence, not unjustly gained by this monster growth of new-world civilization, in facilities afforded for severing the marriage tie. It could be said that there was no law of divorce in the United States, owing to the fact that there was so many, and this evil was seriously engaging the consideration of the best minds of America. Among the other views we may mention as especially worthy of praise, some beautiful photographs of Niagara, taken from every possible standpoint. In conclusion it may be stated that there was a large and fashionable audience, including the Bishop of Capetown, and the leading clergy of the English Church in this town, as also the officers of the U. S. S. Pensacola, under whose patronage the entertainment was given, and who were kind enough to allow their band to play a delightful selection of music under the able conductorship of Bandmaster G. Sarasta. The proceeds of the lecture will go towards diminishing the debt on the Sheppard Memorial Schools.

Letter from Father Convers.

The Vestry have received the following letter:

THE MISSION HOUSE, OXFORD,
April 11th, 1890.

GENTLEMEN:—I must acknowledge and thank you for your long and most kind letter asking me to reconsider and withdraw my resignation. In accordance with your request I do so. I have delayed an immediate reply because of my own condition of health, and because some delay was required to settle future plans. Unfortunately I am now as much incapacitated for work as I have been for (nearly) six months; and the withdrawal of my resignation does not mean my immediate return to work—I wish it did. I must have, if I am ever to work again, some further leave of absence. So far as I can judge, I am no better, rather weaker in fact, than when I left Philadelphia. I hope and trust that some months of absolute rest, will enable me to work. Pardon all this personal detail, but I do not see how I can avoid it.

For the meantime, F. Benson himself proposes to go out to Philadelphia, to help at S. Clement's, that you may be sure the Society will do all in its power to aid the Parish, and I hope before the parishioners return in the Autumn to be in a condition to be once more with you.

Forgive me for not entering into further details now, but I am really too weak to do more than this.

May God bless the Parish and each and all its members.

Faithfully yours,

D. CONVERS.

To the Vestry of S. Clement's Church.

Parish Notes.

Father Benson, the Superior of the Society of S. John the Evangelist is expected at the beginning of this month.

Father Convers is better, and has been recommended to take a long sea-voyage for the restoration of his health.

Father Maturin is in England, and will take charge of much of Father Benson's work while in this country. He is now quite restored to health.

Father Osborne is at present in Africa, and expects to remain there for the present. He is now quite well again.

Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, May 12th, 13th and 14th, are Rogation Days, and as in former years continual intercessions will be offered during those three days. The night hours are all taken, and persons who take the times in the day are requested if possible to spend the time of their intercessions in church.

The papers of intercession are ready.

The Church will be open from 6 A. M. to 9 P. M.

Celebrations of the Holy Eucharist, 7, 9.30 o'clock. Followed by special intercessions.

Morning Prayer, . at 8.15 o'clock.
Litany and Meditation, 12 "
Evening Prayer, . 5 "
Night Serv. & Sermon, 8 "

Subjects for the special intercessions may be placed in the box at the Vestry door.

Monday, May 15th, is Ascension Day, and there will be celebrations at 6, 7 and 9.30.

As usual the Choir will have an excursion on this day. F. Field will be glad to receive contributions for this purpose.

Anthem, Worthy is the Lamb, Handel.

Worthy is the Lamb that was slain, and has redeemed us to God by His blood, to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing.

Blessing and honor, glory and power be unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever.

May 11. Rogation Sunday. Easter V.

Introit.

With a voice of singing declare ye, tell this and let it be heard. Alleluia: utter it even to the end of the earth; the Lord hath redeemed His people.

O be joyful in God all ye lands: sing praises unto the honor of His Name, make His praise to be glorious.

Glory be, etc.

Communion Service, Tours in C.

Gradual.

Hitherto have ye asked nothing in my name: ask and ye shall receive. Alleluia.

Christ is risen, He dieth no more: death hath no more dominion over Him. Alleluia.

8 P. M.

Magnificat, Nunc Dimittis, } . Stainer in A.

Anthem, Send out Thy light. Gounod.

Send out Thy light and Thy truth, let them lead me, and let them bring me to The holy hill. O God when shall I come before thine altar. On the harp we will praise Thee, O Lord our God. Why O soul art thou sorrowful and why cast down within me? Trust in the loving kindness of the Lord, and my tongue shall yet praise Him, Who hath pleaded my cause. Thou wilt save Thine anointed, Thou wilt hear us from heaven. Though in chariots some put their faith, our trust is in Thee. They are brought down and fallen, but the Lord is our helper, we shall not be afraid.

May 15. Ascension Day.

7 A. M.

Introit.

Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven.

O clap your hands together, all ye people: O sing unto God with the voice of melody.

Glory be, etc.

Communion Service, Eyre in Eb.

May 18. Ascension I.

11 A. M.

Introit.

Hearken unto my voice, O Lord, when I cry unto Thee: My heart hath talked of Thee, seek ye my face. Thy face Lord will I seek: O hide not Thou Thy face from me. Alleluia.

The Lord is my light and my salvation: whom then shall I fear?

Glory be, etc.

The Accounting Warden calls attention to the following: The Mortgages created ($6500) have been applied to paying off old loans ($1500) and increasing the cash in the Sinking Fund (see report), so as to be prepared for any emergency

Every current expense account shows a decrease as compared with last year.

The Parish enters the new year with no current indebtedness whatever, and no unpaid bills on hand, or to be presented for work ordered. It has also paid in this year its taxes, Convention dues, and Convocation assessment in advance—something it has never been able to accomplish in previous years.

TRUSTEES OF THE SINKING FUND.

PHILADELPHIA, April 28th, 1890.

To the Rector and Vestry of St. Clement's Church:

GENTLEMEN:—The Trustees of the Church Debt Sinking Fund, submit a third statement of the new fund began in December, 1887, for the purpose of paying off the debt of the Parish.

They report that since January 1st, 1888, they have paid off mortgages to the amount of twelve thousand dollars. In this amount was included five thousand dollars, which was understood at the time, to be a gift to the fund, but has since been stated to have been intended as a loan.

If this be refunded, it will exhaust the balance, now reported in the hands of the Treasurer.

We regret to say that during the past year some subscriptions have been withdrawn from this fund, and some subscribers are delinquent.

The great success already attained, however, in lightening the burden of our debt will stimulate all; we hope to renewed efforts which will be continued until the last dollar of the indebtedness is discharged.

The account of the Treasurer is appended to this report.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

The Sunday School has been working this year on a somewhat new system. Instead of going into church every Sunday afternoon, the children now remain the whole time of the session in the school room, and are catechised there, only going into church on the great Festivals. By this means a much longer time has been gained for their instruction, and we hope that some really solid work has been done. At the same time this arrangement has been found to conduce in a marked degree to a better state of order and discipline.

One point of complaint, however, we must make. Why do not the parents of our scholars send their children in greater numbers to the 9 o'clock celebration of the Holy Euchrist? That service is arranged especially for the children, and there ought to be many more present than is now the case. We do hope that there will be a distinct improvement in this point. The clergy cannot bring it about without the co-operation of the parents. Let them see, then, that they are more careful in fulfilling this duty by getting their children ready in time and sending them to this morning service. Some of them surely might come themselves with their children.

There are now on the Sunday School staff 5 officers and 25 teachers, of whom 8 are men. This is, we believe, a larger number of male teachers than the school has ever had before. The number of scholars on the roll is 155 in the main school, and 115 in the Infant school, making a total of 270. But the average attendance is not yet what it ought to be with these numbers.

An attempt has been made to improve the difficult accoustic properties of the school room by stretching wires across from side to side where the roof begins to spring from the walls. We think this has done some good, but it would be a great help in this matter if we could have matting, or still better Indian rubber cloth, laid down under the seats so as to stop the almost unavoidable noise from the children's feet. For this, however, we must wait till we are richer.

Another thing much needed for the school is a cabinet organ. The piano at present in use is not nearly powerful enough to lead and control the singing.

The financial year of the Sunday School begins and ends with Advent, and the printing of the balance sheet will therefore be deferred till then.

THE GUILD OF S. VINCENT FOR ACOLYTES,

Consists of the Acolytes who serve at the general services in church and chapel, and is composed of 24 members (22 active and 2 associates). The Guild meets on the first Wednesday in each month. During the year the members reported 1688 times for service in church and chapel.

THE JUNIOR S. VINCENT'S GUILD.

This consists of the Junior Acolytes who serve at the 9 A. M. Celebration and assist in the Children's Services It meets on the third Wednesday in each month, at 7.30.

OUR COUNTRY HOME.

"Our Country Home" will shortly re-open, for another season, in a house at Fallsington, Bucks County. Again placed at the disposal of the Sisters by Miss Williamson.

During the last season, the number received at the Home exceeded that of any previous year showing the growth of the work.

The children were kept at the Home as long as the Sisters or the physician thought desirable; some, most of the summer. In this way many little ones regained health and strength, when, if they had been sent home at the end of a definite time, all the good of their visit would have been undone. And the bright faces and ringing laughter of the children were, in themselves, better thanks than even the unfailing words of earnest gratitude.

Our dear women throughout the year often tell us that their improved health, or that of their children, so different from what it used to be, is owing to their summer visit to us. May we not rejoice that it is so? Many have suffered this year in a measure they have not before, and we must do all we can to strengthen them to meet what may be before them next winter. We, therefore, ask you, our friends, to help even more liberally than in previous years.

Our warmest thanks are due to all those who have shown by their energetic efforts in our behalf, their genuine interest in our work, and especially to two ladies, who helped us very considerably in the furnishing of our new house.

Any member of the Committee will receive donations or subscriptions. Subscribers of five dollars are entitled to a card of admission, enabling them to send one person (from any church or parish) to the country for so long a time as seems necessary or desirable to those in charge of the Home.

As heretofore, the Home will receive persons from all parishes applying without expense during their stay when a subscriber's card has been obtained.

THE GUILD OF THE HOLY CROSS.

The Guild of the Holy Cross is formed solely for the deepening of the Spiritual life of its members by means of a rule of life. Its members receive no benefits, nor do they have any social entertainments. It now numbers 48 members. The offerings of the Guild, after all Guild expenses have been paid, have hitherto been given for the support of "Our Country Home." Last year the Guild gave to this work $120, and an individual member secured $200 for the furniture of the house, which was much needed.

S. MARY'S GUILD FOR WOMEN.

This aims to raise the tone of spiritual life, and to help the Chaplain in spiritual and corporal works of mercy. It has now 80 members, 4 probationers and 31 associates. During the past year 4 have been expelled and 1 removed, while on the other hand 14 have been admitted, 2 have been re-instated, 1 has returned. Thus the Guild has gained 12.

At the beginning of the winter some rooms were rented at 2051 Cherry St., for the work of the Guild, here some of the members have met on Monday evenings and worked for a fair, to be held after Easter. They accomplished a great deal of beautiful work, and had at the same time many pleasant evenings, and they are most grateful to the kind friends who have helped to pay the rent of the rooms and of the piano.

The retreat on the Thursday in Passion Week was well attended. It was conducted by the Rev. H. Thompson, of Woodbury, N. J.

During the winter there has been given away through the Guild 35 half tons of coal, besides 70 tons distributed to members of the Coal Club at $3.50 per ton.

The Guild also supports and cares for the Mothers' Meeting, and the Shoe Club. In connection with the Mothers' Meeting there is a Clothing Club, into which the members pay a small sum each week, to which is added 20 per cent. when they get out what they have saved, in clothing, of whatever kind they wish, in May, October and December. This winter a much larger amount of clothing has been given away than usual, owing to the sickness which has prevailed, and we are most grateful to those who have enabled us to do so by sending us donations of new and half-worn clothing.

THE ALTAR GUILD.

The linen department has this year sent away complete sets of altar linen to the following places:—To Sibley, Iowa; St. Charles, Missouri; Sommerville, Tenn.; Hemando, Miss.; Gatesville, North Carolina; Union City, Penn'a; Greene Co., Md.

Several single pieces have been sent to various places. It has also prepared work, and provided patterns to many who have applied, donated three priest's surplices, two full sets of linen vestments and several barettas, and also sent off a large parcel of various pieces to Siberia, through Miss Scott. It has sent wafer breads to thirty different Parishes. It has also provided four priest's albs, barettas, etc., for S. Clement's. All our work this year has been donated; though, on two occasions, we have received small offertories as thanksgivings for our work. From subscribers and other sources we have received $76.68, and have a balance in hand of $22 88.

We publish the following letter to show that the work is thoroughly appreciated—it is only one out of many of the same kind.

SIBLEY, OSCEOLA CO., IOWA, December 30th, 1889.

TO THE SISTERS OF ALL SAINT'S HOME.

DEAR FRIENDS:—Please accept my hearty thanks for your very nice and practical gift, the "altar linen," for use in my mission field, and the kind words which accompanied the same. Such things greatly encourage a lonely and struggling missionary in an immense field—a field nearly as large as the Diocese of Rhode Island. I fear but few people at the East realize the privations of the missionaries and people of the Northwest. Did they fully understand our hindrances, they would sympathize with us more than they now do. We have a prejudiced intelligence and strong denominational influence and opposition to contend with. These people have numbers and money, and the sympathy of the community, while the church missionary must build up sympathy and numbers, almost without money. In my own town, the Methodist, Congregationalist and Baptist preachers are well cared for by their missionary societies, while your humble servant can scarcely get funds to barely exist on, and yet travels about five thousand miles annually to preach the gospel to perishing souls I do not write thus to complain of my lot; no! but to tell you of the hardships we missionaries of the true Church have to endure, and how we appreciate and are encouraged by such gifts and kind words as those you have bestowed upon me at this holy season. Believing you would be interested in the character of our work out here, I have ventured to write as above.

Again thanking you for your kindness, and assuring you that we shall always remember you and appreciate those nice cloths, as we celebrate the Holy Eucharist, and wishing you every Christian blessing.

I am, dear friend, your servant in Christ. PHILIP MCKIM.

The silk department closes this year with a surplus in the treasury of over one hundred dollars.

We have donated absolutely, 9 stoles, 2 maniples, 1 silk super frontal.

Orders filled, 1 dossal, 2 burses, 1 dossal band, 2 veils, 1 frontal, 17 stoles, 3 super frontals, 4 book marks, 3 pulpit falls, 2 lectern falls.

THE GUILD OF THE HOLY CHILD.

This Guild is intended for children during the year before and the year after Confirmation. The children are about 12 years of age and receive the Holy Communion at all great Festivals in the first year after Confirmation.

The members attend the monthly meeting and the weekly practice of singing, for Children's Eucharist. Some children are admitted as Honorary members. The members pay 5 cents monthly, and the Honorary members pay 50 cents at Easter and Christmas. There are 23 members and seven Honorary members. Two ladies assist the Sisters in the work and recreation of this Guild.

THE GUILD OF THE IRON CROSS.

The Guild has continued its work during the past year in promoting Temperance, Reverence and Chastity. Meetings have been held each week. Some of the members accompanied the Chaplain to Johnstown after the Flood, May 31st, 1889, and Dr. Garrett, the President of the Guild in the United States, remained some months among the sufferers.

The sum of forty dollars was contributed from the funds of the Guild to the relief of the Johnstown sufferers.

The Guild entertained the members of the Convention which met on January 28th. After a solemn Celebration of the Holy Eucharist in S. Clement's Church at 9.30, the Convention sat till 11 P. M., revising the general Constitution and choosing the officers of the Guild.

The Guild has resolved to rent four pews in the Church for the benefit of the members and strangers.

It has also resolved to take charge of the Churchyard and see that it is properly cultivated and cared for.

The Guild has also helped in paying the rent of the rooms at Twenty-first and Market.

An Ecclesiastical Art Exhibition was held in the Iron Cross Rooms during three days of November, under the auspices of the Guild. The Exhibition was a great success and was very instructive. A large number of persons learned for the first time the meaning of the beautiful Vestments of the Church.

The expenses of the Exhibition were so large that no profit was made, but a fair was held two weeks later at which $203.00 were taken.

It has become necessary to establish a central office of the Guild, and for this purpose a house has been secured on Cherry street, just opposite the Church From this office the publications have been circulated through the country.

The following publications have been issued this year:

2,000 Churchman's Kalendars (illustrated).
50,000 Iron Cross Papers.
4,000 Leaflets.
2,000 Books of Prayer.
1,000 After the Flood.
1,000 Constitutions.

THE IRON CROSS PARLOR, BOY'S GYMNASIUM AND SATURDAY HALF HOLIDAY FUND.

The Iron Cross Rooms at the Southeast Corner of Twenty-first and Market streets were opened by Bishop Whitaker on January 1st of last year, and they have been a great source of good and enjoyment to the large number of boys who have met there.

The rooms are open on four evenings in the week for boys (Monday, Wednesday, Friday and Saturday). On Tuesdays the Guild of the Iron Cross have held their business meetings, on Sunday a Bible Class has been held at 4 P. M. There have been seven Athletic Exhibitions in the Gymnasium when prizes have been awarded to the boys most proficient in the exercises. A number of ladies have kindly attended regularly in the parlor and have helped in teaching the use of the games, etc., provided for the boys.

The rooms are very popular with the boys and give them a good place of amusement for their evenings. It is hoped that they will be maintained.

The summer excursions last year were greatly interfered with by the Johnstown calamity, as the Chaplain of the Guild was obliged to be in Johnstown during the first month, and Dr. Garrett was there during all the summer, and the subscriptions for the Holiday Fund were less numerous. In spite, however, of all hindrances thirteen excursions were given and several members of the Guild of the Iron Cross accompanied the boys on Saturday afternoons to the country and on the river. The excursions will be continued on a larger scale this year.

HOSPITAL.

Since the date of the last report the Hospital building has been completed and handed over by the builders to the Board of Managers.

Lady Kortright, widow of the late Sir Charles Keith Kortright, contributed $3000, and later $12,860 more, for the erection of this Hospital, which has been completed with an additional $1000 from other sources. Upwards of $600 has already been spent in furniture, and $1000 more has been promised to complete the furnishing.

It now remains for sufficient funds to be provided for the opening and maintenance of the Hospital. In the latter part of the year a mortgage of $8000 was placed upon the building, and it is desirable that this should be paid off at as early a date as possible.

The building has cost, in round numbers, with the alterations and additions $31,000, all paid for except the $8000 mortgage above mentioned.

DISPENSARY.

During almost the whole time that the workmen were employed in the erection of the Hospital, the first floor of the building was used by the Dispensary.

In addition to the clinics already established at the time of the last report, one additional clinic for children was opened on the 3d of February of this year.

On the whole the work of the Hospital has shown a satisfactory increase, as is apparent by the following table, viz.:

It is the intention of the Board of Managers to open the Hospital in June, and as there are not sufficient funds for its maintenance throughout the year, it is to be hoped that all who feel an interest in the work will spare no effort to secure contributions, which should be sent to the Treasurer.

Letter from Father Benson.

The Vestry have received the following letter from Fr. Benson:

S. CLEMENT'S, May 22, 1890.

DEAR SIR:—You will be glad to hear that I have received a short note from Father Convers. He was looking to go ashore for a few hours at Lisbon, although, as he said, feeling very weak. The voyage must have done him good, for he mentions that only about half a dozen of the passengers presented themselves at dinner on the Saturday previous, and he was among the favored few.

When he left Cowley he was so sick that he could not undertake the journey to Dartmouth alone. Father Congreve went along with him to see him safely on board.

By this time he has probably been spending a week at Cape Town. As that climate has done so much good to both F. Maturin and F. Osborne, we must hope it will show its value as a sanatarium in F. Convers' case also. I do not suppose he will stay there long. He would be anxious to continue at sea. Neither can I say in which direction he will move when he leaves Africa. It is quite likely that he may take ship for San Francisco, and come home from the west coast. At any rate, I feel little doubt that the congregation may rely upon his appearance amongst them in October. He was very anxious to be here so as to greet them when they all reassemble from their summer quarters.

I will do my best to obtain some one in England to come out and strengthen the staff here, so that the work may be carried on efficiently next winter, without so much strain as there has been upon our small community in the Clergy House.

It is a great comfort and joy to me to find how fully this work has been appreciated. Such responsive affection as has been shown to them is one of the best sources of strength on which we can rely, in subordination to God's grace. That His Blessing may rest on all the work of this place, and on all the workers, both priests and people, will be my constant prayer.

I am, very truly,
R. M. BENSON,
Sup. S. S. J. E.

To the Chairman of the Vestry, S. Clement's, Phila.

Parish Notes.

During the last month the Parish has been visited by Father Benson, and everyone is grateful to him for coming among us. He will return to England on June 25th.

The latest news from F. Convers is encouraging, but we should continue to offer our prayers for his restoration to health. The parishioners are asked to remember him especially every Sunday at the Holy Eucharist.

On Ascension Day, after the solemn Celebration, the choir had an excursion to Wilmington, and spent the day on the banks of the Brandywine and in the woods.

The week-day services will continue as usual during the summer, except that after Trinity Sunday the daily evensong will be at eight instead of five o'clock.

The Sunday services will remain as usual.

There will be no Meditation on Fridays.

The Seaside Home will be opened at Point Pleasant as soon as possible. Generous subscriptions are asked, that many children may be sent. The Home will be under the care of the Sisters of All Saints. Subscriptions may be sent to them or to the clergy. There are few in our Parish who could not give a dollar towards this useful charity.

The Saturday Half-Holidays for the boys begin in June. The benefit of these excursions to the boys can hardly be estimated, and a plan has now been adopted by which every subscriber of 25 cents secures a holiday excursion for a boy.

The Iron Cross men will have an excursion for their families and friends, on Thursday, June 17th (S. Alban's Day), starting at 8.30 A. M., to Augustine Pier. Tickets, 50 cents, may be obtained from any of the members, or at the Iron Cross Office.

The Guild of S. Barnabas will meet on S Barnabas Day, Wednesday, June 11th, at 8 P. M. After the services in the chapel, a paper will be read and a discussion will follow on "The First Hospitals."

Father Hall's new book on Self-Discipline—of the body, tongue, mind, heart and will—can be had at the Iron Cross Office, 2021 Cherry street. The moderate price of 25 cents for these valuable lectures brings them within easy reach of all. In these days, when good spiritual books are so much needed, it should be a matter of conscience with spiritual writers to make their publications as reasonable in price as possible.

In the Report of the Treasurer of the Sinking Fund, in the May number, there were two typographical errors. The receipts in May, 1889, should read, $308.50, instead of $308.25, and the total Dr. on page 8 should read $5377.03, instead of $5178.78.

A Pleasant Summer.

A pleasant summer, a good time at the seashore or in the mountains away from all thought of our church or city, this is what many are looking forward to, and expect when the time comes to go out of town. Every year the country season begins more early and continues into the winter months, and if it were not for the children's education and the advantages of society in the city many would remain in their country houses the greater part of the year. But what is the result of country houses to the people who live in them. If they are not very careful it makes them selfish. Every enjoyment of country air or seabreeze should make us wish to give others an opportunity of having them, and so our fresh air and holiday fund should be well supported. Are you going away this summer, then give a tithe of your holiday money for some poor woman or child, for some infirm man or pale-faced boy. Your cheeks will glow with better health if your blood is warmed with real charity, and if you have a double home you have a double duty to the Church and need to cultivate a double love of neighbors.

Service List for June.

June 1. Trinity.

11 A. M.

Introit.

Blessed be the Holy Trinity and the undivided Unity. We will give thanks to Him, for He hath shewn His mercy upon us.

Let us bless the Father and the Son: with the Holy Ghost.

Glory be to the Father, etc.

Communion Service,
Gounod's "S. Cecilia."

8 P. M.

Magnificat, } . Garrett in D.
Nunc Dimittis, }

Anthem, O clap your hands. Stainer.

O clap your hands all ye people, shout unto God with the voice of triumph. For the Lord our God is terrible. He is the great King over all the earth. They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength, they shall mount up with wings as eagles, they shall run and not be weary, they shall walk and not faint. Trust ye in the Lord, for ever, for in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength. Amen.

June 8. Trinity I.

11 A. M.

Introit.

O Lord, my trust is in Thy mercy, and my heart is joyful in Thy salvation.

I will sing of the Lord, because He hath dealt so lovingly with me.

How long wilt Thou forget me O Lord, for ever: how long wilt Thou hide Thy face from me.

Glory be to the Father, etc.

Communion Service, Stainer in A.

Gradual.

I said, Lord be merciful unto me: heal my soul, for I have sinned against Thee. Blessed is he that considereth the poor and needy. The Lord shall deliver him in the time of trouble.

Ponder my words, O Lord, consider my meditation. Alleluia.

Benedictus and Agnes Dei,
Agutter in Bb.

8 P. M.

Magnificat, } . Garrett in D.

Anthem, Whoso dwelleth. Martin.

Whoso dwelleth under the defence of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty. I will say unto the Lord, Thou art my hope and my stronghold, my God, in Him will I trust.

He shall defend thee under His wings and thou shalt be safe under His feathers. His faithfulness and truth shall be thy shield and buckler.

Lord Jesus, King of Paradise,
O keep me in Thy love,
And guide me to that happy land
Of perfect rest above,
Where loyal hearts and true
Stand ever in the light,
All rapture through and through
In God's most holy sight.

June 15. Trinity II.

11 A. M.

Introit.

The Lord was my upholder. He brought me forth also into a place of liberty. He hath delivered me, even because he had a favor unto me. I will love Thee, O Lord my strength. The Lord is my strong rock, my fortress and my Saviour.

Glory be to the Father, etc.

Communion Service, Stainer in A.

Gradual.

When I was in trouble, I called upon the Lord and He heard me.

Deliver my soul, O Lord, from lying lips and from a deceitful tongue.

God is a righteous Judge, strong and patient, and God is provoked every day.

Benedictus and Agnus Dei,
Agutter in Bb.

8 P. M.

Magnificat, } . Garrett in D.
Nunc Dimittis, }

Anthem, Lead kindly light, Stainer.
Hymn 266.

June 23. Trinity III.

11 A. M.

Introit.

Turn Thee unto me, and have mercy upon me, O Lord, for I am desolate and in misery: Look upon my adversity and misery, and forgive me all my sins, O my Lord. Unto Thee, O Lord, will I lift up my soul: my God, I have put my trust in Thee, O let me not be confounded.

Glory be to the Father, etc.

Communion Service Dykes in F.

Gradual.

O cast thy burden upon the Lord and He shall nourish thee. When I cried unto the Lord, He heard my voice: and delivered me from the battle that was against me. I will love Thee, O Lord my strength: the Lord is my stony rock, my defence and my Saviour.

Benedictus and Agnus Dei, Marbecke.

8 P. M.

Magnificat, } Turle in G.
Nunc Dimittis, }

Anthem, No shadows yonder, Gaul.

No shadows yonder; all light and song.
Each day I wonder, and say: How long
Shall time me sunder from that dear throng.

No weeping yonder, all fled away,
While here I wander each weary day
And sigh as I ponder my long, long stay.

No partings yonder; time and space never
Again shall sunder, hearts cannot sever
Dearer and fonder hands clasp for ever.

None wanting yonder; bought by the Lamb,
All gathered under the evergreen palm,
Loud as night's thunder ascends the glad psalm.

June 30. Trinity IV (S Peter).

11 A. M.

Introit.

The Lord is my light and my salvation, whom then shall I fear? The Lord is the strength of my life, of whom then shall I be afraid? When the wicked, even mine enemies and my foes, came upon me, they stumbled and fell. Though a host of men were laid against me, yet shall not my heart be afraid.

Glory be to the Father, etc.

Communion Service, Dykes in F.

Gradual.

Be merciful, O Lord, unto my sins. Wherefore do the heathen say, Where is now their God? Help us, O God of our salvation, and for the honor of Thy Name, deliver us, O God.

The king shall rejoice in Thy strength, O Lord: exceeding glad shall he be of Thy salvation. Alleluia.

Benedictus and Agnus Dei, Marbecke.

8 P. M.

Magnificat, } . Turle in D.
Nunc Dimittis, }

Anthem, How lovely are the messengers, Mendelssohn.

How lovely are the messengers that preach us the gospel of peace. To all the nations is gone forth the sound of their words, throughout all the lands their glad tidings.

On the Way to China.

It is hoped that the new Bishop of the Corea will visit S. Clement's on his way to his diocese. One doctor, who is a member of the Iron Cross, will join him as he passes through this country, and we hope that he may find more clergy and laymen who will be willing to assist him. At a recent meeting in London of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, Bishop Corfe said that it was just six months ago that he was consecrated to this work. On the first of November, immediately after his consecration in Westminster Abbey, he issued an appeal to the clergy of England asking for volunteers to come and share the grant of £650 which the venerable society had placed at his disposal. His staff of clergy, however, was still very far from complete, and he was thinking whether he should remain any longer in England in the expectation that the appeal might yet be answered, or whether it was his duty to go out at once to the Corea, and begin his work almost single-handed. He did not say it at all in a spirit of complaint or of regret, but rather in a spirit of joy and delight, that this bishopric was entirely without endowment; and it was because of that fact that he had ventured to put forth such an appeal to the clergy. But he had not yet found any parish priest, willing to give up his living, or any clergyman of independent means willing to give up his present easy circumstances, and join him in this terrible work in the Corea. He had only found one young deacon ready to go out with him. As for the nature of the work, he might mention that he had set himself to the task of learning two difficult languages, one of which was Chinese, and merchants and diplomatists would tell you that no man ought to go out to China with any hope of making any progress in the language after the age of forty. He was considerably over that age. Thus it would be seen that the difficulties that lay before him were very great. He had determined from the very first to make medical work a prominent feature of the mission scheme, and he thanked God that he had found a doctor who for two years would be willing to give himself up to work in connection with the mission.

The Catholic Church.

[From Bishop Paret's Charge, 1890.]

All I ask of you, dear brethren, is that you should yourselves be awake to the importance of the truths which are endangered, and speak out lovingly but clearly as you can find the way. And just at this time, it seems to me there is one thing about which not only all Churchmen, but we, here in Maryland especially, ought to abandon the silence of false charity or false modesty, and be very bold for the truth. The one claim which the Roman Church pushes now above all others, is that it only has right to be owned as a Catholic Church. True, in their official documents and canons and decrees they do not call it "the Catholic Church," but, as we have done in this address, "the Roman Church," yet in sermons, in popular books and appeals, they do so speak of themselves as "the Catholics," and "the Catholic Church," as to assume that to them alone the word belongs. And this perversion of words and of truth, by persistence in assumption, has won its way to very wide but very wrong and harmful popular acquiescence. It has come to be thought that because they claim the word, they must have it; that because they call themselves by that name, all must so call them, or else violate courtesy. And that whether they be or be not, in strict historic truth and rightfulness of ecclesiastical reality, the Catholic Church, it is hardly worth while to contend about a word. But it is not a mere word. It expresses, as they use it, a gigantic claim to exclusive right and authority. We utterly refuse that claim. It denies our right in Christ's Holy Church. We cannot surrender that heritage. It misrepresents the truths of history. The use is false as a point of etymology. It is false historically, and false theologically. And since at every service, we in solemn utterance of the Creed, claim our place in the Holy Catholic Church, surely as a mere matter of courtesy and charity, our right in the word and in all it means must demand to be respected also. In the formal documents of the Council of Trent, "The Holy Roman Church" is the title by which the Church there assembled named itself. When it appointed a cardinal in this country, it did not name him a cardinal of the Catholic Church, but of the "Holy Roman Church." They themselves thus take the national title and so claim their place as a national Church. Grant the name they claim. Grant their nationality. As a national Church they claim that they are in living historical union with the Church as founded by Christ and His Apostles, and thus Catholic as being part of the Holy Catholic Church. Grant that also, and leave it to Christ's own loving judgment to decide how far fatal to such claim may be their corruption of the true primitive Creed.

It is not that they claim to be Catholic. So do we. So, rightfully, can every national branch of the Church which through the faith and word of God, and a right worship, and right Sacraments, and rightful Episcopate, has kept the reality of the continuous life of the Church. This it is to be Catholic; a yet living part of that one great Church of Christ.

But when the word is so applied to others as to imply that it belongs to them exclusively, and that we have no true part in it, it is falsely used. And we must not suffer false charity, or bold assumption, or popular perversion of language, to make us falter in the assertion of such rights. I do not ask that the name of this national Church should be changed. Let it stand as it is. It has become historical. But let us be bold and clear in asserting for this Church, however named, her grand historic position, and her lawful and full Catholicity. Let the plain truths of history be known. Let them be made familiar to our people by frequent teaching. Apostolic hands brought a branch of the Church to Britain in the very earliest days, in the first century; not from Rome, or through it, but from the Churches of the East, which were older than Rome itself. Five hundred years that national Church remained independent of Rome and ignorant of it and of its ways, and using the freedom of its Eastern Liturgy. Subjected for awhile to the false but enforced claim of Papal supremacy, it still maintained, even if unsuccessfully, almost continual protest. In God's good time it cast off the bondage. The national Church, at first free, did not lose its identity when it passed under bondage and did not lose that identity when it passed out of bondage again into freedom. It remained the national Church of England through all, with all the rights (however others might have encroached upon them), and with the full independence which the first usages of the Church and the decrees of the first councils had declared. Through all, it kept the full integrity of true faith, ministry, worship and sacraments. And God's Providence ordered it that the national Church should occupy this land while it was yet part of the British dominions; and that by its services, its missions, its duly organized parishes, its ministry of English ordination, and the oversight of English Bishops, it should have foothold and recognized authority, from the first and before all others.

With the first colony in Virginia, about A. D. 1607, and almost at the same time in Maine, the work began; and the historic position of the Church in Maryland well deserves our study, and to be made familiar to our people. Lord Baltimore, under whom its settlement began, and to whom as proprietor it had been granted, was a member of the Roman Church; but the charter under which he acted distinctly recognized and established the Church of England. It gave him "power to build and found churches, chapels and oratories, in convenient and fit places within the premises, and to cause them to be dedicated and consecrated according to the ecclesiastical laws of our realm of England." And his own acts, while liberty was proclaimed for all, recognized the Church of England as the rightful authority. The land was very soon parcelled out into parishes with metes and bounds, by civil enactment; and they were parishes of the Church of England. Churches and chapels were ordered and built in them at the public cost; and they were churches and chapels of the Church of England. Glebes were assigned for the support of the clergy. No others ever claimed them. They became the property of the Church of England. Those parishes with metes and bounds still exist and bear their witness. And a civil law of Maryland, enacted after the War of Independence, asserts the continuity of the Church; declaring that the "Vestry of each Parish shall have an estate in fee simple in all churches and chapels, and in all glebe and other lands, and shall have a good title and estate in all other property heretofore belonging to the Church of England, or which shall hereafter belong to the said Church, now called the Protestant Episcopal Church." The national Church was in possession. The Roman Church in its centennial of 1889, dates its formal beginning in America, in its own language, "the setting up of the Hierarchy," from 1789, the establishment of its Diocese of Baltimore; and the beginning of its Episcopate, with its first bishop, in 1790. But our Diocese of Maryland had already been organized six years earlier; it held its centennial in 1883, and there were already, before the first Roman bishop, three bishops—Seabury, White, and Provoost—of valid orders, in actual occupation of the land. These are the plain historical facts. I raise here no question of purity of doctrine or worship. Such questions are indeed most important, but I do not want to let them draw us from the point distinctly before us. It is just here a question of history and truth. There was a universal or Catholic Church established by our blessed Lord and His Apostles, and He gave it distinctly a mission to the nations. He fixed its four great safeguards for continuous unity of life and propagation, in the Apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and the breaking of the bread, and the prayers; in other words, in faith, ministry, sacraments and worship. He ordered its life and work in national divisions and with national independence. He propagated it from nation to nation, but in the ordering of His Providence, always kept the distinctness of national life. This grand Church Catholic still exists. Man's infirmities and sins have in many things disfigured it. Its form, its laws, its life, its exact limitations and relation of parts may not be so clearly seen as they were at first.

But wherever in historic line of propagation, there are found the four marks, the essentials of Apostolic doctrine, Apostolic order and ministry, and the sacraments and worship, not fatally perverted, there is a branch of the Catholic Church. And what I ask you to see clearly, and to hold unflinchingly and to proclaim boldly, is that, by every claim and proof of essential purity and historic life, the Church as we know it and love it, is the true representative of the Catholic Church in this nation.—The Church Eclectic.

Letter from Father Convers.

Father Convers writes:

CAPE TOWN, S. AFRICA,
May 19th.

I am here at the ends of the earth, and landed last Sunday from the Garth Castle. By a curious coincidence, when Fr. Puller first came out, he landed on the day after Ascension Day, and Fr. Maturin landed on the same day in 1889, and I did the same in 1890. Of the five Fathers who have been in Cape Town three arrived on the same day of the Christian year. I find Fr. Osborne looking well and working much as usual. The picture of Table Mountain from the sea, is one, I am sure, you have seen. When I looked at the reality first "the table cloth" was over it—i. e. a south-west wind by some blunder had been left behind by last summer and was blowing here by mistake, and, as a consequence, a white cloud was forming itself on the mount, pouring over the cliffs like a great waterfall to be dissipated in the warmer air below like an unfinished phantom cascade in wonderland. I drove to the Home and found Fr. Osborne who walked me down past the old Dutch-built fort, past the parade with its avenue of trees bent most uniformly in one direction, giving proof of the force, direction and uniformity of the wind here, then up Adderly street to the Cathedral, to see his Lordship, the most Reverend the Metropolitan of Cape Town. The Cathedral is ugly, very. The Bishop is tall, and has a pleasant face and manner.

Then we went past the Parliament House, into the Public Library and Museum, peeped into the Botanical Gardens where some gentleman carved in stone turned his back on us and gazed intently into vacancy, and walked home. I took my first lesson in trying to learn how to distinguish the various tribes, races and religions who make up this cosmopolitan town. Fr. Osborne told me that the fez means that the wearer is a Mohammedan, and the gay colors of the handkerchief over the head and rather startling shades of the dresses worn by some women means that those are Malays though not always in blood, but in religion and social cliques. I have not yet learned enough to tell a Kaffir from an Africander, but perhaps I may yet master even that. On Saturday I ventured myself among the shipping people, and expect to sail via the Clan Boat to India, when it comes. It coasts along the shore of S. Africa, and goes to Mauritius I believe; being a slow tub, I shall be at sea five or six weeks. If any one writes to me, my address will be care Rev. Fr. Page, the Clergy House, St. Peter's Church, Mazagon, Bombay, India. I am better in health. I can now go to the table, and see and smell all sorts of food without being upset thereby. I have less pain after eating, but I am weak and nervous. I am sure that Fr. Benson's visit must have brightened you all up in Philadelphia, and I hope to be all right and on the ground by the time Autumnal work begins. I shall get, I suppose, one mail here next week, and then no more letters until I arrive at Bombay. I feel hungry for news, but it does no good. Remember me to everybody you see who can recall my name. It is bright and sunshiny to-day, but both Saturday and yesterday were rainy and unpleasant.

With a prayer to God for you all.
Faithfully yours,
D. CONVERS.

Parish Notes.

The great event of the last month has been the opening of the Hospital of S. Clement's Church. This took place on June 16th, and a full account is given below. The first patient was admitted on the next day.

The Guild of S. Barnabas had its festival meeting on S. Barnabas Day. An address was given by the Rev. Geo. T. Griffith. On the same day, the Hospital was opened at S. Timothy's, Roxborough, of which one of the members of the Guild has taken charge.

Fr. Benson gave a Retreat to Sisters in Boston, and another in Long Island.

The Mothers' will have their excursion to Augustine Pier on Wednesday, July 16th. Mothers' will take their own baskets.

The Boys of the Iron Cross will go on an excursion to Augustine Pier on Saturday, July 26th, starting at 8.30 and returning to the city at 8 P. M. Boys must provide their own baskets on this trip.

The Seaside Home of S. Clement's Church is open at Point Pleasant, and in full work. The Home is larger this year, and, as this is a most useful charity to many mothers and children, Father Field will be glad to receive any subscriptions and donations.

The members of the Iron Cross can obtain tickets for themselves and their friends at the Iron Cross Office, 2021 Cherry street, to go to Augustine Pier and back on the Richard Stockton for 25 cents (instead of 50 cents), and 15 cents, instead of 25 cents, for children, on any day when the boat is not chartered. This arrangement can only be made with F. Field through members of the Iron Cross.

Any family would find this a most beneficial and economical way of getting a good day of fresh air.

The Home at Point Pleasant is crowded, and many persons are anxious to go, for whom there is no room. The need of fresh air seems to increase every year, and the number of weak and suffering people who wish to put themselves under the wing of the Sisters, to be taken care of during the summer, makes us feel very strongly the need of a good Convalescent Home.

The Opening of S. Clement's Hospital.

At about four o'clock in the afternoon of Monday, June 16th, the Bishop of the Diocese together with a number of the city Rectors and the S. Clement's Clergy, assembled for the Benediction of the Hospital. They vested at the Church, and, preceded by the Crucifer and Acolytes, walked in procession to the Hospital.

After the wards and attendants' apartments had been solemnly set apart by the Bishop for the work of Christian charity for which they had been respectively arranged, the procession returned to the lower ward where the Bishop delivered a most impressive address. In referring to the special plan and aim of the Hospital, he said, "It is distinctly Christian, eminently practical and thoroughly economical. It is opened for those who cannot find entrance into other hospitals, although there is no reflection on other similar institutions. The kindness which comes for those whom others pass by is the most beautiful of all. The Hospital opens its doors for those in need, and the only test for entrance is that such need really exists."

At the request of the Bishop, Father Field followed with a "few words." He referred in an affectionate manner to the enforced absence of Father Convers. He then drew attention in his inimitable manner to a happy mistake of the printer in placing the word "addresses" instead of add*ress* upon the Service Paper. This, he said, permitted him to call upon the Reverend Father Benson "to make a few remarks." The Superior General responded to the request in a most edifying manner. He referred in a very touching way to the sickness of the Rector of the Parish, and told us that he was in receipt of a letter written by Father Convers, from Lisbon, which gave a somewhat encouraging account of his condition. Father Benson then spoke of a Hospital at Cowley, England, intended for "incurables," from which many of those who entered as incurables" left the institution in perfectly good health. This he attributed partly to the recently developed art of scientific nursing and partly, also, to the wholesome atmosphere which pervades such a Christian institution. The addresses and remarks being concluded, the Bishop pronounced the Blessing over a kneeling assemblage which quite filled the women's ward.

The Clergy returned to the Church in procession, and after unvesting, many hearty congratulations brought to its close a red-letter day in the history of the Parish.

The New Chapel of St. Michael and All Angels' House.

Erected by Mrs. Bernard Henry as a memorial to her adopted daughter.

The beautiful little memorial chapel of the St. Michael and All Angels' House for Colored Cripples, Forty-third and Wallace streets, West Philadelphia, was consecrated June 18th by Bishop Whitaker. The altar was decorated with bouquets of flowers, and the red light from the lamp suspended from the clere story, shining on the font filled with white flowers, presented a beautiful effect. About 11 o'clock a procession, consisting of the inmates of the home, preceded by a banner, marched into the chapel singing "The Church's One Foundation." Bishop Whitaker, Bishop Coleman, of Delaware. and the clergy, with the crucifer at their head, marched up the aisle to the altar, repeating alternately the 24th Psalm. The request for consecration, signed by the trustees, was read by Mr. W. M. Camac, and the sentence of consecration by the Rev. Isaac L Nicholson, D. D., President of the corporation and Chaplain of the House. After the hymn, "Nearer, my God, to Thee," morning prayer was read by the Revs. Henry L. Phillips, Rector of the Church of the Crucifixion, and J. P. Williams, Rector of St. Thomas' Church. The Epistoler was the Bishop of Delaware, and the Gospeler was the Bishop of Pennsylvania.

The sermon was preached by the Rev. Alexander Crummell, D. D., Rector of St. Luke's Church, Washington, D. C., from the texts to be found in the second verse of the first chapter of Isaiah, and the twenty-third verse of the fourth chapter of the Gospel according to St. Matthew. He began by referring to the universality of human suffering. Disease everywhere produces sorrow, but into this region of woe and suffering our Lord appeared as the Prince of Light. Even leprosy, the king consort of death, yielded at His touch. Our Lord was the great physician of bodies as well as souls. He took our human nature on Him for the purpose of healing men. It is Jesus who opens wide and deep the channels of Christian philanthropy. Dr. Crummell returned thanks on behalf of his race, and blessed God for what had been done for the colored people.

The Rev. Dr. Nicholson then made a few remarks, and said that St. Michael's House had now thirty-one inmates. Mission work was being begun for the colored people of West Philadelphia. The House will be four years old on St. Michael's Day, September 29th, and is under the charge of Sister Sarah, through whose efforts it was founded.

During the singing of the anthem, "Lift Up Your Heads, O Ye Gates," the alms were gathered, to be devoted to the payment of a mortgage debt of $5000 on the home adjoining the chapel.

During the singing of the hymn, "Come, Holy Spirit, Heavenly Dove," the candidates for confirmation came forward and knelt at the altar. They were presented by the Rev. Dr. Nicholson to Bishop Whitaker, who administered to them the rite of confirmation. Those confirmed were eight in number, seven being from the Home and one from the neighborhood. The six girls were dressed in white, with white veils, and the boys had on surplices. The retrocessional hymn was "Onward, Christian Soldiers."

The other clergymen present were the Revs. Stewart Stone, S. F. Hotchkin, C. N. Field, H. F. Fuller and W. A. White.

The singing was by the choir of the Church of the Crucifixion, under the direction of Mr. C. Samuel Adger. W. M. Camac was the architect of the chapel.

Summer and Church.

Everyone knows the tendency of Church people to lose their religion, and, therefore, perhaps the idea that every American needs to be converted once in each year, is not altogether false. But a little careful forethought at the beginning of the hot weather will enable Church people to make such provision for their spiritual needs as to lessen their danger of dying from spiritual famine, or being infected by poisonous doctrine. There are some Churches, Episcopal Churches (for, of course, no Churchman of sound mind will go to any other), where the faith is not only imperfectly taught, but is denied, and it is not necessary, or wise, to listen to the Priests who teach in them. Church people may go to such Churches for the Sacraments, but if the preacher, as is too often the case, denies the Sacraments, teaches false doctrine, mutilates the Creeds, it is better to leave the Church, or to read the Bible privately. If any persons should by misfortune or misjudgment find themselves in a place where there is no real Church, but only a denominational meeting-house, even though called a Church, their best course is to say their Office of Morning or Evening Prayer from their Prayer Book at home. They may be called bigoted and uncharitable if they refuse to go with their friends, but politeness is not a reason for worship, and cannot be taken into account as an excuse for an act of schism. It is a grave question whether people should allow themselves to go to any place in summer where they are not able to enjoy the Sacraments, and if people would be more careful in this matter, and demand Church privileges, the supply would soon be given. A wealthy and speculative landowner is said to have expressed his wish that some High Church minister would come down to his place, for visitors would not stop there for want of a right sort of a Church. This is a growing feeling, and soon no summer watering place or mountain settlement will be complete without an Episcopal Church of the right kind, that is, a Church in which the pure, unadulterated Word of God, the wholesome doctrine of the Holy Catholic Church, is fully preached, and the Sacraments are duly administered, i. e., not only the two greater Sacraments, but all others, with all the solemnity, reverence and ritual which properly accompany them.

Ritual as a Legitimate Means of Expressing Spiritual Truth.

ADDRESS BY REV. H. C. SHUTTLEWORTH.

The Vicar of Great St. Mary's, the University Church of Cambridge, has adopted the plan of giving an occasional conference or lecture on Sunday evenings, after the usual service is over. The course which concluded last Sunday dealt with certain "points suggested by the case of the Bishop of Lincoln," and considerable interest has been aroused both in the town and among members of the University. The local branch of the Church Association has posted emissaries outside the church doors on each Sunday evening, armed with a perfect library of tracts and papers issued by that amiable Association. They appear, however, to provoke unto mirth rather than the rekindling of Protestant zeal.

The first lecture was by Dr. Cunningham, the vicar of St. Mary's, himself, upon the subject of "Civil Obedience." A very full syllabus was distributed in the church, both of this and the succeeding lectures; so that though each of them was somewhat academical in character, there was no difficulty in following the argument. The Rev. E. G. Wood, of St. Clement's, Cambridge, discoursed upon "Bishops, Archbishops, and Popes;" and he was followed by the Rev. C. C. Elcum, of St. Agnes', Liverpool, who dealt with the practical question of Sacerdotalism and Spiritual Religion." This lecture was of a more popular character, and the syllabus was thus more brief and less exhaustive. Last Sunday evening the Rev. H. C. Shuttleworth, rector of St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, lectured upon "Ritualism as a Legitimate Means of Expressing Spiritual Truth." A collect was said in the pulpit, followed by the Lord's Prayer before the lecture, and a hymn and the benediction at the close.

Mr. Shuttleworth began by defining Ritual as a method of teaching, so far as it was the outward expression of spiritual truth; and as a mode of prayer, regarded as the outward expression of spiritual feeling. As to the first point, the lecturer pointed out the increasing importance with which externals were regarded in all walks of life. The development of the infinite variety of plants and animals out of a few primitive types was held to be due mainly to the differences in environment. Similarly, the shades of national character, the differences between various races of men, were traced to the external conditions of their living: climate, temperature, natural scenery, and so on. The same law is recognized in common life. It is admitted to be desirable that the physical surroundings of human existence should be comfortable, and healthy, and beautiful, so far as possible. "Environment," we were told, "makes character;" and assuredly it has no small share in making it. The environment of the lives of the poor, it was felt, should be greatly improved, in order that the good seed of intellectual and spiritual culture might be fitted with a soil and climate in which it could grow.

Now, as this law of the great importance of externals was admitted in all other departments of life, why should it be excluded from religious worship? We were moving towards the discovery of the uniformity of law throughout life; and certainly, some very cogent cause would need to be shown in order to except religious worship from the operation of the law of environment.

It was endeavored to show cause by asserting the purely spiritual nature of the Christian religion; and by maintaining, that as God is a Spirit, so must He be worshipped in spirit and in truth.

But, said the lecturer, this fails to prove the case. God is a Spirit, indeed; but He has revealed Himself in outward form. The physical universe is itself a manifestation of the Unseen God. Man, made in the image of the Creator, is a manifestation of God, as perfectly revealed in Jesus Christ.

The lecturer then pointed out how in Holy Scripture this method of teaching spiritual truth through outward form is fully and constantly recognized; from the symbolism of Eden and the significance with which the rainbow was invested, to the Vision of St. John the Divine.

Our Lord adopted the same method. The Christian Church itself was a visible witness to spiritual truth. The Sacraments were outward, visible signs of inward spiritual grace. Our Lord's own teaching was largely symbolical in its words, full of gesture in action, and surrounded by events like the angelic vision at His Birth, the shining clouds of the Transfiguration, the darkness of the Passion, the Divine pageantry of the Resurrection and the Ascension.

The argument from experience was next developed, and it was shown that facts showed the necessity, the power, and the desirability of teaching unseen truth through outward means.

On the other side, to which the lecturer now turned, ritual was the homage of the Christian spirit, laid at the feet of the Most Holy.

As in the former case, it was pointed out that men inevitably expressed the inner feelings of common life in some external token. The closest affection between friends, or dearer than friends, was not incompatible with its embodiment in the little gifts and outward signs which were the poetry of ordinary feeling. Why was spiritual feeling to be excepted from the general rule? If it be answered because it is spiritual, the rejoinder is clear and cogent. So long as men have bodies, which are the outward expression of their souls, those bodies must have their place and part in worship. Else the worship would bear that sure mark of a false view of religious life; the assertion of one side of man's being without reference to the rest. It was no real objection to ritual, that it merely appeals to the senses. That might be admitted, with this qualification: That ritual appeals to the spirit, and is in its turn the appeal of the spirit, directed through the senses. Sense had its proper place in the development of man's full perfection.

The lecturer cited Browning and Ruskin in illustration of this point, and passed on to observe that in Holy Scripture symbolical acts of worship were frequently recorded; as in the case of David, when he poured out upon the dust of Adullam "before the Lord" the water for which his heroes had risked their lives. Still more striking was the significance of "that passionate act of Christian worship" on the part of her, who brake the box of precious ointment and poured it unstinting upon her Master's body. The false tongue uttered its sullen complaint, but the Master blessed that outward expression of a true heart's homage.

It was indeed a false antithesis which opposed spirit, of necessity, to form, soul to body. The outward should be the true expression of the inward; and it was only when it was not so that there was any antithesis at all.

Finally, the lecturer urged, Ritual should be beautiful, symbolical, and historical. It should be of a piece with the architecture of the church and the music of the sanctuary, and one and all should be beautiful, though it might be with the beauty of simplicity and restraint. It should be symbolical, pointing to the glorious truth of God's abiding Presence among men. It should be historical, marking the continuity and the unity of the Church Catholic, with such variation as national character might develop, and local necessities require.

The Mixed Chalice.

Sir:—There are three points in regards to the above which I have never seen brought before the Courts.

1. The 28th Article says, "Likewise the Cup of Blessing is a partaking of the Blood of Christ." This expression, "the Cup of Blessing," is borrowed from St. Paul and St. Paul borrows it from the paschal ritual, wherin the cup of wine mixed with water is called the "Cup of Blessing." (Edersheim, Life and Times of Jesus, vol. ii., p. 510.) In order to be the "Cup of Blessing, we have the most express Rabbinical restimony that the chalice must be mixed with water, and the Article declares that it is this, and nothing less than this, which forms the outward and visible sign of the Sacrament.

2. There were certain sects of the Manichaeans in the second and third centuries (Ebionites, Encratites, and Hydroparastatae) who, like some of our own teetotallers, regarded wine as "not being the good creature of God." Therefore, as our Lord beyond question consecrated the Eucharist in wine and water, they considered that they could sufficiently follow His example by using bread and water, and so they discarded wine altogether. How are these worse than those who not only themselves consecrate in wine alone, but who blasphemously deny that it is legal for others to consecrate in wine mixed with a little water, though it be "according to our Saviour, Jesus Christ's own holy Institution" (Prayer of Consecration.) I once asked Archbishop Tait this; and he said that, as a matter of common sense, the argument must cut both ways.

3. Lastly, why should we be deprived of the doctrine, which flows from the mixed chalice?

The water of baptism represents the "Blood of Christ, which alone cleanseth from all sin;" in the Eucharist this baptismal cleansing is still continued; in it, the "one baptism for the remission of sins" is again confirmed and renewed, viz., "This is my Blood—for the remission of sins." It is true that there is now added to it another and larger meaning, viz., the strengthening and comforting of the soul by the same precious Blood under the symbol of wine.

Nevertheless, water, the symbol of cleansing, is as necessary an adjunct in the Blessed Sacrament as wine, the symbol of strengthening. It shows that, like the water from the stricken rock, which followed the Israelites throughout their journey in the Wilderness, even so our baptism follows us through life, and is renewed in every worthy Eucharist, wherein all penitent believers partake through the spirit both of the Water and the Blood, which issued from the broken heart of Christ (1 John v: 8). St. Paul tells us (Heb. ix: 19) that the blood of calves and goats, shed for the sin offering, was always "mixed with water." The Rabbis tell us that hot water was thus always used to prevent the blood from congealing. I believe the same lesson is taught by the blood and water of the Law, and the wine and water of the Gospel; the lesson is that there is no health, no strength, no salvation, unless the poison of sin be first washed away, so that the life-blood of the Spirit of Christ may flow freely, strongly, healthily, through the spiritual system.

Letter from Father Convers.

It seems very strange to date my letters from Africa—not a very big word to write, but a very big land to see. Africa! which, no doubt, means to a lover of history, Egypt and the Ptolemies or Carthage and Hannibal; to a lover of adventure, the land of Livingstone and Stanley, where a little calico will buy ivory; to the young men who were with me on the "Garth Castle," the land of diamonds and gold, where fortunes await every one; to the philanthropist, the "dark continent" of the slave trade; to the Christian, the land of S. Augustine and of nineteenth century missions; to one of the S. S. J. E., it means —Cape Town. Even in this most restricted sense it is very interesting. The great wall of Table Mountain, with its cloud pouring over it like some phantom cascade in a dream; the "Devil's Peak," not far from the "Twelve Apostles," the rounded shore of Table Bay, the subtle play of colors which even one nearly color-blind can enjoy; the high winds which are so strong and constant as to force the trees to show their direction and intensity by their fixed inclination; and the stiff, direct lines or hard angles of the semi-tropical vegetations, the frosted leaves of the indigenous silver tree—every thing in the landscape is strange and new. Then the people—many are English in blood and in language no doubt, yet Cape Town is very cosmopolitan. One hears Dutch oftener than English; one sees the dark faces of Africanders or Kafirs, the fez of the Malay men or the astonishing colors worn by their wives and daughters, the queer umbrella-like straw hats of the Orientals; the muezzin's call from the mosque, the Christian sound of the bells, while some you know are heathen—all make as remarkable a religious tangle as there is linguistic.

Of course I made a pilgrimage with Fr. Osborne to Claremont to say a prayer at Fr. Sheppard's grave, which is near to that of the All Saints' Sister who was so lately killed on her holiday, and to the stone which covers all that was mortal of the bold and strong Bishop Gray. It is near the stone church, and back of Table Mountain.

The late article in "Blackwood" about the condition of the leper hospital here, which I had read while in England, took me over to see them. After one or two vain efforts I got off on Friday in the little "Magnet," the boat sent to take their supplies to them. The condition of things was very bad, but, thanks to the agitation on the subject which produced the article in Blackwood's Magazine, letters in the Cape Town papers and a Committee of Investigation by the Legislature, the heads have all been changed and new quarters are begun, the old cleaned and repaired and matters generally have been greatly improved. When the little steamer gets as near the island as it well can, a row boat comes off, manned by two of the convicts who are sent to Robber's Island to finish their sentence, and in this we were taken towards the shore until we grounded, and thence each passenger had his or her choice of riding through the surf "pick-a-back" on a convict, or take a chair carried between two. I chose the latter, and gazed upon the back of "9, 56, 102" as he and his partner waded to the shore. Here I was met by Mr. Fitch, who has volunteered his services for the care of the lepers; as he lived for some two years in our house in Cape Town, the habit was introduction enough and he took upon himself the office of guide. He showed me the queer little chapel which is about able to hold a tenth of all who wish to go; the foundations of the new quarters which convict labor is erecting for the lepers; the wards (disgracefully dirty and dilapidated) for the chronic sick paupers; the comfortable wards for the insane, where a mad artist lectured incoherently upon some vile daubs which courtesy can hardly call paintings, and another called unceasingly for his wife, and a third blasphemously welcomed me as "God, number one," but most of my time was spent in the leper quarters. The first was the row which figured in "Blackwood" last winter. It is now condemned, and will soon cease to be used. It is clean, and the freshly white washed walls are bright with gay pictures; but it has yet its rough floor of clay. Most of the patients were not as repulsive as I had expected to find. Many had lost their hands, but the stumps, sometimes, at least, looked only as they might after an amputation. The few who retained hands or feet used them with difficulty; yet I saw one man sewing as their tailor, another was wringing out their washing by hand, another was cooking. In one of the newer wards I found three who were, however, quite as loathsome as I had imagined them to be. One, a Christian, was dying, and I was allowed to say some prayers with him, he seemed to be conscious but could not speak. The female lepers' ward and the political prisoners I did not see. The diet, I thought, was abundant, and I noticed that they had plum pudding on Sunday. On my speaking of it Mr. Fitch laughed, and remarked, "Do you remember ——?. He refused his last Sunday, saying, 'I've been here twenty-one years now, and have been forced to eat plum pudding every Sunday all that time. I'm tired of it.'" A weekly plum pudding for twenty-one years would tire most people.

The Sister Superior guided me over the group of houses on Karene street occupied by their schools and orphanage. It needs a guide, for the flat-roofed, Oriental buildings, with their queer court-yards, were never intended for any such purpose as they are now put to. In fact, one of the dormitories in the orphanage was originally a mosque. You still see the keblah niche on one side to point out the direction towards which the Mohammedans are to pray. How soon will the mute prophecy of this come true, and Christianity everywhere displace Islam? The Sisters also have charge of the Somerset Hospital, and I found plenty of interest there.

Their largest single work is the House of Mercy at the other end of the town, which I saw on Whitsun-Monday. And there they have three houses as a home for Kafir girls and orphans—these are mostly heathen when they come, so that this is emphatically heathen work. One might meet with Fr. Puller up to S. Columba's Home for Kafir men, where I heard a Zulu play on a native instrument they call the "oo-gube," which looks like a bow to shoot arrows, with a gourd attached as a sounding-board, and is played by striking the one string by a short stick; to this accompaniment two sang and one danced for me. Kafir, the Arabic word for unbeliever, is a term used for several tribes of the Bantu group in Southern Africa, and most are yet heathen. It was one of them whose "intelligent" questions overthrew Dr. Colenso's Christianity.

S. Philip's Mission and its congregation made me think of S. Mary's in Baltimore. The infant schools—being Fr. Sheppard's Memorial—are built and in use, crowded by the little ones. The photograph in the "Cowley Album" has made many of us familiar with the little stone building, which is a church on Sunday, and through the week the school-house, after the chancel has been shut off by a closed screen. And some of the little anecdotes are charming. What can be more beautiful than for a Kafir, who had been but recently baptized and confirmed, and was at work about twenty-five miles up the country, finding he had missed the last train on Saturday, to walk all night, and at three or four in the morning knock at the door of the mission house and wake Fr. Puller to hear the poor man's confession, so that he could make his Communion in the morning? If all were as earnest as that one there, I should think anyone might well care for the work.

I am now on the "Clan Monroe," the single passenger. We expect to touch at Port Elizabeth, Algra Bay, at East London, at Port Natal or Durban, and then at Point de Galle, Ceylon. I hope to see the members of the Society working in India, and then home. Glad shall I be to be in Philadelphia once more.

Faithfully yours,

D. CONVERS.

Parish Notes.

July has been a fatal month to some of our parishioners. One of the most devoted of them, Mrs. McIntosh, entered into rest at Washington, D. C., on Saturday, July 5th. She was the daughter of Jesse and Sarah E. H. Richard, and was born at Batsto, N. J., and died in her 72d year. No one was more grateful than this faithful servant of Christ for the means of grace which she enjoyed in our Church. Another most devoted parishioner, Mrs. Alexander Hemsley, died at Tannersville, where she was most beloved by the people of the mountains for whom she had built the Church of St. John, and by whose hospitality it was possible to carry on the services of the Church during a great part of the year.

The Bishop of Corea visited S. Clement's on his way to his new diocese. It was very unfortunate that he could not be with us for a Sunday, as he was obliged to be in Halifax on Sunday, August 3d. It is hoped that Bishop Corfe may be able to visit us again. He is anxious to obtain the prayers of the Church in the States. One of the members of the Iron Cross will accompany the Bishop as a physician. The Bishop has accepted the Cross and will fulfill the obligation of Priest Associate.

The Guild of S. Mary had their annual excursion to Augustine Pier on Wednesday, July 16th, and were greatly pleased by a visit from some of the members of the Guild at West Chester who accompanied them. There is a large Guild at West Chester which has been formed on the model of the Guild of S. Mary by one of the Associates of our Guild at S. Clement's.

Father Benson left for England, on the City of Chester, July 2d, and Father Hall on the Majestic, July 9th. Both have arrived safely, and Father Hall hopes to return in a few weeks.

A most interesting letter has been received from Father Convers, and our readers may be glad to have the article to which he refers in Blackwood's Magazine. It is therefore printed in this number. Father Convers is probably at this time with the Fathers of the S. S. J. E. in India.

The boys have been taken each Saturday on an excursion by the members of the Guild of the Iron Cross. There has been one whole day excursion each month in addition to the half holidays. The funds have lasted for the month of July, but there is need of more money to carry on this work.

Some persons have availed themselves of the tickets, at reduced prices, for the Richard Stockton to Augustine Pier and Bayhead, and any persons of the Church making small parties can obtain these tickets at the Iron Cross office. Monday is the quietest day for the trip, and a large party will go one Monday in August.

Confirmation.

Confirmation is that Sacrament of the Church whereby the baptized are made strong (confirmed) with the fullness of the gifts of the Holy Ghost. While Baptism makes those who receive it children of God, Confirmation makes them soldiers of God, providing them with full spiritual armor and furnishing them with all spiritual weapons to fight successfully against sin. Thus while it is a Sacrament distinct from Baptism it is the natural completion and perfecting of the baptismal gift for those who have grown old enough to be morally responsible and so liable to temptation.

In the Acts of the Apostles (Chap. viii) we read that after St. Philip the Deacon had converted and baptized many persons in Samaria, the Apostles which were at Jerusalem sent unto them St. Peter and St. John, who having prayed for the converts laid their hands on them and they received the Holy Ghost. (See also Acts xix: 6.) In Apostolic times it would appear therefore that the manner of administering this Sacrament was by the laying on of hands. To this there was added very early in the history of the Church the use of Chrism (or anointing with oil), and this became universal. The Churches of the Anglican Communion have since the Reformation discontinued the Chrism, using only the laying on of hands; the Latin Church uses both the laying on of the Bishop's hand and the anointing with Chrism; and the Eastern Churches use only the oil.—Catholic Champion.

Lepers at the Cape.

One of the practical results of the self-sacrifice of Father Damien has been to attract additional attention to one of the most dreadful physical woes to which human nature is liable—leprosy. Close to Cape Town there is a second Molokai, called Robben Island, perhaps even a sadder place because it is unrelieved by the interest and intense public sympathy aroused by the Sandwich Isle. Here the patients live a death—to coin an expression—comparatively uncared for, and certainly unwept; and here, too, are gathered together a number of lunatics with a proportion of convicts.

A dirty little tug occupies three-quarters of an hour in our rough unpleasant transit. It conveys about forty passengers, most of whom are officials connected with the island; while a few, like myself, have obtained a special Government permit, without which no outsider is allowed to disembark. Our freight comprises twenty sheep cruelly tied up by the legs and as cruelly piled on each other, some bundles of forage, and a medley of articles, such as soap for the lepers, letters for the lunatics, and coffee for the convicts. The surpassingly lovely view of Table Mountain fades from our gaze, and we turn to behold suddenly the island of desolation about three miles in diameter, low and flat, sad and sandy, with scarcely a vestige of vegetation, save patches of coarse, unlovely grass. The Cape Government has declined to incur the expense of the simplest jetty, and the shallow roadstead forbids the close approach of the tug. So we transfer ourselves first to a small boat which dances crankily through the surf, and then "pick-a back" to the shoulders of the grey-clothed convicts, who wade thigh-deep into the water, and thus convey us to the seaside capital of the domain. We stare around at the scene; its aspect can scarcely be otherwise than strangely weird when we consider the nature of its population, consisting, approximately, of 130 lepers, 230 lunatics, 30 convicts, and 160 police and ward-masters, with their families—making a total of about 550.

The buildings comprise about twenty low, tumble-down-looking tenements, plus the mean-looking Government establishments. A small knot of downcast, ragged individuals are watching with languid interest our disembarkation—there needs little enlightenment to inform us that they are harmless lunatics. But those strange objects crouching on the ground, if possible still more forlorn, silent, motionless, who are they? I scan them more closely—they are lepers,—horrible! I am not yet steeled to such a sight, and I hurry away to find the doctor, who will impart to me the information I seek, and will give me authority to visit the wards. Here let me explain that I conducted my investigations on more than one occasion, but for simplicity's sake I will describe my experience in the form of a single visit.

There are two resident doctors, the senior of whom is Governor, and is rightly intrusted with an authority over the island and its inhabitants compared with which the power of the Czar is of a restricted nature, save in one respect—he is tied down hand and foot by the parsimony of the Colonial officials. On these latter be the shame of the shortcomings respecting the welfare of the miserable inhabitants. One of them undertakes to cicerone me over the leper establishment. On our way we examine the tiny church—perhaps almost the only thoroughly pleasing object in the island, inasmuch that it is trim without and reverently pretty within. Here service is held on Sundays, at which members of all creeds attend—Protestants, Roman Catholics, Mohammedans, and Jews—a community of suffering seems to make their whole world kin. Only the lepers have their hour, and the lunatics and convicts their hour, respectively—for there must be no risk of the contagion which might be feared by indiscriminate juxtaposition in a small, close, hot building. It has been proposed to throw out a small bow-room to one of the aisles, screened off with glass, so that the lepers might join in the common worship without risk to the rest of the congregation. But no; this is negatived because it would cost a small, a very small sum. Next we enter one of the wards occupied by a race which is partly Hottentot and partly Malay, with an infusion of white blood. Few are actually in bed—most are in a semi recumbent position on their beds, or are crouched about the floor. There is no murmuring of small talk, no mutterings of suffering, and the unbroken silence is almost oppressive. The doctor takes me from patient to patient, diagnosing the typical cases for my benefit. This young Hottentot is an instance of tubercular leprosy in its incipient stage. It has some affinity with ordinary consumption, and commences with internal tubercles, which in course of time manifest themselves externally on the face, head, and arms, but never in any other part of the body. Look at that slight, apparently insignificant, swelling of the lobes of the ears. It is the first invariable and never-deceiving symptom. By-and-by slight enlargements will appear over his frontal bones, close to the eye-brows. There does not seem to be much amiss with this lad, whose apparent sturdiness and twenty-one years veil his lurking malady; but watch the development of the disease in this next patient, who is some four or five years older. Observe the regular wens over the eyebrows; his ear-lobes have now become pendulous; neck and head are puffy; his face is shiny, and is ruckled with high ridges and low furrows; and in fact the original contour of his features is being gradually merged into a formless forbidding mass. No. 3 patient represents the "last scene of all that ends this strange and terrible history." Probably he is not much over thirty, but his malady has reached even his arms, which are pulpy and inflated, and the skin resembles the rough rind of a boiled orange. His ear-lobes are dangling down in grotesque lumps; huge knobs are disposed about his cheeks; his nostrils are swollen monstrously; the nape of his neck is scarcely to be distinguished; and shocking, shocking beyond my powers of description, is a gigantic excrescence on the side of his head, which has disfigured him almost beyond recognition as a human being. His eyes are directed towards us with an expressionless fixity, his body is motionless, his whole being seems utterly torpid, he looks as though he were but half alive—would indeed that he were wholly dead!

"Frightful and fatal as are these types, they do not correspond to the traditional ideas of leprosy," I remark to the doctor. "Where are the Miriams, the Naamans, and the Gehazis, lepers as white as snow?"

"That is the Eastern form, and does not exist here," is the answer. "Our two classes are the tubercular, which you have just seen, and which has some affinity with elephantiasis or leontiasis; and the anæsthetic, which I will now show you. Anæsthetic leprosy consists not in the dropping off of the bones, as most doctors assert, but in their absorption."

My cicerone then explains that the joints are attacked, open, and waste away. Then the connecting cartilage wastes away likewise; but there is no mortification, merely a slight exudation of lymph at the fingers or the toes, for the seat of the disease is strictly confined to the upper and lower extremities. Thus the bones become shortened, draw up almost to a vanishing-point. The malady proceeds, as it were, by leaps—fingers, wrist, elbow, and humerus. Strangely enough, the nails are leprous-proof; and thus one may see a patient apparently with only half an arm, from the stump of which five perfect finger-nails project. Here is an anæsthetic case in its incipient stage; he has lost the power of completely extending his fingers, the first and never-failing symptom, due to the tendons connecting the joints having become wasted away. Otherwise the patient looks well enough, fairly well nourished, and of a fairly good aspect, were it not for a sombre cloud indicating probably his horror at what he knows to be his inevitable future. No. 2 case, however, inspires one with startled dismay. Little more than a child of apparently twelve or thirteen years old—for the anæsthetic form seems to be singularly indiscriminate in assailing youth and old age—his smooth, tender body, unscarred by spot or eruption, forms a pitiable contrast to his legs, the ankles and tibia whereof are withered and shrunken up towards his knees, and have dwindled away almost to dry twigs. Though the thigh-bone has not yet, as far as we can see, been actively attacked, the flesh around it is unnaturally spare, and he looks poorly nourished. His fingers are half clenched; he moves about with difficulty; listless and silent; young in years but old in suffering, without one trace of childhood's bright vivacity, this boy-leper seemed to me the most pitiable object in the whole pitiable establishment. Not that he had by any means reached the acme of anæsthetic disease represented in this next patient, an aged man, looking far older than his years, in contrast to the boy. He is quite helpless and in bed, but the doctor uncovers him sufficiently to show the ravages. Legs, or rather what remains of them, drawn up, and their extremities resembling round rulers. Arms in a far worse condition—they are now scarcely longer than from an ordinary shoulder to elbow-distance; in fact, they are perfectly useless, shapeless stumps, with rudimentary fingers but perfect finger-nails projecting from a small knob at the base of the stump, which once represented a hand. Truly here is absorption of a man's whole corporeal being; his very collar-bones and shoulder-blades seem to be in process of rapid diminution; he is undergoing a living death, and that "the beautiful angel Death" may be quickly sent to him is the most merciful prayer which can be breathed.

What is the average duration of leprosy ere it prove fatal to life? No average can be stated, so capricious and variable is its nature, and the more or less the ferocity with which it attacks the victim. He may die in a year or two, and again we have cases here of ten years' duration. Indeed there is an instance on record of thirty years' malady. Much depends on age and constitution. There is no increased liability to the development of the lurking disease either by reason of youth or advanced years. Indeed it is exceedingly difficult to trace the first cause, though undoubtedly heredity is the most frequent origin.

"That it is contagious," stated one of the doctors, "I have not a shadow of a doubt. That is to say, the long and constant and close association of a healthy person with lepers would unquestionably result in his contracting the disease, especially if any abrasion on the surface of the body were to come in contact with leprous lymph. I have often had cases confirming the above opinion."

"Then how is it you yourself are free?"

"Because, though I am with them frequently, I am not incessantly associated with them day and night; and of course I possess many sanitary advantages impracticable for the lepers themselves; above all, I never relax the most scrupulous precautions—for example, carefully guarding my hands, and after dealing with a patient, washing them with carbolic soap—not in a basin of water, but under a tap, so that the force of the stream may carry away the contagious poison. As for the attendants on the sick, they are invariably taken from other patients who are in an elementary stage."

One of the strangest features of the disease seemed to be the fact that it was not accompanied with any acute pain—indeed, that actual bodily suffering, great or small, was absent.

I ask a patient, "Do you suffer at all—and you—and you?" They all shake their heads, yet mournfully. "No, we have no pain. Only we are always dreadfully hungry and cold." What an unspeakable relief that there is an absence of bodily anguish!—yet wait a little and hear what the doctor says. "This insensibility to suffering, however, constitutes both a difficulty and an evil. For example, a leper's bone becomes bruised, crushed, or otherwise injured, because his sensations give him no warning of impending danger. The stump of his arm may come into contact with the fire, or his leg bone may be pressed against a red-hot plate. Yet at the time he will not be aware of the fact. He is past feeling." Past feeling!—what a miserable degradation, bodily or indeed mentally! It almost seems better that a human being should be writhing under the bitterness of the utmost pain rather than that he should be in a condition of "past feeling."

The doctor assures me it is quite true that their hunger is insatiable, and prompts them to consume any amount of oil or fat of which they can get hold. The rations are unquestionably most liberal, consisting of 1¼ lb. meat, 1½ lb. of bread per patient daily, and other provisions in proportion. No alcoholic drink is issued to a single patient in the island, except in the shape of medical comforts, and this allowance is very sparing.

By this time my head has received all the information which, comparing it to a sponge, it is capable of absorbing at a single administration; so I aid the process of condensation by a trudge over the flat desolate island, gun in hand, and accompanied by a lunatic of a melancholy type of aberration. Nevertheless he brightens at a successful shot, and swears loudly and abusively at failures. Quail are astonishingly abundant, and there are several partridges, rabbits, and huge, vile, but non-poisonous snakes. I notice a dreary, solitary building, constituting the female leper hospital; but for the purpose of this paper, I need not incur the pain of visiting our afflicted sisters in the humiliation of their malady.

BOMBAY, July 31st.

DEAR FATHER:—I shall (D. V.) sail from here on the "Assam," via Brindisi, on August 8th; expect to spend a little time in England and reach Philadelphia about the first of October. I hope everybody is well and matters go on satisfactorily. I hope to get some letters in England.

Remember me to all.

Faithfully yours,

D. CONVERS.

No more cheerful news can be given in this magazine than that which is contained in the above letter received from the Rector of S. Clement's, and we shall all continue our prayers that after his long illness and travels he may arrive safely, and may with new health and strength carry on his work for many years in this parish.

Parish Notes.

September brings the close of the holidays, and we have great need to be thankful that so many children of this Parish have been able to enjoy holidays in the country and at the seaside.

S. Clement's Seashore Home was well supported this summer, and we may hope that in another year this may become a settled institution.

Hundreds of boys have enjoyed the Saturday half holidays, under the auspices of the Guild of the Iron Cross. The holidays will terminate with an all-day excursion on Saturday, September 13th.

Father Hall returned home in the "Majestic," and conducted the Retreat for Sisters, at Peekskill, August 29th to September 4th. He will conduct a retreat for Priests, at Albany, beginning on September 17th.

The Guilds of the Parish will all be called together as soon as possible, and the services of the Church, which have been dropped for the summer will be resumed in the middle of this month.

Mr. Tipton has returned from Canada, and we hope that new efforts will be made by all to increase the efficiency of the choir. More boys are needed, and it is safe to say that the instruction which the boys receive is more than compensation for all the work done by them in the choir.

The Celebrations of the Holy Communion on week-days should be better attended. The daily Sacrifice is offered in this Parish, and there would be a great outcry if it were to cease, but some men and more women ought to make a point of assisting as often as possible. The formation of a good habit only requires regularity, and a rule of religious service will make all of us more prompt and cheerful in rising to our religious duties.

The Guild of the Holy Cross will make their corporate Communion on Holy Cross Day, September 14th.

Father Field will begin a Mission at Johnstown on Thursday, Sept. 26th.

The Guild of S. Barnabas.

There is no Guild which can be more useful to its members and friends. It is a society of nurses and their friends. Its purpose is spiritual and social. The life of a nurse is often peculiarly destitute of spiritual help and of social sympathy, and for this reason this Guild was founded. It has worked well, and though not a parochial Guild, yet the Branch in Philadelphia has always met at S. Clement's, and will be always welcome there. It is intended, in the coming winter, to have a series of lectures by well known physicians upon those subjects which are of special interest to the members of the Guild. These lectures will take place after the saying of the Office and the Instruction in Chapel. The members have felt the need of something more interesting than a little social chat, and a discussion of some physical and moral subject may supply the want. The Chaplain wishes it to be known by all the nurses that he considers it a privilege to visit the sick and dying in the Hospital, when needed, and hopes that no member will forget this. Some of the members have done good spiritual work this summer in letting him know of members of our Church who would have suffered and died without help, except for the message sent by a member of the Guild.

Letter from Father Convers.

To help fill your next Magazine, I send you some notes of what Church work came under my eye in Natal. The land has at least a Christian name, for Natal answers to Christmas-land, and commemorates the day its shores were first seen by the Portuguese discoverer. But it has not a Christian people. Of the whole population of half a million, some 40,000 are European, about the same number are Arabs or "Coolies" from India, and the rest are native tribes, Kafir or Zulu. Unorganized heathenism, Hinduism, Islam, as well as various forms of Christianity, adds each its difficulty to dishearten the few working here to win Africa for Christ and His Church. What I saw was confined to the two towns of Durham and Pietermaritzburg, the former the chief commercial town, the latter the civil capital and military centre. The headquarters of the work amongst the Indians is S. Aiden's Mission in Durham, the schools, church, and dwellings I only saw after dark, and hence I have little idea of their external appearance. Within all looks like work, honest, energetic, hard work, in very cramped quarters. The priest at the head of it was a medical practitioner before taking holy orders, and won my heart, of course, by his combination of clerical and medical work. The sacristy in which we put on our surplices for the service at night does duty in the early morning as a consultation room, waiting room and dispensary all in one, at a later hour is part of the boys' school, in the early evening serves as sacristy, and after the service becomes the office wherein the congregation get their permits to go home. This last use requires explanation. It seems that one of the by-laws of the borough of Durham requires every "black man," i. e., Kafir, Zulu, or other native, every Hindu, or other whom the authorities class with them, who is found out of doors after 8 P. M., to have a pass signed by some responsible white man, or he will be arrested and fined. So after an evening service at S. Aiden's, you see the congregation file into the sacristy to get Canon Boothe to sign their pass which will allow them to go home without liability to arrest, which will lead to a fine or to enforced labor along with other "convicts." Even the Tamril Deacons are required to have them.

When I got to S. Aiden's, this well-used room had reached its third daily phase, and was a sacristy; the medicine cupboards were locked, and the desks pushed together into one corner. Before entering I stopped to look into the Chapel through the half-open door. The altar with its red frontal for S. Barnabas, its cross, flowers, and candles had a familiar look, but the white cassock of one of the Deacons whom the Bishop ordained in Madras some six months ago for this work, and who was just then leading them in singing, the words and tune, the colors of the women's dresses, and the way they wrapped their shawls about their heads, was oriental and strange. In the sacristy I met the deacons, whose full names I heard indeed, but as I could not then pronounce them, I cannot now write them. They both come from Nazareth, one is a student with high honors, the other is a fine preacher. Both spoke English, and seemed to me like friends at once, as they knew several of our Fathers in India. For processional and retrocessional Tamril lyrics were sung, otherwise all was in English. I was glad of the chance, as a son of the youngest of nations, to talk to the children of one of the oldest on S. Barnabas' Day, when we remembered one whose work was to make the Gospel overleap the limits of race. After service I went to the girls' school and had a little talk with the clerical and lay workers of the Mission. As we entered the school room there was a commotion in a bundle at one corner, and a childish girl's face with a sleepy babe was raised to see who was coming—it was one of the orphans the ladies of the Mission have taken. School work is after all the feature of the Mission as they have about 1400 under instruction. Caste which in India is such a barrier to Christianity is here of little power. To come over the "black water," away from the ceremonially pure water of the sacred rivers and tanks of India, is in itself an offence which a zealous follower of Hinduism will not commit. Yet they have not wholly abandoned their religion. I was shown many bamboo staffs with flags flying, which have some religious significance; and just outside Durham stands a Hindu temple the coolies there have built. But for all this the Mission has much to encourage all interested in it.

There is no work, so far as I heard, for the conversion of the Arabs from their Mohammedanism. Here and there I saw them on the street in their unmistakable dress; but did not see their mosque. Once walking on the Berea (a range of hills back of Durham where are most of the finer residences and gardens) we passed a low-domed building and I asked my companion what it was. He said, "That is one of the mosques." But it turned out to be the observatory! Had we undertaken to visit it, somebody would have been astonished, either we would have been surprised to find that we could enter with our shoes on, or the astronomers would have stared to see us stop at the door to take them off. However, we did not try.

By a misunderstanding I failed to get to the Kafir service on Sunday, as I waited for my guide to come, while he was looking for me in other places. The mission is strong, I was told, but just now has no one to work beyond a native catechist. The most hopeful feature of this native work is that there is no organized system of religion to be overcome as in the case of Hindus or Arabs. Their religion seems to be chiefly a belief in a supernatural world over which men get power by charms, incantations, etc.—in one word, witchcraft. But their superstitions are terribly real, for one missionary told me that near his work, in two years, five were burned to death for having, as the natives believed, harmed some one by their magic. Witchcraft, polygamy and the vices of a savage race are the three great difficulties to christianity among these tribes.

Church work in Natal, among the English speaking population, is chiefly interesting because of the efforts of Dr.

Colenso and of the few who followed him. Every one who has read anything of the movements in the Church of England twenty or thirty years ago, will recall how Dr. Colenso, after he had been consecrated Bishop of Natal, began to avow certain heresies, e. g., the denial of our Lord's divinity, and the inspiration of parts of the Bible, for which he was tried and eventually excommunicated. He appealed to the State courts, and as they upheld him, arrayed the State against the Church. The State gave him his income and all the property given up to that time. The orthodox had to submit to this robbery, and to prove the sincerity of their religion by bearing all the difficulties and troubles of the trial and excommunication of Dr. Colenso, as well as by losing their churches and endowments. In the hour of their trial they were faithful. So to-day the old Cathedral at Pietermaritzburg is not in our hands, nor is S. Paul's and S. Thomas' in Durham. After the civic courts had decided that Bishop Gray had no power to try and excommunicate Dr. Colenso because the Legislature of Cape Colony had not given him that power, after the courts thus swept aside the latter's consecration oath and the traditional practice of the Catholic Church, then Dr. Colenso changed his ground to try to gain supporters who did not hold his own heresies. He then took the line that he was contending, not for any matter of doctrine, but for what he called "the distinguishing mark," the "essential feature of our religion," which was to settle religious controversies by the Privy Council! Could anything be more unspiritual! More of the earth, earthy! It was simple Erastianism. The highest appeal to settle what is Christian truth, was not a "thus saith the Lord by the prophet," not a "thus saith the Body of Christ, the Church," not a "thus saith the Scriptures," but a "thus decideth my lords of the privy council." As you may imagine, there has been no blessing of God resting upon such a work. Dr. Colenso himself is now dead. A year or two after his death, a fire swept over the grass of the upland where his place was, destroyed all his books and papers, leaving only bare ruined walls, and then went out most suddenly. One or two out of the 25,000 English clergy has been found to carry on the task. They have no Bishop; even if any one wished to be ordained amongst them it could not be; none of their children can be confirmed, except by coming to the orthodox; not one of the Bishops of our communion in all the world recognizes them; they followed an excommunicated Bishop, although, now they carefully state that they reject his teaching, and have their reward—they have the money and, so far as one can see, nothing of spiritual life or growth. I went to the Berea and passed one of their churches there—a poor building in which are now no services. So long as a few who have been prominent live on, so long the body is likely to have a languishing life, but with their death will come extinction. I wondered how they would regard us in the United States. In their eyes we must be double heretics, for we both legislate for ourselves without let or hindrance from Congress, we have our own courts, and lack "the distinguishing mark" of their religion, and besides the Supreme Court of the United States once said, "whenever the questions of discipline, or of faith, or ecclesiastical rule, custom or law, have been decided by the highest Church judicatories to which the matter has been carried, the legal tribunals must accept such decisions as final and binding on them." So both our Church and our State repudiate the essential feature of "their" religion.

It was a pleasure to me to spend a night with Dean Green, at Maritzburg, and listen to some of his reminiscences of his long work there. Since 1848 he has battled on in Natal for the faith, and God's blessing seems visible in the results. Turned out of S. Peter's, now he has built the new and larger S. Saviour's, where I celebrated, and could easily fancy myself in our own little chapel. I write this on the Indian ocean, nearing Ceylon, where I expect to mail it. I am stronger, and begin to feel as if it would not be long before I shall be able to work. It seems an age since I had letters from Philadelphia. Before this nearly every one will have settled their summer plans. I hope, please God, to be one of the first to return to Philadelphia.

With a prayer that God's blessing may rest upon you all, I am

Faithfully yours,

D. CONVERS.

Letter from Father Hall.

OXFORD, Aug. 12, 1890.

The Evangelist Fathers have had their annual Retreat at Cowley and Father Hall writes:

The Retreat was a great refreshment, both the spiritual exercises and the meeting the different Fathers from whom one has been so long and widely separated in body. It was strange to think in the Chapel what varied interests our little body represented, and how we were gathered from Asia, Africa, and America.

At the Triennial Chapter many important questions were considered. Father Page, who has been our Superior in India for 17 years, succeeded Father Benson as Superior General. It was generally felt that it would be better to make a change in F. Benson's lifetime, and this was his own wish. Our friends will I am sure make special remembrance of the Society in their intercessions in this new stage of its existence as it passes out of the Founder's hands. F. Benson will go to India for a time at any rate in November. This will be the accomplishment of a long cherished wish, both of his own and of the ecclesiastical authorities in India, which hitherto it has never been possible to carry out. It was our new Superior General's plan to come out with me and spend six weeks in America, so as to gain some practical knowledge of our work and position; but the impossibility of securing passage with me (or any at a reasonable rate of both speed and money at this crowded season) has led to the abandoning of the plan for the present. F. Puller returns to the Cape for a few months, and is then to come home as Novice Master. We hope to strengthen the Mother House, with a view to the gaining and training of recruits. These plans, added to his own personal feeling, of which I shall leave him to speak, make it impossible for us to look for F. Osborne back again in Boston at present at any rate. I know how grieved and disappointed many will feel at this. I think they will know that none can feel his loss more than myself. We must all make sacrifices both for him and for our common cause.

Since the Retreat I have been kept in Oxford by the critical development of my mother's illness. You know she has been long a great sufferer in both mind and body. The end came at last quite peacefully last Sunday evening. It has been a merciful ordering that I was here just at this time—and so contrary to my expectation—and able to be with her at the last. We lay her body to rest to-morrow in the beautiful cemetery round SS. Mary and John at Cowley.

Ever affectionately yours,

ARTHUR C. A. HALL.

Lepers at the Cape.

After my shooting-walk my mind seems again receptive, and I make my way to the leper wards, this time unaccompanied. I had received distinct permission, so there is no impropriety in my investigating on my own account, and reporting the result. The result is eminently unfavorable. If any persons in England care to read what I am writing, and if thereby there be effected any alleviation in the woes of a company of most miserable human beings, my satisfaction will indeed be great.

I enter a square, dirty, dismal courtyard, two sides of which are bordered with wards, one of which I enter and ask for a head leper attendant. A sleeper is aroused from his bed; he is fearfully swollen with tubercular leprosy, and though fairly intelligent, it is some time ere I can make him understand my object, for casual visitors are rare indeed. Meanwhile the leper patients, some in bed, some sitting in various parts of the ward, who, with dull apathy, had almost ignored the entrance of a stranger, evince a gleam of languid curiosity. They listen to my inquiries; first one then another puts in a rejoinder, and by degrees the conversation becomes — what? — not bright or brisk, but monotonously continuous, like the tolling of a funeral bell. I must, however, say that they gave no sort of utterance to anything like a detail of grievances.

"How long have you been ill?"—my experience is that the words "leprosy" and "lunacy" are by common consent tabooed. "A year," or "two years," or "four years," as the case may be; "but I am a little better now," they fondly try to persuade themselves.

"Have you any games?" A shake of the head.

"Any newspapers or books?" Fresh negatives. "There is a library, but we have little benefit from it, and we have no newspapers."

"Shall I send you some?" and for the first time there is a trace of animation in their reply.

"Oh, do—oh, pray do! Send us anything to read, either in Dutch or English. Send us even tracts. Address them to—— Stop; we we will get you a piece of paper that you may write it down, lest you should forget."

Then I make a tour of the ward. It is of fair but not excellent construction, but so bare and dark, and oh, so sad! Bare utility, moderate cleanliness, but not a vestige of gracious enlivenment, of kindly solicitude, or of effort to provide minor comforts for the sufferers. Not even a book, a newspaper, a picture or an ornament. No wonder I am once more struck with the oppressive silence, with the torpor of their gloomy despair. Yet this is manifestly one of the best wards. I wish to see also the worst, and yonder two crazy buildings promise to correspond to my requirement. Yes, I find human ingenuity could surely scarcely contrive anything more vile and discreditable. Decrepit outside, ruinous within, deficient in the commonest furniture and fittings, fourteen beds are crowded into a totally insufficent space, the miserable rickety bedsteads mere masses of foul rags, and foul mattresses, on which are stretched patients in the most advanced, helpless stages of the disease, unprovided, so far as I could discover, with ordinary hospital appliances. The atmosphere is only partially fetid by reason of the open door. There is a kind of gipsy fireplace in which a few sticks crackle, and over which some of the lepers are crouching; nay, the very ground is destitute of boards, and consists of bare earth trampled into hollows, over which, as the doctor stated, numbers of large loathsome snakes crawl at night in search of mice. Is this disgraceful cabin a Cape Government hospital, or is it a lazar-house which even the pariahs of the East would scorn to inhabit? I inspected two of these buildings, and, to judge from what I saw and heard, there must be several more. I try to question the inmates; most of them are too near the threshold of death to answer my inquiries intelligently. The majority are half-breeds—in fact I did not see any pure-bred whites—by no means of a high type, not speaking English very glibly; and though they respond with a faint show of satisfaction to the few sentences of Dutch which I can muster, the conversation is very one-sided, so I quit the sickening sight and set to work to question two leper head-attendants. Only by degrees do they become communicative, and then I gather from them various items of information, which are chiefly valuable because I corroborate them by other circumstantial evidence. The whole gravamen of the indictment against those who are responsible for the assignment of funds for the administration of the Cape Government Leper Establishment, is, I conceive, parsimony and indifference; and I gather that the very inhabitants of Cape Town admit and are ashamed of this neglect.

These lepers, through no fault of their own, are cut off from friends and relations, and from all which renders life dear; they are virtually incarcerated in this terrible isle. Is it too much to require that the bitterness of their lot should be alleviated, so far as is practicable, by at least a moderate expenditure of money and labor? At all events, let the foul wards I have described be instantly demolished. Look at their clothing even—of discreditable quality in the first instance, and quickly worn to mere tatters. Where are the ample wash-houses which here, above all places, should be a sine qua non? where the well-ordered kitchens, the library, and the reading-room? where the airy, clean, cheerful wards, made brighter with some attempt at gardens, or at least with a neatly kept enclosure? where the resources of such employment and amusement as these unhappy outcasts may be susceptible of? where, above all, that solicitude, tenderness, and consolation which would render it less hard for them to die?

I admit that there are two resident clergymen. I repeat, the doctors cannot enforce a scale of expenditure sufficient to meet requirements. For instance, the lepers seem prone to excessive filthiness. Is this checked by ample facilities for ablution? Not a bit of it; the patients must needs mop their poor diseased bodies out of buckets at their bedsides. I saw the process, and a very disgusting sight it was.

Said one of the leper attendants to me ere we parted, in broken sentences, which may thus be condensed: "Have you come over here to find out something about us? If so, will you not write something in the newspapers explaining how miserable we are? We have nobody to speak for us. I am scarcely at all ill, yet I am compelled to remain here. My wife and children are on the mainland. I have not seen them for years. Indeed I am unhappy—ah, so unhappy!" and his voice quivered as he clenched his hands in all the despair and abandonment of woe. With some reluctance, I own, and with a glance to ascertain that there were no abrasions on my own skin, I shook hands with this leper on bidding him adieu, partly to see if this sign of friendliness would have any effect on him. He appeared much surprised and softened. I am told—and perhaps the statement is true—that these lepers are habitually ungrateful and uninteresting. Be it so.

> "Alas the gratitude of men

I am not concerned with the question of gratitude or interest. I only endeavor to point out the duty of the State to help those who are unable to help themselves.

The bell is ringing for the departure of the tug. I jump on the back of a sturdy jovial convict, who carries me through the surf to the boat. The most appropriate reflections on quitting this horrible island would surely be, "All ye who enter here abandon hope;" and, "Wanted, a second Father Damien."

Parish Notes.

Father Convers returned on Thursday, October 23d, in the steamer Nevada, after a rough voyage.

It is time for everyone to resume work again, and all who have returned from their summer wanderings and vacations can now make a new beginning. The work of the Parish seems to increase rather than diminish as time goes on. Certain things are greatly needed. Among others, a girl's club might be opened with great advantage if some ladies would come forward to offer their assistance.

The Boys of the Iron Cross Gymnasium gave a reception to Father Field on his return from the West, October 21st.

Two receptions were given to the members of S. Barnabas Guild, when about forty nurses attended on each occasion. The Guild of S. Barnabas is doing a noble work, and some idea of the missionary work done by them may be estimated when it is known that one of the Fathers was sent for to five hospitals on one day. Other clergy have promised to assist the Chaplain in this work. The Guild of S. Barnabas hopes to open a reading room for nurses very soon. Any persons who will give periodicals, etc., for this purpose are requested to let Father Field know.

A large and beautiful Crucifix was presented to Father Convers on his return, by the members of the Guild of the Iron Cross. It is to be hung in one of the wards of S. Clement's Hospital.

S. Clement's Day (November 23d) falls this year on a Sunday.

There will be as usual a solemn High Celebration at 11 in addition to the Celebrations at 7, 8, 9, when every member of the Parish is expected to receive the Holy Communion.

There will be a Children's Service at 3. The Procession of Guilds will take place at 8 P. M., and it is hoped that every member will try to be present.

The Altar Guild, the Guild of S. Mary, the Guild of the Holy Cross, the Guild of S. Martha, and the Guild of the Holy Child will meet in the Sunday school room. The Guild of the Iron Cross will meet in chapel. The Guild of S. Vincent and the Junior S. Vincent will meet in the Acolytes' room. All are requested to be in their various rooms at 7.30.

The Parish Tea will take place on Wednesday. The speakers will be announced. Tickets can be had from the Sisters.

S. Clement.

All we know of the life of S. Clement may be comprised in a few lines, but those few lines are like the strokes of a clever artist, which suggest a whole picture to the mind's eye of the beholder; for Eusebius tells us that he was the same Clement as was mentioned by S. Paul in his epistle to the Philippians as "My fellow-laborer, and whose name is in the book of life." To be the fellow-laborer of S. Paul implies so much! for a fellow-laborer must in some measure also have realized S. Paul's experience, and he too might have said that he had been "in labors abundant, in stripes above measure, in perils from the Gentiles, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils among false brethren, in labor and travail, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness, beside those things that are without, that which cometh upon me daily, the care of all the churches" (2 Cor. xi: 27, 28). Indeed this must have been the experience more or less of every missionary of that time. But they too would have added, "None of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry which I received from the Lord Jesus" (Acts xx: 24).

S. Clement is said to have been chief Presbyter or Bishop of Rome for nine years, dying A. D. 100, in the third year of the Emperor Trajan's reign. During this time grave dissensions arose in the Church of Corinth, and as there was no chief presbyter there, to whom the disputants might have referred as umpire, they had recourse to Clement, and in answer he sent Epistles to the Corinthian Church, which were so highly prized that they were read publicly, not only in Corinth, but in various other churches of the then Christian world. The Epistles themselves contain no statement as to their author. They were included in the Alexandrian manuscript of the New Testament of 5th century date, and in the affixed list of the books, they are called the Epistles of S. Clement. They have also been found in Greek and Syriac manuscripts, bound with the New Testament, and headed, "Clement to the Corinthians." The fact of their being so bound shows the value attached to them, and the withholding of the author's name in the Epistles is a sign of his modesty, and that he regarded himself as writing not in his individual capacity, but as representative of the Church at Rome.

Before concluding these remarks, it may be well to mention that Eusebius, whose authority is quoted, was the first ecclesiastical historian. He was Bishop of Cæsarea, and he lived in the time of Constantine the Great, the first Christian Emperor of Rome, in the 4th century.

We may regret that there was no earlier historian, for we long to know more of the Apostles themselves, and of the Church they founded; but its early years were years of persecution, and such a time is not one for writing details which it might be unsafe to disclose.

The historian's work requires peace, and that was not given to the Church till the time of Constantine. But there is consolation for those regrets and longings in the assurance, that though here we know but in part; it will not be so always.

Those blessed saints and martyrs are in the highest sense of the word living still—according to Christ's own words, "Whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die" (S. John xi: 26). We shall meet them all in the heavenly mansions, and learn from themselves all the way by which the Lord has led them, and find with each new revelation fresh themes for our praise and adoration. But to know something of them here seems not an unfitting preparation; they will not then be strangers to us, when we meet them in the Church in Heaven.

Extracts from the First Epistle of S. Clement.

The Church of God which sojourneth in Rome, to the Church of God which sojourneth in Corinth; to them which are called and sanctified by the will of God through our Lord Jesus Christ.

Grace to you, and peace from Almighty God, through Jesus Christ, be multiplied.

By reason of the sudden and repeated calamities and reverses which are befalling us, brethren, we consider that we have been somewhat tardy in giving heed to the matters of dispute that have arisen among you, dearly beloved, and to the detestable and unholy sedition, so alien and strange to the elect of God, which a few headstrong and self-willed persons have kindled to such a pitch of madness that your name, once revered and renowned and lovely in the sight of all men, hath been greatly reviled. For who that had sojourned among you did not approve your most virtuous and steadfast faith? Who did not admire your sober and forbearing piety in Christ? Who did not publish abroad your magnificent disposition of hospitality? Who did not congratulate you on your perfect and sound knowledge? For ye did all things without respect of persons, and ye walked after the ordinances of God, submitting yourselves to your rulers and rendering to the older men among you the honor which is their due. On the young, too, ye enjoined modest and seemly thoughts; and the women ye charged to perform all their duties in a blameless and seemly and pure conscience; cherishing their own husbands, as is meet; and ye taught them to keep in the rule of obedience, and to manage the affairs of their household in seemliness, with all discretion.

And ye were all lowly in mind and free from arrogance; yielding, rather than claiming submission; more glad to give than to receive; and content with the provisions which God supplied. And giving heed unto His words, ye laid them up diligently in your hearts and His sufferings were before your eyes. Thus, a profound and rich peace was given to all, and an insatiable desire of doing good. An abundant outpouring, also, of the Holy Spirit fell on all; and, being full of holy counsel, in excellent zeal, and with a pious confidence ye stretched out your hands to Almighty God, supplicating Him to be propitious, if unwittingly ye had committed any sin.

Ye had conflict day and night for all the brotherhood, that the number of the elect might be saved with fearfulness and intentness of mind. Ye were sincere and simple and free from malice one toward another; every sedition and every schism was abominable to you.

Ye mourned over the transgressions of your neighbors, ye judged their shortcomings to be your own.

Ye repented not of any well-doing, but were ready unto every good work. Being adorned with a most virtuous and honorable life, ye performed all your duties in the fear of God.

The commandments and the ordinances of the Lord were written on the tables of your hearts.

All glory and enlargement was given to you, and that was then fulfilled which is written, "My beloved ate and drank, was enlarged and waxed fat and kicked." Hence come jealousy and envy, strife and sedition, persecution and tumult, war and captivity. So men were stirred up, the mean against the honorable, the ill reputed against the highly reputed, the foolish against the wise, the young against the elder. For this cause righteousness and peace stand aloof, while each man hath forsaken the fear of the Lord, and become purblind in the faith of Him, neither walketh in the ordinances of His commandments, nor liveth according to that which becometh Christ, but each goeth after the lusts of his evil heart, seeing that they have conceived an unrighteous and ungodly jealousy through which also death entered into the world.

(Then follow examples from the Old and New Testaments, Cain, Dathan and Abiram, &c., to show the danger of strife and jealousy.)

S. Clement continues:

These things, dearly beloved, we write, not only as admonishing you, but also as putting ourselves in remembrance. For we are in the same lists, and the same contest awaiteth us. Wherefore let us forsake idle and vain thoughts, and let us conform to the glorious and venerable rule which hath been handed down to us: and let us see what is good and what is pleasant and what is acceptable in the sight of Him that made us.

Let us fix our eyes on the blood of Christ, and understand how precious it is unto His Father, because being shed for our salvation, it won for the whole world the grace of repentance.

Let us review all the generations in turn, and learn how from generation to generation the Master hath given a place for repentance unto them that desire to turn to Him. Noah preached repentance, and they that obeyed were saved. Jonah preached destruction unto the men of Nineveh, but they, repenting of their sins, obtained pardon of God by their supplications and received salvation, albeit they were aliens from God. Yea, the Master of the Universe Himself spake concerning repentance with an oath, "For as I live, saith the Lord, I desire not the death of the sinner, but rather his repentance"—and "Repent ye, O house of Israel, of your iniquity; say unto the sons of my people, though your sins reach from the earth even unto the heaven, and though they be redder than scarlet and blacker than sackcloth, and ye turn unto Me with your whole heart and say, Father, I will give ear unto you as unto an holy people."

Seeing, then, that He desireth all His beloved to be partakers of repentance, He confirmed it by an act of His almighty will. Wherefore let us be obedient unto His excellent and glorious will; and, presenting ourselves as suppliants of His mercy and goodness, let us fall down before Him and betake ourselves unto His compassions, forsaking the vain toil and the strife and jealousy which leadeth unto death.

Let us, therefore, be lowly-minded, brethren, laying aside all arrogance, and conceit, and folly, and anger, and let us do that which is written; for the Holy Ghost saith, "Let not the wise man boast in his wisdom, nor the strong in his strength, neither the rich in his riches, but he that boasteth, let him boast in the Lord, that he may seek Him out, and do judgment and righteousness;" most of all remembering the words of the Lord Jesus which He spake, teaching forbearance and long-suffering: for thus He spake, "Have mercy, that ye may receive mercy; forgive that it may be forgiven to you. As ye do, so shall it be done to you. As ye judge, so shall ye be judged. As ye show kindness, so shall kindness be showed unto you. With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured withal to you."

With this commandment and these precepts let us confirm ourselves, that we may walk in obedience to His hallowed words, with lowliness of mind; for the Holy Word saith, "Upon whom shall I look, save upon him that is gentle and quiet and feareth My oracles."

Therefore, it is right and proper, brethren, that we should be obedient unto God, rather than follow those who in arrogance and unruliness have set themselves up as leaders in abominable jealousy.

For we shall bring upon us no common harm, but rather great peril, if we surrender ourselves recklessly to the purposes of men, who launch out into strife and seditions, so as to estrange us from that which is right. Let us be good one towards another, according to the compassion and sweetness of Him that made us; for it is written, "The good shall be dwellers in the land, and the innocent shall be left on it; but they that transgress shall be destroyed utterly from it." And again He saith, "I saw the ungodly lifted up on high and exalted as the cedars of Lebanon. And I passed by and behold he was not, and I sought out his place, and I found it not. Keep innocence and behold uprightness; for there is a remnant for the peaceful man."

Confession and Absolution.

This subject is most important when we consider the force of the words used by our Lord in S. John xx: 23; the time when they were spoken; and the continuance of popular misunderstanding among many Christians of these doctrines. But what is misunderstood should always be explained, whether in matters secular or spiritual, like the question now under discussion.

Observe how that Christ, immediately on His resurrection for our justification, on the very day of that event, speaks of absolution and retention of sins. Already had Christ declared that He, as man, had power on earth to forgive sins, so that now He merely transfers from His Own sinless humanity to the sinful humanity of mankind, from one created thing to another created thing, the exercise of the power of absolution from sins. "As I was sent even so send I you to forgive sins," And as sinful humanity is the same now as then, so the same spiritual medicine is required for its amendment now as then. In other words, this gift of absolution was a gift to the ministry of the Church for all time, the apostles being merely the first, not the only recipients of this power. So S. Paul speaks of Christ when He ascended, "giving spiritual gifts unto men."

Of course the priest's attitude in absolution is ministerial and derivative, he being a means or instrument used to convey forgiveness to the soul from God, Who alone has inherent power to forgive sins. Similarly in baptism, and in preaching, he is used by God as a means for admitting a soul into a state of grace, or for instruction in righteousness, which two means of grace or of man's intervention in religion, baptism and sermons, are recognized by all Christians. In fact, ministerial absolution is part of that great "law of sacerdotalism," whereby man depends on God through man, whether in secular or in spiritual ministrations, a law fully recognized even by dissenters in the appointment of ministers to preach and pray in their chapels.

This doctrine of absolution is plainly taught in the Prayer Book; in the daily absolution at matins and evensong, in the exhortation to Communion, in the Eucharistic absolution, and in the visitation of the sick; parts of the Prayer Book not sufficiently known even to many Churchmen. Many post-reformation authorities, beginning with Hooker, can be cited in favor of this doctrine.

But special gifts require a special ministry. Priests were appointed for the sacraments, not the sacraments for the priests. This special ministry must consist of men who have been duly ordained by bishops, all other ministers, so-called, being merely man-made lecturers, and not ministers of God. "No Bishop, no Church," as said Ignatius, S. John's disciple, who died C. 110 A. D. The importance of an episcopal ministry was insisted on by none more than by Wesley, who called his nominees not ministers but preachers.

Absolution by a priest of course implies confession to a priest of sins that have to be absolved or retained. A judge cannot give sentence on a case not made known to him by counsel, a surgeon cannot cure a wound he does not see. So confession of sins to man is alluded to several times in the Bible (Num. v: 7; Lev. v: 5; Joshua vii: .9; Mark i: 5; Acts xix: 18), and in the Prayer Book in the Communion and Visitation Services. Though confession of sins in old times was public, and may be so now, if desired by the penitent, yet expediency and the analogy of private interviews for legal or medical advice naturally prompt the use of private, i. e., auricular confession rather than public before a congregation.

The true priest, like the good physician, is always ready to exercise his office, for which reason the week day services may be, indeed as they have been found to be, of special advantage to some. While loyalty to the Prayer Book, which enjoins confession, prompts the priest thus to offer his services to penitents, yet, like the physician, he cannot force his ministrations, nor can he make it a condition of communion in the Eucharist that any one should make a private confession of his sins beforehand. This freedom was the use of the Primitive Church.

Experience proves that private confession is as much desired by the people as by the clergy, for those who are truly penitent, and who have duly examined their conscience, as S Paul bids us do, often go out of their way to seek a priest who, in fulfillment of his ordination vows, is ready and willing to exercise in absolution "the ministry of reconciliation." As to whether this doctrine be popular he does not trouble himself; the question is—is it true? The Church, the Bible, and reason say it is true.

The Wardens regret to announce that the Rector upon his return from his journey, although improved in health in some respects, was nevertheless still unable to assume the burden of his parochial duties.

They have received a communication from his medical advisers that complete rest with entire freedom from all care will be necessary for a few months.

Father Field remains in charge of the parish.

Parish Notes.

The Christian Year has closed with the Festival of S. Clement, and in spite of all difficulties and troubles it has been kept with great enthusiasm.

On S. Clement's Day the Celebrations were well attended at 6, 7, 8 and 9, and there were 322 communicants. This is far below the number that ought to have attended, being only one-third of the number on our list, but we must try to use Advent well and do better at Christmas.

The Meditations on Friday began the week before Advent Sunday. There will be a course of Meditations in Advent on the Sunday Epistles.

On each Tuesday afternoon in Advent, Rev. J. Holwell Geare, will give a series of addresses on the Parable of the "Ten Virgins."

S. Matt. xxv: 1.
S. Matt. xxv: 5.
S. Matt. xxv: 10.
S. Matt. xxv: 13.

Father Field will conduct a Parochial Retreat at Milford, Del., on Wednesday, December 3d.

The Right Rev. Ethelbert Talbot, Bishop of Wyoming and Idaho, will preach on Sunday evening, December 7th, and on Monday evening, December 8th, will give a Missionary address in the school room, at 8 P. M.

St. John's Guild will meet on Monday, December 15th. The Guild has been reconstructed and now has the simple and definite object of praying for and co-operating with the Mission Priests of the Society of St. John the Evangelist in their work. The members will say the Collects for the Guild daily and twice in each week, if possible, at Celebrations of the Holy Communion.

St. Barnabas Guild had its usual meeting on Wednesday, November 19th. Three new members were proposed.

The Guild Procession on St. Clement's evening was very well attended. A Procession is not a Parade, and no false modesty should prevent any person from taking part. It is an act of glory to God. Nothing, as a dignitary of the Church said after seeing it, so proves the obedience and discipline of the members of the Guild.

Christmas Day falls this year on Thursday. There will be no Mothers' Meeting and no service after 5 P. M.

The Mothers will have their Supper and Entertainment on Monday, December 29th.

The Missa de Angelis will be sung during Advent at the 11 o'clock Celebration. In the evening the Litany of the four last things will be sung after the sermon.

Prayer books and hymn books are often taken away from the church (by mistake), and people who take them forget to return them, thereby causing great inconvenience and expense. Persons who find any of St. Clement's prayer books or hymnals in their houses are requested to put them back in the church.

More prayer books and hymn books are needed.

The Sunday School.

Advent is close upon us again, and I must remind the Parish of the Sunday School, and give a brief account of our work.

First of all I have to thank the teachers who have helped me, and the friends of the school who have contributed to its support during the past year. And if gratitude is rightly defined as "a lively expectation of favors to come," I certainly am grateful; which of course will then mean that I expect a great deal more work this coming year from my teachers, and an equal or greater amount of money from my friends in the parish. The year has been one of more than usual difficulties, owing to the sickness which prevailed so generally last winter. I had not the time myself to attend to the visiting of the Sunday-school children and their parents as it ought to have been attended to, and several of the teachers were incapacitated by reason of their own sickness, or were obliged for other unavoidable causes to be away from their classes for a considerable period. One or two have been reluctantly compelled to resign their charge altogether, but others have come forward to fill their places, and we are once more in working order.

The average attendance of children throughout the year, with the exception of the months of July, August and September, has been about 139. This is still far below what it ought to be, considering the number of names on our books.

It is also to be remarked that while the attendance in the Infant school has considerably increased, that in the upper school has somewhat decreased. This shows the need of more regular visiting of the scholars by their teachers, and of every one working together to try to make the school more attractive, so that we may be able to keep our scholars to a later age.

An intermediate department has lately been organized for children too old for the Infant school, and yet not sufficiently advanced to to take part in the lessons upstairs. This, it is hoped, will be a great help to the solid teaching of the children. It is our aim that every child shall know the Catechism thoroughly before being advanced to the upper school.

During the months of July and August the experiment was tried of having a morning session of the school before the 11 o'clock Celebration, instead of in the afternoon. I am sorry that the attendance was not larger; but when nearly all the teachers are out of town it is difficult to induce the children to come. Most of those, however, who did come stayed for the 11 o'clock Celebration. Let us hope that next summer a larger number may be brought in this way to a Celebration, while their own service at 9 o'clock is in abeyance.

With regard to the finances of the school, I am happy to be able to make a satisfactory report. The total amount collected has been $380.28, and the expenses $343.50, leaving a balance in hand of $36.78. We owe, however, $90 to complete the purchase of a cabinet organ. This I hope to pay off at Christmas. It was absolutely necessary to buy some instrument, as the piano we formerly used was only loaned to us, and was removed last month by its owner. The organ we now have will be a great help, not only to the school, but also to the Mothers' meeting on Thursday evenings. It is necessary for them as for us to have an instrument for their weekly rehearsal. This unexpected necessity has of course been a considerable drain upon our resources, and will prevent me doing other things which I had hoped to do for the improvement of the school. It is however an expense which will not occur again.

I have also been able to buy forty Bibles for use in the school. This is only half the number that we need, but it is all I could afford.

The Sunday-school Library will, I hope, be opened on Advent Sunday. It has been closed for a whole year, partly for the want of librarians to undertake the management of it, and partly because the books were in great disorder and many of them needing to be repaired. Both of these defects have now been remedied. Mr. Frank Garner has kindly undertaken the work of chief librarian, and as he has had experience of such work in another excellently ordered Sunday school in this city, I feel sure he will prove a most efficient worker. The books have all been put in order, renumbered, and as far as we could do it, repaired. A catalogue has also been prepared, and will be printed in a cheap form. My best thanks are due to those who have helped me in this work, especially to Miss J. Thomson and Mr. F. W. Clarke.

In conclusion, I would remind all our parishioners that Advent is the time for forwarding to me their subscriptions or donations for the coming year. In accordance with the plan indicated last Advent, I purpose to make but this one appeal for the whole year, and I hope it will be liberally responded to. Every parishioner ought to take an interest in the Sunday school, and endeavor to do something for its support. It is one of the most important works of the parish, and one which calls for some of the most self-denying and patient labor. I therefore ask the whole parish to help it on by their interest, their prayers, and their gifts; so that it may become an instrument of increasing usefulness in bringing up our children in the faith and fear of God.

W. H. LONGRIDGE.

Festival Meeting S. Clement's Branch Iron Cross.

The usual Festival meeting of the members of S. Clement's Branch of the Iron Cross was held on Tuesday evening, November 25th. The Chaplain General, Rev. J. Holwell Geare, Rev. George T. Griffith, Rev. S. Gibbons of Nova Scotia, and a large number of members were present. The service was read by the Chaplain General. One Priest Associate, and six new members were received into the Guild.

An eloquent address was given by Mr. Geare, who took for his subject the command of God to the children of Israel, "Go and Smite Amalek."

Mr. Geare said, God is merciful, but He is also just, and we cannot trifle with Him. God in His anger punished the Amalikites as He does the wicked sooner or later. They may flourish for a time, but in God's own good time He rewards them according to their deeds. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God. Everlasting punishment will be the reward of all who reject Christ the Son of the living God. The millstones of God grind slowly but surely. Sometimes it seems as if God does not punish evil-doers, they prosper and are thought well of, while the righteous suffer, that is because our God is a God of love and gives us every opportunity to repent. He is not willing that any should perish, but He will not always strive with man. "As we sow so shall we reap." When I think of the hundreds of thousands of mortals who are living in sin, I am thankful there is such a body as that of the Iron Cross, the members of which strive against all intemperance, profanity and impurity in themselves and others. May God bless the members of the Iron Cross. Brothers be ever active to win others to Christ. The devil and his angels are active and are quite as earnest for our ruin as the angels of God are for our eternal safety. Satan is a powerful general and is never idle, he is always tempting, and when successful he rejoices. I can picture him scoffing and saying to his creatures, "Rejoice with me, a child of God has fallen." Be careful to walk in the path which Christ has made easy for you. Be not discouraged should you find it hard to bear the cross. Think of Christ's temptation, think of His battle with the Prince of darkness, think of His victory and let it comfort you for He is able and willing to save you, but should you fall, be not ashamed to confess your sins, your most secret sins, and receive absolution, receive the comforting words. "Go thy way thy sins are forgiven thee." Repent and do it at once, do it manfully; remember the eye of God is everywhere and He reads our hearts. Confess honestly. Watch and pray that ye enter not in temptation. Blessed is he who endures "temptation." Remember Christ is ever looking upon us, and that we must not grieve the Holy Spirit of God. Be temperate in all things, be pure in thought and deed, follow Christ's example in all things, work for Christ, be an obedient follower of your master, do not wait for some easy way to turn up, but do that which is in your power, be ever ready to battle for the cause of Christ, work individually, work together, be steadfast, and when the fight is over, Christ will welcome you and say, "Well done thou good and faithful servant, enter into the joy of thy Lord."

In conclusion Mr. Geare, in an earnest, telling manner dwelt upon the duty of all Christians to make a special effort during Advent to win souls to Christ and purity, and exhorted members not to neglect partaking of the Sacrement of Christ's body and blood.

At the conclusion of Geare's address all adjourned to the school room, when the business of the association was transacted.

A committee was appointed to confer with the Chaplain General as to the nomination of officers to fill the places of some that had resigned. Father Field said a few cheering words to the members and on behalf of the Guild, returned thanks to Mr. Geare for his address. God speed was said to Rev. S. Gibbons who is about to return to Nova Scotia where he will establish a Branch of the Iron Cross. Mr. Gibbons replied with an amusing speech and thanked the clergy of S. Clement's and the Guild for their courtesy, and aid for his church. At the conclusion of Mr. Gibbons' address the members and visitors partook of refreshments provided for the occasion.

The Boys' Gymnasium and Iron Cross Parlor is open to boys of good characters every night. A good work is going on there, under the care of Mr. Heffner. Once a month there are exhibitions of the boys' progress in gymnastics, and their feats are really wonderful. The boys pay all they can, and the Chaplain is responsible for the rest.

The Altar Guild.

The Altar Guild of S. Clement's Church has commenced work at its new room, No. 2032 Cherry street, Philadelphia.

The regular monthly meeting takes place upon the first Thursday in each month at 10 A. M. in the Chapel, when there is a short address.

The work room is open every Tuesday and Thursday from ten until one o'clock, for work on silk embroidery; besides these hours much extra time is given by many members who have the work of the Guild at heart.

During the working hours the Guild will be glad to show to any members of the parish or their friends interested in ecclesiastical embroidery, the work they may be doing. Just now the embroidery is principally on white silk, which will be finished by Christmas.

The Altar Guild has many new members this autumn, and hopes to accomplish much work this winter.

A Visit to Canon Liddon.

SEPT. 24, 1890.

"The visit was on this wise. I had spent a very delightful time with the Bishop of Lincoln, taking a lunch with him and walking about in his garden and among the ruins of the old palace in his company. I expressed my regret that I should not be in London in August, so that I could hear Canon Liddon preach. The bishop said I would probably find him in Oxford, and suggested that I should go there and see him.

"So while I was staying at Cowley, I got Brother Maynard to take me to see him. It was on St. Peter's Day, and after going to Evensong at the Cathedral, I crossed the great 'Tom Quad' to the Canon's rooms. He was very cordial, indeed, and asked me to come in the evening and spend some time with him. I protested that I ought not to take up his time; but he was kind enough to urge me to come.

"I arrived at his rooms at about a quarter-past nine, and had to wait a few minutes for his return, which called forth very polite apologies from him. He lived in a suite of rooms in the second story of the building at the right of the entrance to the 'Tom Quad.' He had a sitting room and a library adjoining, and a bedroom above.

"He struck me as very old-fashioned and courtly, being dressed in an old-fashioned dress coat and 'correct' English clericals. He had nothing more modern than candles for light.

"On the walls of his rooms were a few pictures, but nearly all the space was taken up with book cases. He showed me an engraving of Dollinger which the great German had sent him, also a picture of our Bishop of Iowa in cope, mitre, &c.

"Our conversation was mostly about America and the growth of the Catholic religion here, and about the Bishop of Lincoln's trial, "Lux Mundi" and Dr. Pusey. Canon Liddon thought "Lux Mundi" the most dangerous book which had been published since Essays and Reviews, because it come from the Pusey house, where orthodoxy was expected at least.

"He showed me volumes of munuscript letters of Dr. Pusey, Cardinal Newman, Cardinal Manning, Mr. Keble, the Wilberforces, the Froudes, and in fact all who were connected with the Catholic Revival. He also showed me the chair Dr. Pusey always sat in when visiting him.

"He gave me a volume of his sermons on the Magnificat, and some pamphlet sermons of his.

"He promised to send me a letter of Dr. Pusey's, which he did, with a very kind letter from himself, which is of almost equal value to me with that of Dr. Pusey. He gave me a cup of tea, and while we were drinking it the author of "Alice in Wonderland" ran in to make a call. He has rooms in the same hall.

"Canon Liddon was a fine looking man, of average height, thick gray hair brushed back from his forehead, gentle smiling eyes, and a scholarly stoop in his shoulders. He went down to the street with me, and expressed his regrets that he could not show me some further attention, but I was leaving town the next morning.

"He made one striking remark which impressed me very much. We were speaking of the cold exterior of the English clergy, both in the pulpit and in private, and he said he thought it came from a dread of unreality. He said nothing was so distasteful to an Englishman as unreality.

"I am afraid this will be very unsatisfactory; but you may make any use of the facts you choose."

Affectionately yours,

F. A. S.

S. Clement.

Continued.)

Therefore let us cleave unto them that practice peace with godliness, and not unto them that desire peace with dissimulation. For He saith, "This people honoreth me with their lips, but their heart is far from Me;" and again, "They blessed with their mouth, but they cursed with their heart." And again He saith, "They loved Him with their mouth, and with their tongue they lied unto Him, and their heart was not upright with Him, neither were they steadfast in His covenant." For this cause "let the deceitful lips be made dumb which speak iniquity against the righteous." And again, "May the Lord utterly destroy all the deceitful lips, the tongue that speaketh proud things, even them that say, let us magnify our tongue; our lips are our own; who is Lord over us?"

"For the misery of the needy, and for the groaning of the poor, I will now arise, saith the Lord; I will set him in safety, I will deal boldly by him.

For Christ is with them that are lowly of mind, not with them that exalt themselves over the flock. The Sceptre of the Majesty of God, even our Lord Jesus Christ, came not in the pomp of arrogance, or of pride, though He might have done so, but in lowliness of mind, according as the Holy Spirit spake concerning Him by Isaiah, "Lord, who believed our report? and to whom was the arm of the Lord revealed? As a child was He, as a root in a thirsty ground. There was no form in Him, neither glory. And we beheld Him, and He had no form nor comeliness; but His form was mean, lacking more than the form of men. He was a man of stripes and of toil, and knowing how to bear infirmity, for His face is turned away.

"He was dishonored and held of no account. He beareth our sins, and suffereth pain for our sakes; and we accounted Him to be in toil, and in stripes, and in affliction. And He was wounded for our sins, and hath been afflicted for our iniquities. The chastisement of our peace is upon Him. With His bruises we are healed. We all went astray like sheep; each man went astray in his own path, and the Lord delivered Him over for our sins.

And He openeth not His mouth because He is afflicted. As a sheep, He was led to slaughter; and as a lamb before His shearer is dumb, so openeth He not His mouth. In His humiliation, His judgment was taken away. His generation who shall declare? For His life is taken from the earth. For the iniquities of my people He is come to death. And I will give the wicked for His burial, and the rich for His death, for He wrought no iniquity, neither was guile found in his mouth. And the Lord desireth to cleanse Him from His stripes.

"If ye offer for sin, your soul shall see a long-lived seed. And the Lord desireth to take away from the toil of His soul, to show Him light and to mould Him with understanding to justify a just One that is a good Servant unto many. And He shall bear their sins. Therefore, He shall inherit many, and shall divide the spoils of the strong; because His soul was delivered unto death, and he was reckoned unto the transgressors; and He bare the sins of many, and for their sins was he delivered up."

And, again, He Himself saith: "But I am a worm, and no man; a reproach of men, and an outcast of the people. All that beheld Me mocked Me; they spake with their lips, they wagged their heads, saying: He hoped on the Lord; let Him deliver him, or let Him save him, for He desireth him."

Ye see, dearly beloved, what is the pattern that hath been given unto us; for if the Lord was thus lowly of mind, what should we do, who through Him have been brought under the yoke of grace?

[S. Clement concludes this passage with examples of humility given by Job, King David, Elijah, Elisha, and Ezekiel.]

[The reader must notice that S. Clement's quotations from the Old Testament are not exactly the same as those with which he is familiar. The reason is that S. Clement quotes from the Septuagint, which very frequently differs in mode of expression from our Authorized Version. The Septuagint is the Greek version of the Old Testament, translated from the Hebrew by Alexandrian Jews about 285 years before Christ, in the reign of Ptolemy Philadelphus, and tradition said it was the work of seventy elders in seventy-two days. The Jews of that period regarded it with so much veneration that they believed the translation to be inspired, S. Irenæus, in the second century after Christ, and S. Augustine in the fourth century thought so also. Of course, they cannot have thought that those elders were inspired to make an exact grammatical translation, when the discrepancies are obvious. Their meaning must have been that they considered the translators to be so imbued with the mind of that same Spirit who inspired the Hebrew prophets, that they felt themselves at liberty to alter the expressions, when by such alterations they could better explain to the people of their own day the mind of the Spirit. Even for ourselves, the differences in the Septuagint seem in many instances to make the sense clearer, and the idea of such a double inspiration makes it intensely interesting. "These differences, however, have led many students of the Septuagint to the conclusion that the translation must have been from a different Hebrew reading than that from which our Authorized Version is taken.

This may be so, but such an idea, instead of lessening, rather enhances the interest of those differences, investing them with a still greater antiquity.

Indeed the student of the Septuagint has an addition to his Bible. Isaiah xxviii: 16 is in our Authorized Version, "He that believeth shall not make haste;" whereas the Septuagint version quoted by S. Paul in Romans x: 11 is, "Whosoever believeth on Him shall not be ashamed."

So we have two precious texts instead of one, and this is by no means a solitary instance.]

1890.

A year seems a long time to look forward, but a year that is past seems as nothing. Its trials and troubles, its pains and worries and difficulties, are things of the past. The effect of them, however, remains either for good or for evil. It has been a year of unusual troubles both to the Parish and to families and individuals. The year began with the epidemic La Grippe, which was fatal to many, and left others in such a weakened condition that their life has been a burden to them. The young and the strong seemed to be specially affected by it. Many of our young people died from the pneumonia which followed.

One of the Fathers was obliged to go southward for a change, but found the epidemic as fatal in the South as in the North. No place seemed to be exempt from it.

The Rector of the Parish has never recovered, and left for Europe in January, hoping to shake off his illness by a sea voyage. One of the Sisters had a severe attack, and has never regained her former strength. This was a very trying beginning for a new year, when we hoped that all the Parish was quietly settled and in working order.

Then came the resignation of the Rector, which by the urgent desire of the parishioners was withdrawn. All this came in the Parish just at the beginning of Lent, and threatened the work of the Church with confusion, but Lent was well kept. The Retreats of the Parish, and of the Guilds, both of men and women, were attended in larger numbers than before. Easter was a time of anxiety, but we were cheered by a promise of a visit from Father Benson, the Founder of the Society of S. John the Evangelist. This promise was fulfilled in May, and nothing could have been more refreshing than the encouragement which was given us by his presence. He was delighted to find S. Clement so active and zealous and earnest, and promised to do his utmost to help the Fathers in keeping up the work. He visited Boston and Johnstown and Wilmington, giving Retreats and addresses, and was most cordially welcomed. Everyone at S. Clement's wished that he could stay. He brightened us all. During his visit the Hospital was opened by the Bishop.

Then the summer begun, and our Children's Seaside Home at Point Pleasant and our Boys' Holidays in the country took large numbers of children away for fresh air.

The Bishop of Corea visited us in July, and took away with him a member of S. Clement's Branch of the Iron Cross as a medical missionary.

Our Guilds resumed their meetings in September. Some of these are not parochial, and among those most useful to the community at large is the Guild of S. Barnabas, of which the members are nurses in hospitals and in private cases.

One of the Fathers took a Mission in Johnstown, in September, and traveled 2500 miles and preached 35 times in his short vacation of 20 days.

During the year twelve persons have given themselves to the service of God in the religious life. God blesses us not so much by what He gives us as by what He accepts, and as He has accepted our service and ourselves there is no need to be discouraged, but to wish one another a Happy New Year, and hope that through all our tribulations we may be brought further on our way to the kingdom of God.

Parish Notes.

Father Convers is not so well.

Father Page will visit S. Clement's in February.

An offering of a thousand dollars was presented at the midnight celebration on Christmas eve. The greater part of this sum was given by a few poor persons who wished to show their gratitude to God for blessings received during the past year. It is worthy of notice that when it was known that one of the Fathers wished to prevent any possible arrears in the Parish accounts for the year, three poor women brought each a hundred dollars of their savings and gave them as their offerings. Their example was followed by others, and though on the Sunday before not a cent of the money was in hand, the Father was able to present the money at the due time. There need be no fear for the financial condition of a Parish in which people are ready at a moment's notice to give their money and their lives for the work of the Church directly that a real need is known.

The Christmas festivities all passed off merrily.

The Christmas dinner and entertainment only wanted F. Convers to make it complete. Our thanks are due to the gentlemen and ladies who carved the turkeys and provided the amusements.

The Guild of the Holy Child had a most enjoyable feast on the eve of the Holy Innocents.

The boys of the Iron Cross, on the same evening, had their athletic exhibition and supper. The prizes for athletics were unique. A Christmas basket containing a turkey, oranges, etc., was given to each successful competitor.

The Sunday School festival took place on Tuesday, and the intermediate and infant school having their own festivals on Wednesday.

The Bishop of Wyoming and Idaho preached at S. Clement's last month, and gave a lecture on the Monday following. The collection on Sunday evening, amounting to $59.66, was given to the Bishop for work in his missionary diocese, and $10 41 was sent to Sheridan, where Mr. Snavely has a church—a friend of Father Field, at Johnstown after the flood.

The collections on Tuesdays in Advent were given to the Rev. J. H. Geare, for his mission work at Milford, Delaware, where he has built a mission chapel. We were sorry that the offerings were so small.

The Rev. F. N. Greaves, of China, will preach on Sunday evening, January 11th, for his mission.

Father Field has opened a Bible class on Sunday afternoons, at 3 o'clock, for men and women. It began with only 27 members, but it is hoped that the numbers will greatly increase as it becomes known. Bible study is necessary for all of us. There will be a course in the Acts of the Holy Apostles.

Confirmation classes are being formed. Persons who wish to be confirmed in March should give their names to the Clergy or to the Sisters, at once. Lent comes very early this year. Persons who desire books for Lent reading should look over those kept in stock at the Iron Cross office. There is no better book for daily reading in Lent than "Dover's Quiet Thoughts in Lent," with preface by the Bishop of Lincoln. The price is only 25 cents.

Father Hall's sermon on Canon Liddon, preached at S. Clement's, can be had at the Iron Cross office, 2021 Cherry street.

The Rev. G. T. Griffith, who has assisted us since Easter, has received a call to a large Parish in Iowa. Lyons and Clinton have long been in need of a good Priest, and though we are sorry to lose Mr. Griffith, and extremely grateful to him for his good work in the Parish, we shall feel that it is a great advantage that another good outpost of the Catholic Faith should be upheld.

It is a shame for us to complain at S. Clement's that we have not enough Priests. One of the Fathers has lately been asked to name Priests for fourteen different Parishes which have no Priest. Some of these, it is true, are too poor to support a Priest and family, but none the less is the need felt of a good, single, self-denying man to work till better times come.

The people of the Parish will deeply regret to hear that Father Convers is not so well. He has had another bad attack of illness, and though we may hope for his return in time, yet it is felt from his letters that the time must be indefinite.

Father Page, the Superior General S. S. J. E., has written most kindly that he will pay us a short visit next month. He already loves S. Clement's by what he has heard of it, and we are sure that all will give him a most hearty welcome.

It is never any use to ask the Fathers "How are you?" They have not time to consider the question. Happily the two who are now at S. Clement's are in absolutely blooming health, and determined by the grace of God not to be overcome by any difficulties.

The Clergy of the Parish have received a communication from the Guild of S. Vincent for Acolytes to the effect that at the last meeting of the Guild the following resolution was passed:

Whereas, In case of death it is frequently desired by relatives of the deceased to leave the body in church the night before burial;

Resolved, That the Guild of S. Vincent volunteers to watch with the body, and to say prayers in the church during the night for the repose of the soul of the deceased whenever it is so desired.

The Iron Cross Convention will take place at S. John's Church, Varick street, New York, on January 26th.

People interested in the boys of the Iron Cross are requested to send their subscriptions to Father Field. The Iron Cross Parlor and Gymnasium is open every night, and hundreds of boys are made happy by it.

There have been over four thousand attendances this year, and more than a thousand boys enjoyed the excursions.

Letters from Father Benson.

Lyons, November 7th, 1890.

I am writing at the railway station. Yesterday I spent at Paris. In the morning I was at la Madeleine. There was a great wedding there at mid-day. The church was almost full. I thought it must be some one of importance, but I asked several officials, and none could tell me the bridegroom's name! A vast amount of plants were brought to decorate the sanctuary. They hid the reredos of angels in marble, which was, perhaps, an improvement.

In the afternoon I went to S. Sulpice, a glorious church in itself and in its memories. The choir were in a large chamber behind the altar. I suppose they were the students. At 7.30 there was a service said by the Priest in the nave, I suppose the Evening Prayer, but I could not hear. It was too short for Vespers or Compline. Then a sermon. Then the choir sang a Psalm. The altar had a curtain drawn up behind to serve as a reredos—black, with a large white cross upon it. All Souls seem to overpower All Saints—in attention as, I am afraid, they also do in numbers!

After this prayer there was a sermon upon Purgatory, and the blessedness of helping our friends there. Then the Psalm. Then a second sermon upon venial sins, by another preacher. The preaching was good, but the subject unfortunate.

I came on at night to Lyons, and got here at 7.30 A. M. I went to the Cathedral, and heard Mass in a side Chapel, which seemed to be the principal one. There was nothing at the High Altar. The Canons, when they did kneel, knelt up upon their seats with their faces to the wall. After this I went to Fourvieres. A good woman on the hill seemed to think me profane, because I did not buy a tallow-dip which she offered me, under the idea that it would add to the pleasure of Madonna, the Protectress of Lyons. I did not think that the B. V. M. would very much care for such an attention. I had gone up, not so much to visit Fourvieres as to visit S. Irenaeus, but I was misdirected as to the church where he is buried, and so I came down the hill without getting there. It was there some thirty-five years ago. It is a church which carries one back to the earliest times, but I am afraid modern Lyons thinks much more of Fourvieres, with its dolls and dips.

I am going on this afternoon to Nismes.

With love to all,
Yours affectionately in our Lord,
R. M. BENSON.

Getting near Port Said,
Nov. 12th, 1890.

We shall reach Port Said to-morrow morning. The weather has been beautiful, but my fellow passengers who left England a week before me had a hard time in the Bay of Biscay. There are a good many friends on board; Mr. Rivington and his daughters, and Miss Maconochie; Surgeon General and Mrs. Webb; Mr. Punnett; Mrs. Hastings, who was at Bedford during Lent, and who sits next to me at dinner; Colonel Laughton, who has met some of us in former years; Osmond, a nephew of Trinder, who was at Toddington. There are five of us Priests—Maloney, C. M. S.; Huleatt, continental Chaplain at Luxor; Scott-Brown, junior Chaplain at Bombay; another, whom I have not seen.

There is a large party of missionaries, one Congregationalist, one Australian going to Assam, from a new society formed in the Colonies, and several ladies. We have a Bible class together every morning, taking our turn in leading it. Subject, the Epistle to the Hebrews. I cannot say how near we come to S. Paul's meaning, but at any rate we approach it from different sides.

Our voyage has not been an eventful one, but you may tell Bro. John, with my love, that the electric light has been very useful in shedding its brightness on the Psalter.

We saw the Straits of S. Boniface, Stromboli, and Messina I am afraid my ideas of the respective dangers of Scylla and Charybdis have rather dwindled away in face of the reality. Ætna was scarcely visible.

There is no place on board where one can have sufficient quiet for a Celebration, but on Sunday I had an extra service, to which a good many people came. Of course there was the regular ship service in the morning. So many people would like a daily Morning Prayer, that I mean to try and begin it to-morrow.

I have been reading Bissell's book upon the Pentateuch. It is a very valuable one, exposing the utter baselessness of the theories put forward by Willhausen. He is an American, who has spent many years in Germany, and is personally familiar with the leaders of the controversy.

Love and blessing to all,
Yours affectionately,
R. M. B.

S. Clement.

Continued.)

The fact that our Lord and His Apostles quoted from both versions shows, that they regarded them to be of equal value, and this surely is a sufficient answer to those who would now impugn the correctness and orthodoxy of the Septuagint version. Our Lord and his Apostles quoted sometimes from the Septuagint version, and there is a material difference between S. Matthew xiii: 15; Acts of the Apostles xxviii; 27, and our Authorized Version from the Hebrew in Isaiah vi: 10.]

PARAGRAPH 28.

Since all things are seen and heard, let us fear God and forsake the abominable lusts of evil works, that we may be shielded by His mercy from the coming judgments. For where can any of us escape from His strong hand? And what world will receive any of them that depart from His service? For the holy writing saith: "Where shall I go, and where shall I be hidden from Thy face? If I ascend into the heaven, Thou art there; If I depart into the farthest parts of the earth, there is Thy right hand; if I make my bed in the depths, there is Thy Spirit."

Whither then shall one depart, or where shall one flee from Him that embraceth the Universe?

Let us, therefore, approach Him in holiness of soul, lifting up pure and undefiled hands unto Him, with love towards our gentle and compassionate Father, who made us an elect portion unto Himself, for thus it is written: "When the Most High divided the nations, when He dispersed the sons of Adam, He fixed the boundaries of the nations according to the number of the angels of God. His people Jacob became the portion of the Lord, and Israel the measurement of His inheritance." And, in another place he saith: "Behold, the Lord taketh for Himself a nation out of the midst of the nations, as a man taketh the first-fruits of his threshing-floor, and the Holy of holies shall come forth from that nation." Seeing, then, that we are the special portion of God, let us do all things that pertain unto holiness: forsaking evil speakings, drunkenness and tumults and hateful lusts, abominable adultery, hateful pride—"For God, He saith, resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the lowly." Let us, therefore, cleave unto those to whom grace is given from God. Let us clothe ourselves in concord, being lowly-minded and temperate; holding ourselves aloof from all backbiting and evil-speaking; being justified by works and not by words. Let our praise be with God, and not of ourselves; for God hateth them that praise themselves. Let the testimony to our well-doing be given by others, as it was given unto our fathers who were righteous.

Boldness, and arrogance, and daring are for them that are accursed of God; but forbearance, and humility, and gentleness are with them that are blessed of God.

The good workman receiveth the bread of his work with boldness, but the slothful and careless dareth not look his employer in the face. It is therefore needful that we should be zealous unto well-doing, for of Him are all things, since He forewarneth us saying, "Behold the Lord, and His reward is before His face, to recompense each man according to his work." Let our boast and our confidence be in Him; let us submit ourselves to His will. Let us mark the whole host of His angels, how they stand by and minister unto His will. For the Scripture saith, "Ten thousands of ten thousands stood by Him, and thousands of thousands ministered unto Him: and they cried aloud, Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of Sabaoth; all creation is full of His glory."

Yea, and let us ourselves, then being gathered together in concord with intentness of heart, cry unto Him as from one mouth earnestly, that we may be made partakers of His great and glorious promises, for He saith, "Eye hath not seen, and ear hath not heard, and it hath not entered into the heart of man what great things He hath prepared for them that patiently await Him."

How blessed and marvelous are the gifts of God dearly beloved! Life in immortality, splendor in righteousness, truth in boldness, faith in confidence, temperance in sanctification! And all these things fall under our apprehension. What, then, think ye, are the things preparing for them that patiently await Him? The Creator and Father of the ages, the All-holy One Himself knoweth their number and beauty. Let us therefore contend that we may be found in the number of those that patiently await Him, to the end that we may be partakers of His promised gifts. But how shall this be, dearly beloved? If our mind be fixed through faith towards God; if we seek out those things which are well pleasing and acceptable unto Him; if we accomplish such things as beseem His faultless will, and follow the way of truth, casting off from ourselves all unrighteousness and iniquity, covetousness, strifes, malignities and deceits, whisperings and backbitings, hatred of God, pride and arrogance, vain-glory and inhospitality; for they that do these things are hateful to God, and not only they that do them, but they that consent unto them.

This is the way, dearly beloved, wherein we have found our salvation, even in Jesus Christ, the High Priest of our offerings, the Guardian and Helper of our weakness. Through Him let us look steadfastly unto the heights of the heavens, through Him we behold as in a mirror His faultless and most excellent visage; through Him the eyes of our hearts were opened; through Him our foolish and darkened mind springeth up unto the light; through Him the Master willed that we should taste of the immortal knowledge.

It is written that "He maketh His angels spirits, and His ministers a flame of fire;" but of His Son the Master said thus: "Thou art My Son; I this day have begotten Thee. Ask of Me, and I will give Thee the Gentiles for Thine inheritance, and the ends of the earth for Thy possession." And, again, He saith unto Him: "Sit Thou on My right hand, until I make Thine enemies a footstool for Thy feet."

Who, then, are these enemies? They that are wicked and resist His will.

Let us, therefore, enlist ourselves, brethren, with all earnestness in His faultless ordinances. Let us mark the soldiers that are enlisted under our rulers, how exactly, how readily, how submissively they execute the orders given them. All are not prefects, nor rulers of thousands, nor rulers of hundreds, nor rulers of fifties, and so forth; but each man in his own rank executeth the orders given by the king and the governors. The great without the small cannot exist, neither the small without the great. There is a certain mixture in all things, and therein is utility. Let us take our body as an example. The head, without the feet is nothing; so, likewise, the feet, without the head, are nothing; even the smallest limbs of our body are necessary and useful for the whole body; but all the members conspire and unite in subjection, that the whole body may be saved.

So, in our case, let the whole body be saved in Christ Jesus, and let each man be subject unto his neighbor, according as also he was appointed with his special grace. Let not the strong neglect the weak, and let the weak respect the strong. Let the rich minister aid to the poor; and let the poor give thanks to God, because He hath given him One, through whom his wants may be supplied. Let the wise display his wisdom, not in good words, but in good works. He that is lowly in mind, let him not bear testimony to himself, but leave testimony to be borne to him by his neighbor. He that is pure in the flesh, let him be so, and not boast, knowing that it is Another who bestoweth His continence upon him. Let us consider, brethren, of what matter we were made; who and what manner of beings we were when we came into the world; and that as it were out of a sepulchre and from darkness He that moulded and created us brought us into His world, having prepared His benefits aforehand, ere ever we were born.

Seeing, therefore, that we have all these things from Him, we ought, in all things, to give thanks to Him, to whom be the glory for ever and ever. Amen.

Parish Notes.

It is hoped that everyone in the Parish will try to spend a good Lent, and will try to arrange what services they can attend. All should try to be at the Celebrations on weekdays as regularly as possible.

The Bishop of the diocese will administer confirmation on Friday, March 13th.

All persons desiring to be confirmed should give their names to the clergy or the sisters as soon as possible.

Father Page, Superior General S. S. J. E., is expected on February 23d. Prayers are asked for his safe voyage and for a blessing on his visit.

Father Huntingdon will give two addresses to men in S. Clement's Church on Ash Wednesday evening and on the Wednesday following.

There will be a Parochial Retreat on Ash Wednesday. The times of Services and addresses will be found in the Kalendar.

The Iron Cross Retreat will take place on Sunday, March 8th, all men are invited to attend, but this year it will be necessary for the clergy to know how many will take their meals.

A Quiet Day for Women will be held in S. Mary's Church, Locust above 39th street, West Philadelphia, on Thursday, February 19th. The Holy Communion will be celebrated at 9.30 o'clock. The services will be conducted by the Rev. Father Huntingdon, of New York. Morning session, 9.30 A. M. until 1. P. M.; Afternoon session, 2.30 to 4.30.

A conference of Churchwomen will be held in the Lecture Room of the Church of the Holy Trinity, Walnut above 19th street, on Friday, February 20th, at 10 o'clock. Morning session, 10 A. M. to 12.30 P. M., Topic, "Deaconesses and Sisterhoods." Afternoon session, 2.30, Topic, "Training of the Young in Church Work."

An Ecclesiastical Art Exhibition will be held on the second Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday in Lent, at 1802 Pine street. The embroidery is entirely the work of Miss Morison, who is so well known for her skill in Church work of this kind. Miss Morison has been for so long assisting our Altar Guild, and has done so much of the embroidery in use in S. Clement's, that we hope that all will take this opportunity of seeing her work, and helping her in the good object for which she holds the exhibition. The tickets are 50 cents, and can be had from any member of the Altar Guild.

"The Way of the Cross" will be sung in Chapel on Tuesday evenings in Lent.

There will be a sermon on Wednesday at Evensong during Lent, at 5 o'clock.

Father Field conducted a Retreat for the Sisters of S. Mary, at Peekskill, on the eve of the Epiphany.

Two of the children of S. Clement's will be admitted as Novices, on the Feast of the Purification.

Two Novices were received into the All Saints' Community, at Baltimore, on January 24th.

Attention is called to the beautiful address by the Rev. J. H. Geare, on the work of nurses in the mission and the battlefield.

S. Clement's Hospital is flourishing, and there are now 11 patients. The annual report is in the press.

The Dispensary is carrying on its work more and more extensively.

The Guild of the Iron Cross.

NEW YORK.

The fifth annual convention of the Guild of the Iron Cross was held on the 26th ult., at S John's Chapel, in Varick street. Dr. L. T. Garrett, of Philadelphia, presided. Among the delegates to the convention were the Rev. C. N. Field, Chaplain General of the Guild, of Philadelphia; the Rev. F. Stubbs, of Baltimore; the Rev. H. Moffett, C. H. Terry, H. Reilly and W. Cross, of Hoboken, N. J.; James G. Phillips, G. M. Johnson, W. A. Johnson, of Philadelphia; Dr. E. W. Willis, of Baltimore; the Rev. Reeve Hoffle, of Newark; the Rev. W. C. Clapp, of Baltimore, and the Rev. S. T. Graham, W. W. Rutherford, Geo. B. Joliffe, the Rev. J. S. Miller, Alexander L. Hershman, the Rev. Jesse A. Locke and the Rev. C. M. Hall.

The opening of the convention was preceded by communion service.

The meeting was called to order at 10.30 A. M. An interesting report was read by the Chaplain General in reference to the present condition of the Guild. The Guild was founded in 1883 by twelve poor men in Philadelphia, under the direction of the Rev. C. N. Field. It now has 217 priests, with memberships in seventy-nine places in the United States. It has also several flourishing branches in Canada, and has members in England, Africa, Japan and Corea. "Its simple threefold pledge," said the Chaplain, "of Temperance, Reverence, and Chastity, has helped thousands of men and boys to live a better life and to influence others in the same way."

The following officers for 1891 were elected: Chaplain General, Rev. C. N.

Field, of Philadelphia; President. Dr. L. T. Garrett, of Philadelphia; Vice-President, C. H. Perry, of Hoboken; Secretary, G. E. Phillips, of Philadelphia; Treasurer, E. Hyer, of Philadelphia; Executive Committee, Rev. J. W. Williams, of New York; Dr. E. W. Willis, of Baltimore; C. W. Connell, of Newark.

The afternoon session was devoted to the discussion of the work of the coming year, and to reports from the branch associations.

An interesting sermon on the duties and work of the members of the Guild was preached in S. John's Chapel, by Bishop Talbot, of Wyoming and Idaho. There was a large attendance.

Address to Guild of S. Barnabas for Nurses.

By Rev. J. H. Geare.

It may be laid down as a maxim of general application that Truth in principle must lead eventually to Truth in practice; and if we apply this to questions in which the Church and the world take an equal interest, or rather, are equally involved, we should clothe the idea in some such phrase as this, that high doctrine leads on to high practice. In other words, dogma is always productive of increased activity and zeal in works of mercy, charity and love. It seems as though the movement commenced some fifty years ago, for the re-establishment of dogmatic truth had struck a sympathetic chord, deep in the hearts of the people and were indeed sounds gone out into all lands, producing its wonted fruits in acts of benevolence and charity and love. Now, I am anxious to say a few words only on one particular work of mercy—the nursing of the poor sick in hospitals and barracks. No one can fail to notice the change which only a few years has made in this ministry of mercy. From the very commencement of Christianity, the poor were always taught that in their time of need and distress it was the Church, and the Church only, which could relieve their wants of the soul, and at the same time stretch out the hand of brotherly help to effect the cure of the body. Yes, to Catholic Christendom belongs the merit of having first established hospitals or welcome "inns," where the twofold ministrations of recovery of health to the body and spiritual strength to the soul, was the sole aim of those, who with their great Founder's example ever in view, sought to spread abroad the whole of the Gospel system of bringing glad tidings of great joy to the souls and bodies of their fellow-creatures. We could not possibly in a small space compass the origin of the commencement of that great evil which sought to divide asunder and keep separate that which God Himself had so clearly joined together. Yet, it is a fact of history only, that the Reformation in England did cause the cessation of this systematic care of the sick from the sheltering protection of the Church; and the result was, as one might expect, the absence of any abiding religious principle, the failure to apprehend the true aim and object of suffering, and the difficulty to see that there was any higher motive than the personal advantage of making a living and earning (without any sufficient return of labor) a good equivalent, however unsuited such an one might be for the office of nursing God's sick and poor. "Sarah Gamp," thank God, is almost only a fiction now, but not so long ago, she was but the representative of a class, and the reason why is not far to seek. It was because she only estimated her services for their money's value, taking care not to give more than the quid pro quo, and probably would use her wages in mere sensual gratification, oftentimes seeking the situation when she was past the age of instruction and without any study whatever of her vocation, and too often coming to it, as a last resource, when every other scheme had failed. And what was the result? Once more inattention, uncleanness, want of sympathy, want of tenderness, and want of regard; with occasional evils, such as drunkenness, levity of conduct, evil temper, barely short, at times, of downright cruelty. A necessary evil such an one was, but who ever gained any real lasting good, or comfort, or benefit from such ministration? You, dear friends, can scarcely realize that you belong to the same family. Old things have indeed passed away. Behold, all things are now new. And don't you think the secret of the change is the systematic training you have gone through and are still going through—for yours is a work which as it goes along makes more work; you cannot acquire all you have acquired only at the hands of others. You have done the most part by your own power of observation. You are always learning for yourselves, and that is the secret of your success. Not content only with what you are taught, watchful observation, added to natural ability, good education, genuine love of your profession, kindness, gentleness, meekness, patience, purity, and a heartfelt appreciation of the aim and object of suffering. Thus out of a pure conscience you minister (do you not?) to the sin-stricken soul, while you daily, hourly, tend the poor suffering body. And to do this effectually, to be a modern Florence Nightingale or Sister Dora, how infinitely you are helped by joining such a Guild as this to which you belong. Florence Nightingale and Sister Dora testify so strongly that wherever nurses worked with the help and guide of such religious associations they always found good nursing for the sick, and the general well-being of both patients and nurses; and the secret is that you feel in your work of self-devotion that you are ministering to Christ, and therefore you are alive, out of the sympathy and deep love which must follow, to every want of soul and body of those once made members of Christ. It is this which raises your nursing to its proper rank and usefulness. We cannot be in each other's society for one hour, nay, less, without leaving on each other an impression for good or evil; how much then may you not influence those whose lives are often rough and hard, and by your good example and loving, patient nursing, assist God in His work of polishing those stones elect, and through suffering, moulding and carving them that they may one day adorn His spiritual temple above. Yes, dear friends, it is always a pleasure for God's Priest to walk through a hospital. The Princess of Wales says she never spends so profitable an afternoon as when she visits the infirmaries, and talks with the bright, happy nurses. I believe in the "United Kingdom" there are 27,500 beds made up in the various hospitals, and about 200,000 men, women and children annually come under the care of the nurses. What a responsibility! I have heard of a very few doctors who have sunk so low as to look only upon their patients as "cases," but I believe the time will never come when gentle, loving, tender-hearted women will ever nurse bodies made sacred by the touch of Christ, as though they handled mere soulless animals. Well, dear Sisters, we want more of you. Everywhere, in every work. In the mission fields, in places where disease and death hold sway, for lack of nurses and nursing. Will some of you ever go? If the shadow of some nurse passing by, could but touch some of those poor suffering Indians, Chinese, Africans, Caribs, Spaniards that I have ministered to, I believe an almost miraculous change would soon be effected. I have been in the course of my life Chaplain to a Workhouse in England, and a hospital, workhouse and asylum (all joined together) abroad. I hardly know which was the worst of the three. English workhouses want trained nurses. I remember in one, an old woman, racked with rheumatism, did duty as nurse in the sick ward, and when she could pull herself together, she would administer the doses. She was never clear, but thought she gave usually about the same dose, three times a day, until the patient got a bit better, and then she administered about twice. The medicine was poured once for all into a tin pot, and as she said, as regards measure, "she judged accordingly."

But foreign work does so want good nurses and nursing. I have seen sailors brought in sick with fever (Yellow Jack, as they call it, often times) and carried to the hospital, and die simply for want of nursing. I have been into Indian huts and found sick men and women lying in agony—yes, and poor little children too—all alone, their relations having left them because the Obeiah, witch doctor, has declared the hut to be bewitched. Oh, such sights, such smells, such animals, such heat, such pain; but worse than all, no power to alleviate. I remember finding a young girl of eleven years, left absolutely thus, to die. I baptized her, and gained her thus, I hope, to an entrance to the Home beyond. But if only one had had a nurse, kind, tender, and yet courageous, how many such a scene could be lighted up as by a ray from heaven. How many a sufferer could be made strong in limb, and stronger in faith, through the coming into touch with loving hands and sympathetic hearts. I used to preach to the poor lunatics, on a little island, people of almost every nation, men, women and children, crowded together like beasts in a show. Broken down little huts with mud floors, as their homes. The wild and tameless mixing with those who were only "slightly touched;" and when they fell sick, well, I used to say, "God, in mercy, take you." I have stood and watched the nurse and the food, until I shuddered, and could have thrown both alike into the sea whose waters came up to the very threshold. And in the towns in foreign fields, how again one has longed for a good trained nurse. How many lives could humanly have been saved, especially amongst women. I have sometimes buried seven and eight at a time, and in each case I might have said, with reverence, oh, nurse, if thou hadst been here our sister or brother had not died. Jesus will one day ask some of you to go and help his lost ones, and if you can do it as "unto Him," you will go. Some will fear the consequence, until a strong-willed and more faithful sister says, Let us go with him, even if we must die with him. Some will fear nothing. Lord whithersoever thou goest I will follow.

Of course all are not suited either physically or otherwise for foreign service, but these would only be the exceptions, which prove the rule that, generally speaking, those who have the will can find the way. I would never advise going abroad unless two could go together, or if only one, when at least she at once join some organized staff. I believe the great failure, where failure has been apparent, either in missionary or nursing work in foreign parts, is mainly owing to the mistaken zeal of one person trying to bear on her or his individual shoulders the work and responsibility of three or four. In no work as in missionary is the old saying "Many hands make light work," so truly verified. In most fields however (and very often there is no reason why one may not make a choice) there is an organized army, small, but plucky, which clearly understands every order excepting "stand at ease," and of this it knows nothing. With a good Bishop at its head, and a good nurse following, a little church army can make inroads in foreign lands, little dreamt of by those who think no work can be done without every facility being right at hand, and such machinery as you have provided in your hospital within easy reach. I don't mean to say that there is not a need of nurses here at home, but I fear in this as in so many things, we so narrow the thought that charity begins at home, that we allow it to proceed no further. You can have no conception of the hopelessness of any ministerial work where the special watchful work, known only to a nurse, cannot be obtained. Just fancy such a town as one in which I worked, south of Yucatan, with its 9000 souls, of every creed, of almost every nationality, a place rife with malignant fevers, whose houses, raised from the ground on posts of 12 feet high, have absolutely no retreat in times of sickness, or refuge from flies or sun. What hope for recovery is there, when such a treasure as a white trained nurse is a jewel, unknown, unheard of.

When I first went there, my lodgings were, indeed, on the cold ground; for I had scarcely better than a broken-down shanty, with two rooms, in both of which the rain poured through in wet weather, there being sufficient holes in the roof to admit of a fair abundance of water. I fell ill. Very ill. Oh, in the agony of fever how one longed for a little pure water! But there was none. It was the dry season. Tanks were emptied of all, save rats, cockroaches, and scorpions; oh how one gasped almost for a breath of air, which never seemed to come, because at that season there is the zephyr-like land breeze, with its pestilential, malarious effects, "our common enemy," so that windows must be closed, and then those flies, unselfish in their generation, for they bring all their relations with them, and when once you have been introduced, how familiar they are; their tameness seems almost shocking. Oh, if one had a nurse! How sick of old Carib women trying to nurse, and smoking their pipes awhile, you do get to be sure; and how tired of hearing them say, "Poor Buckra. Him die too soon. Massa nebber live him bery long."

Aye, and we want you in the barrack room, amongst the sick soldiers. I know something of barrack life, somewhat of barrack death. It is very awful. Some poor fellows are very rough, but they don't understand kind words, and they can hardly bear them when you use them, but they would get used to them if some of you nurses lived amongst them. Yes, I think so. I remember once nursing an officer who had sunstroke and fever. He was such a nice fellow—the son of a nobleman. Well, I left him one Sunday morning, as I had to ride off to service, and when four hours after I returned, I found him on the floor, with his brains blown out, and a revolver firmly clasped in his right hand. On a piece of paper was written: "Cannot bear this solitude, Geare!" Of course, this was an extreme case; but in ordinary ones, if only there was a good nurse—cheerful, that's what we want, full of common sense; who could be if not in two places at once, still, in one place twice very often, and above all, knew by observation the wants and weakness, and sometimes almost childlike wants of the sick one. How many a soldier's death, on a bed worse than a battlefield, might be made more smooth, more calm, less painful. The only danger would be not of growing old before one's time, nor of dying of overwork, but of becoming conceited. You would always be wanted. "Where is nurse?" "Why can't nurse come?" "O! do send nurse to me." But, then, you see you will have had such capital training here in Philadelphia, that you will get used to being spoiled, and more likely spoil all your many colored patients.

Some of the native smaller cottages have only one room, and (as I previously said) such sickening surroundings, all of which could be bettered, if we had trained white nurses. The blacks must have whites. They do not trust their own people, or any other nation which is not white. They fear witchcraft, sorcery, poisoning. But when missionary zeal really touches us with live coals from off the altar of love, and we send out our white Sisters, what a glorious future is there in store for the outcast and dreary!

Their only nurse is the Obeiah, medicine nurse doctor. The sight of whom is enough to frighten most invalids, unless, indeed, as too often is the case, they have got beyond the capability of being frightened at anything. About midnight this nurse arrives, preceded with two "tom-toms" and a backanee, a sort of weird sounding instrument. Sometimes, to prevent suspicion, he dresses as a bear and jaguar, and accompanies his low, monotonous songs with dances and leaps expressive of the animal he has seen fit to copy. When he arrives at the hut, all allow him to enter, and he sits down by the invalid and gently bleeds the right arm. By means of which process he has been enabled to draw out (he says) a small particle of a chicken bone, a sure sign that the sick one is bewitched, then he takes out of a basket a little bottle filled with colored spirits, and places within the "chicken bone." This bottle must be placed immediately over the threshold of the hut, that all may know that the witch nurse doctor has done his work. And so he has, because no one dares enter as long as that bottle is there. So that the sick one gets very little chance of any aid to recovery. (I haven't entered minutely into his mode of procedure.) But you will see at a glance the difference of treatment your patients get from that which a poor sick Carib or Indian receives. I have seen it said on this side that "such an one died without the assistance of a doctor." You could never say it in those parts.

Well, dear friends, it all sums itself up again into this important fact, that we must have trained nurses in the missionary field, on the battlefield, amongst our emigrants, soldiers, and heathen brothers and sisters. And mainly, the power to bring this to effect, and thus ameliorate matters, is in your own hands. I would urge on you the absolute need there is to read and gather all information possible on the question of nursing amongst the heathan, and soldiers in foreign lands, and at least you may stir up an enthusiasm in the breasts and hearts of others who will be induced, at all events, instead of wasting time, frivolously at home, for no one's good, induced, I say, to learn the importance of technical nurse training, inasmuch as half the serious social troubles arise from want of it, the excessive infant mortality, and a large portion of vice, sickness, and discomfort in the homes of working people may be traced to the faulty and inadequate education of women in medical knowledge.

May God bless you in your work, and crown all you undertake with such reward and blessing, as he has promised to those who have even alleviated with a cup of cold water, the sufferings of his most insignificant members, for inasmuch as ye do it to one of the least, ye do it unto Him.

Cowley S. John Iron Church.

The oldest thing of any note in the parish of Cowley S. John is the Iron Church. Father Benson became Vicar of Cowley, a Christ Church living, in 1850. He was then a resident "Senior Student" of that noble foundation, and Cowley was only known as a country parish, which was entered upon immediately after crossing the Cherwell by Magdalen Bridge, whose church was two miles beyond, and which stretched another two miles beyond the church. Much of the land was common and unenclosed. Soon afterwards enclosure took place, and the land near the bridge became divided into a large number of small building lots. Oxford's buildings began to spread across the bridge. Father Benson saw that a new suburb was about to come into existence, and secured plots which might be useful for Church purposes. In 1859 the Iron Church was erected, and he and his Curates served that as well as the ancient parish church. Then he came to live on Iffley road, near the bridge, and the suburb sprang up rapidly around him. At the end of nine years the Iron Church had to be enlarged by the addition of a south aisle, and there was then accommodation for some 300 worshipers, and the congregation went on increasing. It was known familiarly to dwellers in Oxford, who came to realize its humble existence, as the "Tin Tabernacle," but Mr. Golightly, a well-known and eccentric clergyman, who supposed his special mission was to defend the Protestantism of the Church of England, spoke of it as the "Ironclad," which threatened Oxford with a broadside of Romanism.

Parish Notes.

The visit of the Superior General has been the great event of the past month, and his coming has done good to all. Whatever may be the future of the Parish, all are ready to accept God's will as it may be shown to us, and this is the Religious spirit which we should expect to find in a Parish under the charge of Religious Priests. Their teaching would have been an utter failure, unless this had been the result. It is sometimes very difficult to see God's will in His providential dealings with us, or to see His wisdom shining through the clouds of our difficulties, but we can accept the fact of His love, and trust Him in everything.

Troubles of different kinds have come to the Parish each Lent, in order to try us and our Faith, but we have not lost hope, and as long as we are bound together in charity, no difficulty can detach us from one another in Christ.

It is not only the spirit of affection which must show itself in our life, but the spirit of sacrifice. Everyone of us must be ready to sacrifice personal interests for the good of others.

The Stations of the Cross have been sung in the Chapel each Tuesday evening in Lent, and from the numbers attending each time it may be concluded that this special devotion is of great assistance to many in realizing more fully the sufferings of our Saviour. Many have been surprised that they have not known this service before. It is very helpful as an assistance to meditation. The devotions might be used in other churches, whether they have the large pictures or no, by simply using the pictures in the book which has just been published by one of the Fathers, called the Way of the Cross. The pictures are photographic engravings taken from the Stations in Antwerp Cathedral.

The Retreat of the Guild of the Iron Cross has been postponed till Palm Sunday, March 22d. This will be open to any men who wish to attend, but notice should be given the week before that the number may be known and proper provision made for the meals during the day.

A good benevolent work for the boys has been going on at Twenty-first and Market streets, for some years, but the time has come when the Boys Iron Cross Parlor and Gymnasium must be closed, unless some generous people will come forward and help. It has been open every night, and the boys have paid all they could towards the expenses. Father Field will be glad to receive any sums for this philanthropic work.

The Guild of S. Mary will have a Retreat on Thursday, March 19th, which will be conducted by the Rev. Mr. Geare, Rector of Milford, Del.

The Guild of the Holy Cross will have its Retreat on Passion Sunday.

Offerings are much needed by the Sisters for mission work among the poor. There are a great number of cases which the Clergy desire to help, but are unable on account of insufficient funds. The Clergy were obliged to give one hundred dollars for coal alone, since Christmas, out of the small sum which the Society receives from the Parish. Offerings for charity may be given to the Clergy or the Sisters at any time.

Notes from Father Benson in India.

MAZAGON, S. Stephen,
December 26, 1890.

MY DEAR FR :--I arrived here by the night train in time for the Early Celebration this morning. I am sorry to say Br. Beale has had an accident. He fell down stairs in the dark on the morning of Christmas Eve. He did not break any bones, but has been in a great deal of pain ever since, and must keep still. He is doing well, and I hope there is nothing in the way of permanent recovery. The others are all well, and this Christmas has been a happy one, with a good number of communicants. I went to Poona on Monday night, after distributing prizes to the boys and girls at our Christmas break-up at Mazagon. We had the first Evensong of Christmas in the Church of the Holy Name. Several strangers and heathen were at the end of the Church. At midnight, Fr. Goreh celebrated chorally in Marathi, and I preached. Cecil Rivington interpreted for me. He does this very well indeed; his manner and fluency are quite equal to those of a native. I celebrated for the Wantage Sisters in their Chapel at 6, and then assisted Rivington in Church at 7. There were 123 communicants. Nanson celebrated at the Sassoon Hospital where the Sisters nurse, and he also assisted at the Military Chapel, S Mary's Church, consecrated by Bp. Heber At 10 o'clock, I admitted a Catechumen, and there were two Baptisms previous to Matins. Then we had our usual breakfast or dinner at 11.30, and after this, dinner at 2, after native fashion, by invitation of the young men in Students' Home. The table cloth spread upon the floor, with napkins in front of the places where we were to squat upon our heels, a party of about 20. Then we began with some very sweet pastry and milk and ghee; then rice and real curry, to be taken up by three fingers and the thumb. It was not dipping with one another in the dish after Jewish custom, for we each had our own plate, and alongside was a plate with various minor articles, intended to contrast with the sweet cakes, and certainly not failing of that result. They made one very much inclined to take refuge in the cocoanut pastry lying upon the other side of one's plate, which was very nice indeed. After this refection, we went to the Sisters' School, S. Michael's Orphanage, where I distributed prizes, with Rivington as interpreter. Then there was a gathering of friends, many of them Hindus, at the Sisters' School of the Epiphany. One or two of the men had wives or nieces in the school. It is wonderful how the caste prejudice though slowly yet surely is dying out. Some time ago several men came to a tea party at the school, men of different castes, a thing which, I suppose, was quite without precedent. Gentlemen of various castes do, as a matter of fact, set aside caste restrictions and eat with one another in private, but doing such a thing openly was quite unheard of. A Hindu who has nieces at the school persuaded them. He himself is wishing to become a Christian, but as he sticks to other Hindu customs, Rivington has not yet been able to admit him. We always have a cup of tea between 4 and 5 o'clock, then None and Vespers followed by Evensong at 6.30, in Marathi, Fr. Goreh singing it. After this, Fr. Goreh and I went to Mrs. Rope's house, where she had a few of the poor amongst whom she works. But we could only stay a few minutes, as there was supper at 8. In the evening, the young men exhibited some tableaux vivants of scenes at Bethlehem. They had a tent in which to act, and performed their parts admirably. The chief difficulty was the angel's face, which was not painted by the sun. Why angels should not let their interior light shine through a good dark skin I do not know, but there is a prejudice in favor of whiteness which, I expect, would have made Adam shudder if he had seen some of his Northern descendants. The natives here regard the Salvation Army (who go about mimicking the native undress) as lepers; and the paint box had much more approximation to the hospital than to the radiance of noon. However, the wings and dress of the angel were conceived in a most artistic style. Kings of the East were, of course, much more capable of being represented au naturel, and I hope they were not only mock kings, but real wise men The Sisters and a number of people came out into the compound and were seated, some on benches, some upon the ground, to see the entertainment. When this was over we had bagatelle and snapdragon for the students, and after Compline and the Nocturns of S. Stephen, I came back to Mazagon by the midnight train. When I went to sleep, lying upon an upper berth (a sort of cane bottomed sofa which lets down from the ceiling with a couple of chains) I left the Parsees talking to one another with an indescribable volubility, and as if they wanted all the train to hear, but as I could not understand, I went off into a far distant land of forgetfulness, until I was aroused by their beginning to bestir themselves with all the loquacity of the bird of morning, as we got close to Bombay. My first Christmas Day in India was thus, I suppose, very different from yours in England. You seem to have had intense cold of late. Poona was rather exceptionally warm. The weather was cloudy, and then it is always warmer. The sisters had part of their room decorated with mimic snow to let the people see what it looked like. We have, however, had a fall of ten feet of snow in India; not at Poona, but at Murree, near Lahore, where the S. Deny's Sisters are working. I hope to visit them in February. I heard this morning from the Bishop, I am sorry that I shall just miss him, for he is going to England in February for three months. Love and blessing to all at home.

Yours, affectionately, in Christ,
R. M. BENSON.

Cowley S. John Iron Church.

When Father Benson became the Superior of the rising Society of the Evangelist Fathers, further enlargement of the church became needful, especially as the vestry and the chancel would not hold the increased number of clergy as well as the growing choir. Accordingly, in 1873, a north aisle was added, and a small brick sanctuary constructed at the east end of the choir. Father O'Neill, who died in the India Mission field not many years after, now dignified the poor building by the title of the "Iron Minster," and the Father Superior led people to suppose that as in fourteen years the building had undergone two enlargements, it might be expected at the end of another seven years to attain its majority, and find itself grown up as a stone church. That, however, was seventeen years ago, and still the Iron Church stands, and still it is crowded with devout worshipers. The question, however, is—and it is becoming rather a pressing one—will it stand much longer? Certainly some furious gales have shaken it, but they have not done it much harm; there are, however, other influences than gales, more destructive, because more insidious. Thirty-one years is a long period for the existence of a temporary church, and the reader will perhaps not be surprised to hear that the tin or zinc coating of the corrugated iron plates has long ago disappeared, and left the iron to the alternate action of water and air. The necessary consequence has followed, and the plates are riddled with holes. Through which the rain descends in unpleasant abundance. One side consists of wooden boards. They are completely rotten. The church is lighted and warmed up to a very moderate point by gas, and has the usual two-fold disadvantage of all iron buildings, of being shockingly cold in winter and oppressively warm in summer. More than once, in the very depth of winter, the gas meter has frozen, and light and heat have failed. A Christmas Eve some twelve years ago was signalized by this unfortunate accident. The congregation came, and so did the choir and clergy, and a few candles dotted about in curiously extemporized candlesticks made darkness visible, but did not remove the freezing cold It was a wonderful exhibition of pluck and patient endurance. The full service took place, the sermon was not left out, and carols followed, and people seemed to think that they and all there must be in earnest in their worship. In summer ladies have fainted, and those who have faced the heat of the tropics say "this is worse." The district does not abound in wealth—the population consists largely of the artisan class, with laborers on one hand and Oxford tradesmen on the other. The congregation has done something lately towards cleaning and repairing the interior, but the structure is past repair, and a new external case for this manifestation of the Church is urgently required.

Ten years ago some money was collected for a permanent church. This, however, was expended on the construction of a parish church more than half a mile off, which serves the spiritual needs of the large population at the outside of the parish of Cowley S. John. This parish, though long ago cut off from the ancient parish of Cowley (or Cowley S. James, as it might be called for distinction), has a larger population than that ever had, and two churches at least are needed for it, and perhaps there ought to be a subdivision of it. The Church of S. Mary and S. John is efficiently and zealously served by our Vicar, Rev. W. Scott, and his Curates; but both churches are wanted, and the peculiar character of the work of the Cowley Fathers makes it important they should have a more dignified or at least a more suitable building in which to carry on their public ministrations contiguous to such a place as the city of Oxford, with its great opportunities of influencing for good the choice youth of England collected in the ranks of the ancient University.

In November, 1868, apout the time of the first enlargement of the Iron Church, Father Benson wrote:—"As I look back to the days when first I used to walk out from my rooms in Christ Church to the Advent Services and village night school in 1850, when all the ground which constitutes our present district was open, and contrast my duties as they were then with what they are now, it is impossible to help looking forward to consider what the state of things amongst us may be if God spares us to see another eighteen years of life on earth." This was written, not eighteen years ago, but twenty-two, and amongst other unexpected things must be placed the continued existence in all its discomfort—and considering that it is the only building in which the Fathers can carry on their own public ministrations, we must add, in all its meanness—of the Iron Church.

Let us not, however, conclude without some more cheerful memories. We must not use the usual phrase, and say the Church has re-echoed with illustrious voices, for it has no echo whatever, and music falls still-born, in spite of the greatest gifts and the most praiseworthy efforts. Nevertheless, illustrious and memorable voices have there been heard, from that of Samuel Wilberforce onward. He was at the opening—we cannot say, in the full sense, the dedication—and Bishop Mackarness has there confirmed. Under its dingy roof, one winter Sunday night, Bishop King was preaching at the moment that the Tay Bridge was being swept away by the gale, and there he, with gentle wisdom, called on the Fathers "not to provoke their children to wrath." There for thirty-one years, with only slight interruptions caused by evangelistic visits to America, has Father Benson followed the Apostle's command, "Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long suffering and doctrine." There many a soul has been turned to God, many a mind apprehensive of danger from High Churchmen and Ritualists been reconciled to the acceptance of the fullness of "the truth as it is in Jesus" preached on Catholic lines. There many a devout soul has ripened until gathered in amongst the souls of the faithful. The Church, mean as it is, is redolent of sacred memories to many a soul, and there are not a few who, while they recognize the need for a permanent and more suitable structure, will witness its destruction with a pang of regret. Nevertheless, those who minister there, and know the congregation best, are impressed with urgent need of prayer and effort for the substitution of a solid edifice.

S. Clement.

PARAGRAPH 42.

The Apostles received the Gospel for us from the Lord Jesus Christ; Jesus Christ was sent out from God.

So then Christ is from God, and the Apostles are from Christ. Both therefore came of the will of God in the appointed order.

Having therefore received a charge, and having been fully assured through the resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ and confirmed in the word of God with full assurance of the Holy Ghost, they went forth with the glad tidings, that the kingdom of God should come. So, preaching everywhere in country and town, they appointed their first-fruits, when they had proved them by the Spirit, to be bishops and deacons unto them that should believe. And this they did in no new fashion, for indeed it had been written concerning bishops and deacons from very ancient times, "I will appoint their bishops in righteousness and their deacons in faith."

Our Apostles knew through our Lord Jesus Christ, that there would be strife over the name of the bishop's office.

For this cause therefore, having received complete foreknowledge, they appointed the aforesaid persons, and afterwards they provided a continuance, that if these should fall asleep, other approved men should succeed to their ministration. Those therefore who were appointed by them, or afterwards by other men of repute with the consent of the whole Church, and have ministered unblameably to the flock of Christ in lowliness of mind peacefully and with all modesty, and for long time have borne a good report of all, these men we consider to be unjustly thrust out from their ministration. For it will be no light sin for us, if we thrust out those who have offered the gifts of the bishop's office unblameably and holily. Blessed are those presbyters who have gone before, seeing that their departure was fruitful and ripe: for they have no fear lest any one should remove them from their appointed place.

For we see that ye have displaced certain persons, though they were living honorably, from the ministrations which they had kept blamelessly.

Be ye contentious, brethren, and jealous about the things that appertain unto salvation.

Ye have searched the Scriptures which are true which were given through the Holy Ghost, and ye know that nothing unrighteous or counterfeit is written in them. Ye will not find that righteous persons have been thrust out by holy men! Righteous men were persecuted, but it was by the lawless: they were imprisoned, but it was by the unholy. They were stoned by transgressors: they were slain by those who had conceived a detestable and unrighteous jealousy. Suffering these things they endured nobly. For what must we say, brethren? Was Daniel cast into the lions' den by them that feared God? Or were Ananias and Azarias and Mishael shut up in the furnace of fire by them that professed the excellent and glorious worship of the Most High? Far be this from our thoughts. Who then were they that did these things? Abominable men and full of all wickedness were stirred up to such a pitch of wrath, as to bring cruel suffering upon them that served God in a holy and blameless purpose, not knowing that the Most High is the champion and protector of them that in a pure conscience serve His excellent Name: unto whom be the glory for ever and ever. Amen.

Wherefore are there strifes and wraths and factions and divisions and war among you? Have we not one God, and one Christ, and one Spirit of grace that was shed upon us? And is there not one calling in Christ? Wherefore do we tear and rend asunder the members or Christ, and stir up factions against our own body, and reach such a pitch of folly as to forget that we are members one of another? Remember the words of Jesus our Lord; for He said, "Woe unto that man, it were good for him if he had not been born rather than that he should offend one of mine elect. It were better for him that a millstone were hanged about him, and he be cast into the sea, than that he should pervert one of mine elect."

Your division hath perverted many; it hath brought many to despair, many to doubting, and all of us to sorrow. And your sedition still continueth.

Take up the epistle of the blessed Paul the Apostle. What wrote he first unto you in the beginning of the Gospel? Of a truth he charged you in the Spirit concerning himself and Cephas and Apollos, because that even then ye had made parties. Yet that making of parties brought less sin upon you, for ye were partisans of apostles that were highly reputed, and of a man approved in their sight. But now, mark ye, who they are that have perverted you, and diminished the glory of your renowned love for the brotherhood. It is shameful, dearly beloved, yes, utterly shameful and unworthy of your conduct in Christ, that it should be reported that the very steadfast and ancient Church of the Corinthians, for the sake of one or two persons, maketh sedition against its presbyters. And this report hath reached not only us, but them also which differ from us, so that ye even heap blasphemies on the name of the Lord by reason of your folly, and moreover create peril for yourselves. Let us, therefore, root this out quickly, and let us fall down before the Master and entreat Him with tears that He may show Himself propitious and be reconciled unto us, and may restore us to the seemly and pure conduct which belongeth to our love of the brethren.

Let him that hath love in Christ fulfill the commandments of Christ. Who can declare the bond of the love of God? Who is sufficient to tell the majesty of His beauty? The height whereunto love exalteth is unspeakable. Love joineth us unto God; love covereth a multitude of sins; love endureth all things, is long-suffering in all things. There is nothing coarse, nothing arrogant in love. Love hath no divisions, love maketh no seditions, love doeth all things in concord. In love were all the elect of God made perfect, without love nothing is well pleasing to God; in love the Master took us unto Himself; for the love which He had toward us, Jesus Christ our Lord hath given His blood for us by the will of God, and His flesh for our flesh, and His life for our lives.

Ye see, dearly beloved, how great and marvelous a thing is love, and there is no declaring its perfection. Who is sufficient to be found therein, save those to whom God shall vouchsafe it? Let us, therefore, entreat and ask of His mercy, that we may be found blameless in love, standing apart from the factiousness of men.

Who, therefore, is noble among you? Who is compassionate? Who is fulfilled with love? Let him say: If by reason of me there be faction, and strife, and divisions, I retire, I depart whither ye will, and I do that which is ordered by the people; only let the flock of Christ be at peace, with its duly appointed presbyters. He that shall have done this shall win for himself great renown in Christ, and every place will receive him, for "the earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof." Thus have they done, and will do, that live as citizens of that kingdom of God which bringeth no regrets.

PHILADELPHIA, FEBRUARY, 1894.

Lent.

The first number of the new ST. CLEMENT'S MAGAZINE is published too late to supersede the necessity of printing separate lists of the special Lenten services and sermons. But it is hoped that in future the magazine will be able to give timely notice to the congregation of all such special arrangements, and thus to effect a considerable saving for the Parish in the sum spent annually on printing.

It may, however, be worth while to point out that addresses or instructions are to be given during Lent on every day of the week, but two, viz.: The Bible Class on Tuesday afternoons, a sermon on Wednesday evenings, the usual address on Thursday nights, and a meditation on Friday mornings; there will also be the Way of the Cross on Friday nights at 8, and possibly at some other times.

There will thus be opportunities provided for every one to attend some service and instruction besides the ordinary Sunday ones. Though attendance at the Holy Eucharist on Sundays and festivals is the only absolute obligation of Christians in regard to Church services, there can be but little of the true spirit of the Christian religion in those who are content to neglect all opportunities of further devotion and instruction. Probably many of those who are now systematically absent from the week-day services could, by a little thought and management of time, attend at least one or two of them every week, especially with the increased freedom from engagements which Lent brings.

Attendance at the week-day celebrations also must surely be possible for many more than those who now are habitually present at any of them, and it is much to be hoped that this Lent will see a large increase in the number of those who come often to join in the Holy Sacrifice, and to pray in the immediate presence of Christ for His blessing on themselves and their Parish.

A. B. SHARPE.

Two laborers were trying to place a stone in position on the foundation wall of a new building. A crowd was standing around looking on, and each one offering his criticism and counsel freely and loudly, but not one lifting so much as a finger to help. "That reminds me of church work," said a passer-by to another. "Why?" "Because," was the reply, "two men are doing the work and twenty are doing the talking.—St. Mary's Chimes.

"I hope you go to church every Sunday, like a good Christian," said a pious woman to a young Oriental, whom she was trying to convert. "No," was the quick reply, "I go every day, like a Turk."—Milwaukee Church Times.

Application for admission to the choir should be made to the Choir-master.

Parish Notes.

A very enjoyable and successful entertainment was given under the auspices of the Guild of the Iron Cross, Tuesday evening, January 30th, in St. Clement's Hall. There were a few choice selections by the orchestra, an address by the chaplain, solos, vocal and instrumental, concluding with a comedy drama, Nobody's Money. The musical part of the entertainment was in charge of the choir-master, Mr. Remout, and the drama was looked after by Mr. Geo. W. Marcellus.

Guild of the Iron Cross.

The Guild at St. Clement's has lost its identity, and has become a merely Parochial Guild. The Iron Cross has a wider and more pretentious object, therefore at the meeting Tuesday evening, January 16th, the following motion was passed without one dissentient vote. Moved "That the Iron Cross Guild in St.

Clement's Church assist in the reorganization of St. John's Guild, and the Chaplain, Rev. A. B. Sharpe, be empowered to act in behalf of the Iron Cross, if the St. John's Guild be reorganized Thursday evening, January 18th."

There will be a meeting of the Guild Tuesday evening, February 6th, at 8 o'clock. This will probably be the last meeting, and for that reason it is hoped that every member will make an effort to be present.

The Guild of St. John the Evangelist.

This Guild, which has been for some years in abeyance, has now been revived, and will hold its first regular meeting on February 28th, at 8 P. M.

The Guild is composed of men who are communicants, and exists for the double purpose of mutual help in holy living and of furthering the work of the Parish in whatever way seems from time to time desirable. Much good work was done by it in the former stage of its existence, and it is hoped that a career of increased usefulness lies before it in the future.

Mr. J. Neill, 611 Drexel Building, will be happy to receive the names of any men who may wish to join it.

Church Bells—Their Origin.

Notwithstanding the most exhaustive researches by eminent antiquarians, the origin of the use of bells in churches is still a matter of considerable doubt. In connection with the subject, however, it is known that bells summoned Romans to the public baths, circâ, A.D. 180, and that they were also used in processions, thus passing naturally into the service of the Western Church. Their first recorded application to church purposes, so far as known, is ascribed to Paulinus, Bishop of Nola, in the province of Campania, A.D. 400; but it has also been maintained that Pope Sabrinus, 604, first used church bells. It is also asserted that they were introduced into France as early as 550. Benedict, an Abbot of Wearmouth, imported bells from Italy in 680, and in the seventh century the venerable Bede also mentions their presence in England. Some writers contend that the Greek Christians remained unacquainted with church bells until the ninth century. This appears incredible. It is known, however, that after the taking of Constantinople, in 1453, their use was forbidden, lest their sound should give a popular signal for revolt. Very ancient bells were often quadrangular, made of thin metal plates, hammered and riveted together. These date back to the tenth century. In the seventh century, bells were usually very small. Later, however, their weight was increased, and, in the eleventh century, a bell presented to the Cathedral at Orleans, France, weighed 2,600 pounds. In the thirteenth century larger bells were cast. In 1400, a bell was cast in Paris weighing 15,000 pounds; and at Rouen, in 1501, the "Amboise" bell, which weighed 36,364 pounds, was cast. In civilized times bells have been intimately associated not only with all kinds of religious and social matters, but with almost every important historical event. Their influence upon architecture is not less remarkable, for to them, indirectly, is due all the most famous towers in the world.

The first of these structures scarcely rose above the roof, being intended only for the admission of light; an addition to their height being, in all probability, suggested on the more common use of bells. Bells early summoned Christians to church and soldiers to arms. They sounded the alarm in fire or tumult, and the rights of burghers in their bells were jealously guarded. Thus the chief bell in a cathedral often belonged to the city, and not to the ecclesiastical authorities. Many a sanguinary chapter in history has been rung in and rung out by bells—notably, two massacres; that of 8,000 Frenchmen by John of Procida, at Easter, 1282, an event known as the "Sicilian Vespers;" and also that of St. Bartholomew, in August, 1571. In England, at the news of Nelson's triumph and death at Trafalgar, the bells of Chester Cathedral rang a merry peal, alternated with one deep toll; and other striking incidents of a similar character could be given ad infinitum. But their religious as well as their civil uses may be further noticed. The Ave Maria bell, tolled at 6 and at 12, to remind men of prayer to the Virgin; the Vesper bell for evening prayer, and also for compline, the last service of the day. The Sanctus, often a hand-bell in ancient times, was rung at the Sacrifice of the Mass; and at the present day, at the Church of St. Mary the Virgin, in New York, a bell on the roof of the church is rung at the elevation of the Host. The curfew (couvre feu), introduced into England by the Conqueror, rang at 8 o'clock; and in many parts of Great Britain, especially in University towns, at 8 o'clock bells are still rung. Among the most celebrated bells extant are the following: The Tzar Kolokol, at Moscow, cast in 1733; it laid in the earth 103 years, having been raised by the Emperor Nicholas I, in 1836. It was never hung nor rung, having been cracked in the furnace. It is used as a chapel, and weighs about 220 tons; its height is 19 feet 3 inches; its circumference, 60 feet 9 inches, with a thickness of 2 feet. The second Moscow bell, the largest in the world in actual use, weighs 128 tons; the great bell of Pekin, 53 tons; Nankin, 22 tons; Olmutz, 17 tons; Vienna (1711), 17 tons; Nôtre Dame (1680), 17 tons; Erfurt, 13 tons; Kaiserglocke, Cologne, 25 tons. Of English bells, the following are the most notable: Great Peter, York Minster (1845), 10 tons; St. Paul's, 5 tons; Great Tom, Oxford, 7 tons; Great Tom, Lincoln, 5 tons; Big Ben, in the clock tower of the Houses of Parliament (fractured), between 13 and 14 tons.

It may be said with truth that volumes might be written on bells; on their manufacture; on the combination of metals in their composition; on their various shapes, and on their tones; and in regard to this latter subject, it may be confidently asserted that it is one which only skilled acousticians possess the ability to intelligently define and illustrate.

PHILADELPHIA, MARCH, 1894.

The Envelope System.

We wish to remind our readers that the financial year of the Church ends on Easter Day, March 25th; and the envelopes of those who are pledged to contribute a fixed sum to the weekly offertory should be renewed before that date. It is most important for the financial interests of the parish that the envelope system should be thoroughly carried out. For some years past an annual deficit has been incurred by the parish, in consequence of the uncertainty of its income, which made it impossible to say, at the beginning of each year, how much money would come in, and how much we should, therefore, have to spend during its course. Thus, when the income fell short of the sum which had been counted on in regulating the expenditures for the year, there remained at the end of it a deficit which could only be wiped off by raising a special fund for that purpose. The recurrence of this difficulty has now been prevented by the introduction of the system of pledges, by means of which it is made evident at the beginning of every year what income can be counted on for that year, and what, in consequence, the limit of expenditure is to be.

It will therefore depend upon the amount pledged before March 25th whether the present rate of expenditure is continued, or reduced, or increased. If less is promised than last year, a corresponding reduction must be made in the expenses; if the same, we shall continue as we are; if more, we shall be able to relax somewhat our present necessarily parsimonious system of management. No deficit will be allowed, nor can any occur under this system. There is, therefore, no possibility of future special calls for contributions such as have been necessary in the past; the expenditures for the year being absolutely limited by the income, which is represented by pew rents, envelopes, and unpledged offerings. Of these the last item is the only uncertain one, and its probable amount can be fairly determined by a reference to that of the preceding year.

During the past year—the first of the envelope system in this parish—the pledges have been, on the whole, well carried out; and it has been possible, in consequence, for the first time for some years, to regulate the Church expenditures so as to avoid debt.

This is a great gain in a moral as well as in a financial sense. But we must all desire, for obvious reasons, that the amount of the pledges should be increased. It seems quite possible that it may be increased largely, if those who have hitherto not had pledges will take them, and those who have had them will try to make some increase in the sum promised. It should be remembered, also, that the principle of the envelope system implies that every member of the parish should make some fixed and regular contribution to its support; and, therefore, that pledges should be taken by individuals for themselves alone, and not on behalf of other members of their families, each of whom ought to make his own weekly contribution separately.

Blank pledges, to be filled out by contributors for the year 1894–5, will shortly be sent to all members of the congregation, and much of the well-being of the parish will depend upon the response they elicit.

PARISH NEWS.

St. Clement's Altar Guild has undertaken the care of the Church linen and vestments. Contributions are needed to provide materials; and seven yards of plain white silk to provide a chasuble for daily use, and materials for two purple cassocks, are wanted immediately. Contributions of money or materials may be sent to the Altar Guild, in care of the Rector.

The Young Men's Bible Class meets every Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock, and all who desire to become members are requested to consult Mr. J. Neill or Rev. G. T. Griffith.

FOUND.—A gold scarf, or stick pin, on the floor of the Chapel. Owner send description to the Editor, 1009 Clinton street.

The usual procession of palms will take place at 11 A. M. on Palm Sunday; and with the customary ceremonies, palms will be distributed to the congregation at the end of the service.

At the next meeting of the Guild of St. John, Archbishop Cranmer will be the subject of a debate.

The Lenten mission services will continue every Sunday evening until Easter. They are simple, consisting chiefly of hymns, and have been well attended.

A meeting of the Acolytes of the parish was held Wednesday evening, February 14th, to revive the Guild of St. Vincent. Mr. I. Ernest Linton was elected Warden, and Mr. J. C. Goodwin, Jr., Secretary and Treasurer for the ensuing year.

"The Boys' Club," for choir and ex-choir boys, would be grateful for contributions of books and games. Their one checker-board is in such demand that the games have now to be limited, and other games which have been played all winter are getting a little tiresome.

Drawing paper and colored crayons are in demand, and books that can be taken home are constantly asked for; also, small contributions of money towards the refreshment evenings, one in each month, to which the boys each contribute five cents a month. The Club meets every Tuesday evening in the choir room, where they will be glad to see any members of the parish who are interested.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Does any one know why the Church gates on Twentieth street are never opened except on Sunday and Christmas Day? The question is often asked, and I am puzzled for an answer. A PARISHIONER.

ANSWER.—The Twentieth street gates are kept closed except Sundays, Christmas, and St. Clement's day, to prevent children from making a playground of the garden, and destroying the shrubbery.

Easter Sunday the choir will sing the following music:

A Slanderer Rebuked.

A certain minister was anxious to show a lady in his congregation the evil of slander. So he asked her to go to market, buy a chicken just killed and still covered with feathers, and walk a certain distance, plucking the bird as she went. The lady did as she was directed, and then returned. "Retrace your steps," said the minister, "and gather up, one by one, all the feathers you have scattered." "I cast the feathers carelessly away," said the woman, "and the wind carried them in all directions." "Well, my daughter," the minister replied, "so is it with your words of slander; like the feathers which the wind has scattered, they have been wafted in many directions. Call them back, now, if you can. Go, sin no more." —Christian Herald.

BEHOLD, WE GO UP TO JERUSALEM!

We fain would follow to the Heavenly Place,
Whither our Lord hath pointed out the way.
We fain would see the radiance of His face
Beyond the opening of the gates of day,
For it is night, and few stars shine above us,
And for our tears we cannot look at them!
Yet shall we leave the world and those who love us
And go on upward to Jerusalem?

In this steep path our languid feet move slowly;
(The sky is darker now, the snow falls down)
It is the Lenten season, calm and holy,
And even nature wears an ashen crown.
But must our lives grow gloomy as the weather?
Shall we all pleasure for His sake condemn?
Pause not to question thus, but all together
Let us go upward to Jerusalem.

They say that those who love Jerusalem,
Are never tired of setting forth it's praise,
Sweet fruits grow there on ever-vernal stem,
A crystal river bathes the flowery ways.
The saints of olden times are softly telling
Of sorrows over now, and battles won,
And angel voices dulcet songs are swelling,
They all are happy there—yes, every one!

We need not go alone—a Hand most tender
Shall guide us safely all along the road,
And since He loves us so we can surrender
Our hearts, our souls, our dearest hopes to God.
Let us exchange each tarnished worthless jewel
For the true pearl of price, the perfect gem,
Yea though the hills be high, the tempest cruel,
We will go upward to Jerusalem.

The Power of Hymns.

A little while ago there was one of those colliery accidents which make a sensitive person almost shrink from the sight of burning coal. This time the shaft in the Dolcath Mine in Cornwall collapsed, and eight men were entombed.

After the rescuing party had been at work many hours clearing away the rubbish, they stopped and listened. It is a well-known fact that sound penetrates long distances in the body of the earth. As they put their ears to the ground in breathless expectancy, a faint sound of human voices was heard. Overjoyed to find their comrades still alive, the men were about to utter a shout of encouragement, when the foreman put his finger to his lips with a warning gesture, for the sounds from the imprisoned miners increased in strength until they resolved themselves into song.

From the depths of the earth, from the darkness and despair, there came the strains of "Nearer, my God, to Thee." Reverently the rescuers listened to this sublime death-song.

This hymn was followed by another—stronger in tone: "Jesus, Lover of my Soul." The rescuing party looked at each other in the dim light of the lamps. Tears were trickling down each miner's grimy face.

"Now, boys," cried the foreman, raising his pick, "that's the music to work by!"

Some time ago a railroad disaster occurred—even more horrible than the usual tragedy of this kind—and the cars, piled on top of each other, took fire. The heat was so great that no one could approach the wreck. Then it was learned that several people, hopelessly pinned between broken timbers, were being slowly burned to death. This awful fact was not announced by oaths or by frantic cries for help, but by the chords of a hymn that reached the stricken crowd.

Started by a masculine voice—some thought it the engineer's—the sacred song was taken up by another, and then another, until the chorus swelled above the horrors of the scene.

"E'en though it be a cross
That raiseth me—"

Soon one voice dropped away, and then another, and then the third, so that the agonized bystanders knew the very moment when the sufferers had passed into unconsciousness.

One of the most beautiful examples of the power of Christian song occurred at the fall of the Pemberton mills in Lawrence, Mass., many years ago. Suddenly, without warning, in the afternoon of a January day, the mill collapsed. It was filled with operatives. The ruins caught fire. Over eighty people were entrapped among the beams and girders, and were crushed, suffocated, or burned to death.

After the first cries for help, and the first wails of agony, when the hoplessness of their position became manifest to them, the doomed girls began to sing. Hymn after hymn rose from their parched throats. Voice after voice broke and was silenced. "Shall we Gather at the River?" "Rock of Ages, Cleft for Me," rose distinctly above the roar of the flames. Thus the poor girls sang their way into death by the sacred words that they had sung at church and Sunday-school, at home and among their looms.

The power of a Christian hymn has been one of the great beneficent forces in human life. It is almost impossible to overestimate it. Literature and art and oratory influence the emotions and conduct of men. Noble poetry haunts and inspires us. But in the trying crises of life—in temptation, or misfortune, or sickness, or sorrow, or even death—myriads of souls have been comforted and helped by the sustaining influence of Christian song.

Many a boy, in his first battle with the evil of the world, has been morally arrested and saved from ruin by the accident of hearing in a critical moment the strains of some dear old hymn often sung in Sunday-school, or with mothers and sisters on a Sunday night in the dear old home. "That is music to live by!"—Youth's Companion.

Confirmation.

The Bishop has fixed May 30th for the annual confirmation in St. Clement's Church, and classes for preparation will be formed immediately. All who wish to be confirmed should give their names to one or other of the clergy, and all who have not been, should resolve to take this opportunity. They may never have another.

By being confirmed, no fresh obligations are contracted as is sometimes thought. Every one is bound to do what God requires, whether confirmed or not. But in confirmation, strength is given by the Holy Spirit to enable those who are confirmed to perform their duties as Christians, which without God's grace they cannot do.

Preparation for confirmation consists of two parts. First, it is necessary to know the full Christian Faith, which all men are bound to believe. Secondly, it is necessary to become fit to receive the gift of the Holy Ghost by self-examination and repentance. Instruction is given in the confirmation classes on these two points by the clergy (or others appointed by them), who are thus enabled to present the candidates to the Bishop as persons whom they know to be fit for the reception of the grace which is conferred by the outward sign of the laying on of the Bishop's hands.

All that is necessary, therefore, in one who wishes to be confirmed, is that he should intend to do his duty as a Christian, and should desire to receive God's grace to enable him to do it. There are many in the parish who have not received this Sacrament, and who, it is to be hoped, will be found ready and fit to receive it at the Bishop's visit.

Easter Day.

Easter has been a bright and joyous festival in spite of gloomy weather, which perhaps had the good effect of making the crowd of sightseers who were present at the High Celebration, somewhat less than in former years. There was a slight increase in the number of Easter Communicants over that of last year, and the Easter offering was larger in amount than it has been for many years.

The music at the High Celebration was Stanier in F, and the way in which it was rendered by the choir showed that the zealous and able efforts of the choirmaster and organist (Messrs. Remont and Gaff) are already bearing exellent fruit.

St. Clement's Hospital.

At a meeting of the Board of Managers of the Hospital, held on Wednesday, March 28th, steps were taken to increase the income, and also to provide sufficient funds to equip and maintain the Colony Farm.

During the past year the work done has increased in every department, and if the friends of the Hospital will continue to help it, the work can be enlarged in every direction.

There is increasing demand for the services which the Hospital and Dispensary render to the poor, and it needs but the continued support of its friends to widen its field of usefulness and work of charity.

Contributions in money, and kind, may be sent to Mr. J. Howard Climenson, at the Hospital, Cherry and Claymont streets.

PARISH NEWS.

A sale of work will be held on April 11th and 12th in St. Clement's Hall, in aid of the work of the All Saints Sisters in this parish. Every one should come and make purchases, and all who are able should contribute articles for sale.

Help is much needed by the Sisters for the various works under their charge, in which is included, the superintendence of the Guild of St. Mary, St. Martha, The Holy Cross and The Holy Child, as well as of the Mothers' meeting, and Girls' night school, the visiting of the sick, and the relief of the needy.

Three Sisters are in residence at 2034-36 Cherry St., and their work is entirely given to St. Clement's parish, under the direction of the Rector. They are about, in all probability to lose possession of 2036 Cherry St. (which they now have rent free), in which case it will be very difficult to find accommodation for the various meetings now held there, unless someone will generously provide them with new premises, or the means of retaining their present ones.

All who come to the sale of work may be sure that they will both have a good time, and aid in a charitable undertaking. Tickets may be obtained of any of the members of the Guilds, or at the Sisters' House. Admission, 10 cts.; season ticket, 25 cts.

Confirmation Classes.

Confirmation Classes at the Sisters' House, to commence first week in April.

For Young Girls.—Tuesdays, 7.30 P. M.; Fridays, 2.30 P. M.

For Women.—Wednesdays and Fridays, 7.30 P. M.

"The Choir Boys' Club" is rejoicing in some donations. Another checker-board has been received, and a number of other games, and two persons have kindly sent money for their entertainment evenings. The boys are pleased at the interest taken in them and their club. They still need books for a lending library. If those who can would each give one book, they might soon have one. There are many good books for boys to be had for a small sum, which would give them great pleasure and help them. Boys have great capabilities, and are our future men.

The Women's Retreat.

The Women's Retreat this year was conducted as it was last year, by the Chaplain of St. Mary's Guild, the Rev. Geo. T. Griffith. The day chosen was Thursday, of Passion Week. The attendance was much larger than a year ago. About a hundred women were out during the day. Some kind ladies of the parish, under the direction of the Sisters of All Saints, took care of twenty-five babies and little children at the Mission Home, thus freeing the mothers of all anxiety in that direction for one day at least. The Sisters provided a first-class dinner and supper for the women, to enable as many as possible to remain in church all day.

The Children's Service at 9.15 has never been so largely attended, as is the case this year. It is a common thing now, since Dr. Garrett's return to the good work, to see as many boys present as there are girls.

"Easter."

Ere this number of the magazine is issued, the great feast of the Catholic world will have come and gone. To many, alas how many, that day, that "Queen of Days," will have no deeper meaning than that of being a day for the display of outward grandeur and the annual parade of fashion.

But to us Catholics it has (and shame on us if it has not) the most vital of issues. It touches our very existence itself, and if in the observance of our Easter festival there be nothing deeper than the enjoyment of some very pretty ceremonial and the exchange of a few pious sentiments, then indeed are we devoid of that manly intelligence which is the glory of the Catholic Church.

What then is the origin of this festival, and why do we observe it?

It takes its origin from Him Who "is the first begotten from the dead and the beginning of the creation of God."

It takes its origin from Jesus Christ our Lord, Who, as on this day, rose again from the dead. It is "the day the Lord hath made," and is kept in honor of His resurrection from the dead, to keep ever before our minds that we trust not for our salvation to a dead Christ, but to the Anointed of God, Who "is alive for evermore," and upon Whom death hath no more dominion.

The original name of this festival was (πάσχα) "pascha," and included in its observance Good Friday, and is mentioned under this name in Acts xii: 4.

In the time of St. Leo the Great, the distinction was made between the Passover of the Lord's death and the Passover of His resurrection, and from this time forward the name pascha came to be understood alone of Easter Day.

All over the north of England the ancient name still survives in the designation given to the Easter eggs, which are called by the people "pasque" eggs, or "paste" eggs.

The present name Easter is derived from the Teutonic urstan, to rise, and can be traced back to the time of the venerable Bede, who makes mention of it as taking place about the time of the vernal equinox.

Its universal observance on the present day by the whole English-speaking world, dates back to the days of Archbishop Theodore, of Canterbury (A. D. 669).

Prior to this date the greatest disputes arose year after year as to the proper day for its observance; some contending that as it took the place of the Jewish Passover it should be observed on the same day as the Passover of the Jews, namely, the 14th day of the month Nisan, corresponding to our March.

On the other hand were those who contended that as the Lord rose from the dead on the first day of the week or Sunday, that it should therefore always be observed on the Sunday nearest to the Feast of the Passover.

Finally, 325 A. D., the dispute was settled by the Church, and since then the Rule has been that printed in our Office Book, that:

"Easter Day shall always be the First Sunday after the full moon which happens upon or next after the 21st of March, and if the full moon happen upon a Sunday, Easter Day is the Sunday after."

And now as to why we observe it.

We observe it as Catholics, first of all, because the Church, which alone has any authority to decree observances, has commanded us so to do.

It is not because it commends itself to our understanding or reason; although it does so commend itself; but because we are to obey that command of our Lord's which is in the Bible itself, although so very little obeyed:—"Hear the Church."

In the second place, we observe Easter because it commends itself to our reason and understanding.

For seeing that we believe in the existence and resurrection of Christ our Lord. Our love to Him would prompt us, as the outcome of our reason, to make some commemoration of such an important event.

And lastly we observe it, because we believe Our Lord is God and Man, and our whole hope being fixed upon Him alone for Everlasting Life, if He liveth forever, we too shall live forever; because He lives, we shall live also; and hence we come to His church to worship on that day, not somebody who is far away from us, but "not far from every one of us," even very nigh to us in the Resurrection Life. One Who dies no more, and being united to us and we to Him, we shall live forever.

And because of this union with Our Risen and Ever Blessed Lord, "our faith is not vain," but mighty through God to the uprooting of the strongholds of sin, Satan and death.

So then, we sing with all our hearts and souls on Easter Day and every Lord's Day, being "joyful and glad of heart," believing it as firmly as we do the shining of the sun at noonday. "And the third day He rose again, according to the Scriptures." J. G. E.

Archbishop Cranmer was the subject of a debate at the meeting of St. John's Guild, Wednesday evening, March 28th. Both sides were agreed that Cranmer was a very weak man, and the defense endeavored to prove that, as he was a creature of Henry's own making, he would do his bidding, without stopping to inquire whether it was right or wrong.

PHILADELPHIA, MAY, 1894.

Two Sides to the Question.

Many mistakes, some of them of a very destructive kind, are made about the church through forgetfulness or ignorance of one or other of the two elements of which it is made up.

The church is partly human, partly Divine; it is composed of human beings, sinful and fallible as all human beings must be in this world; but their sins and errors are constantly overruled by the power of God for His glory and the good of souls. The interests of the church, therefore, depend partly on human effort, partly on the grace of God. Grace cannot be used without human co-operation, but man's labor without grace is ineffective, or worse.

Those who forget either of these two parts of the truth fall inevitably into great mistakes of a practical kind, and those who try to advance the interests of the church in any of the ways which either of these one-sided views support, are apt to do more harm than good by their zeal.

Thus it is sometimes thought that in church work it is right to disregard all maxims of ordinary prudence. God, it is supposed, will take care of His own—and they therefore need to take no care of themselves. Forethought, economy, system and perseverance are thus often conspicuously absent from church and parish politics; and carelessness, irregularity and recklessness, such as would bring ruin to any worldly enterprise, are supposed to be no hindrance to the welfare either of individuals or of societies in the church. Work may be done spasmodically, debts which cannot be paid may be incurred; in general, God may be served when people will, and as they will, and all will be well; if only these errors (not to call them sins) are committed "in faith!"

In other words, Satan still tempts people as he tempted our Lord, bidding them "cast themselves down," and trust in God to protect them from the consequences of their own folly or negligence.

On the other hand, there are zealous and enthusiastic persons whose energy and self-denying activity are often worthy of all praise, but, who think the church can be "boomed" as if it were a joint stock company, or a social club. "Get people interested," they say, "then they will subscribe handsomely, and everything will succeed; get star preachers; have fine and costly music; start social organizations in the parish; advertise yourselves wide; have abundance of ice-cream, tea and coffee, cakes and ale—"make things hum" generally, and you will be a shining success!

This is too often the modern interpretation of the command to "compel them to come in." But the work of the church cannot be done successfully by purely worldly methods, any more than it can afford to despise them altogether. A "boom" may be of use to a society of entirely natural origin, but it cannot of itself benefit the church, which is founded on supernatural realities. There have been such things in plenty in the church, but they have brought no real help to the cause of God.

There was a "boom" in the early days of our Lord's ministry, when "great multitudes followed Him," and they ate of the loaves and were filled. But no sooner did He reveal to them the mystery of the Blessed Sacrament than the multitude melted away. The "boom" had failed. Great multitudes followed Him again on Palm Sunday; but no sooner did the suspicion of the chief priests and elders fall on them than "Jesus was left alone with the twelve." The "boom" had failed again.

When Constantine and the Roman empire became Christian, the church had a great outward success. Instead of being proscribed, persecuted, and looked down upon, as it had been, it became rich, prosperous and fashionable. And immediately the great heretics, with Arius at their head, arose, with all the evils which they brought upon the church, and from which it still suffers. The "boom" had worse than failed.

When the disciples of St. Francis of Assisi went forth in holy poverty to seek and to save the lost, they were treated as fanatics, visionaries or madmen. But they re converted the kingdoms of the West. By-and-by they became influential; they acquired property, they received dignities. And immediately they became divided among themselves; they fostered and taught heretical doctrines; they were overcome with sloth and greed, and ceased to be the great spiritual power they had been in the days of their poverty and simplicity. The "boom" almost ruined them.

So it is always. God needs men's money, zeal, wisdom and enthusiasm. But He uses these things in His own way, not to give the church an external appearance of worldly prosperity, but to build it up slowly, silently and securely by the power of the cross.

We may not dare to neglect our part in the work of the Church, whatever the part may be that we are called to take. But do what we will, it is God alone that giveth the increase, and He gives it in His own way, not in ours. All is not success that seems to be such, nor is all failure that the world calls by that name. Great efforts and great sacrifices made in God's service seem from time to time to be useless, so far as present and outward results are concerned, but they never can really fail of their purpose, or lose their reward, when they are the outcome of faith and love.

An Open Letter.

To the Editor.

Sir:—I wish to put a few facts about the offertory pledges before the congregation. The Vestry have decided that they will not contract any more debts, but will spend the amount actually received and no more. The offertory pledges, added to the estimated amount of pew rents and cash offerings, (both based on last year), will just barely enable us to continue as we are doing at present. We should not rest contented with this condition of things which involves much anxiety and a constant struggle to keep down expenses, and if every communicant of this parish were to give something each week it would relieve this great strain. Many persons think that pledging a small sum each week amounts to nothing, but that is not the case, for I would call your attention to the following facts: Up to the present date we have received about 165 pledges, thus leaving over 200 persons connected with and using St. Clements as their parish church, unpledged. If each one of these would pledge ten cents a week, the amount would be one thousand dollars a year. This sum would enable the Vestry to continue the present services and relieve the Rector of a responsibility that should not be put upon him. It should be borne in mind that many of the persons not pledging to the offertory fund, must be those who come regularly to the services and do not rent either a pew or a sitting, and the least they can do toward the support of the parish is to give some regular sum towards the weekly offerings. Surely all who make their Communions at St. Clements, or who attend its services, should realize that if unable to take a sitting, they should contribute toward the support of the church by regular contributions, according to their means. Very prompt action is necessary.

Yours, etc.,
Alexander W. Kilgour, Accounting Warden.

The Choir Boys' Club.

Since the last magazine the boys are the happy possessors of twenty-five books toward their lending library. Just now it may be called an exchange library, as most of the books were given out last Tuesday evening, and when they come in this week there will simply be an exchange of books. They hope more kind friends will remember them, and add now and again a new book.

The books have all been covered and a catalogue made. A music closet emptied of old and unused music has become the library. They have some good magazines quite worth binding, but alas, the treasury holds but two dollars and one cent, and that must be kept for the Whitsun entertainment. The boys hope not always to be begging, but before another winter to sing well enough to give a concert, with some assistance, and so put something into the treasury of their own earning.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

To the Editor of St. Clement's Magazine.

It seems impossible for some of us to remember to place our weekly pledges in the offertory, and I write to ask if some plan cannot be adopted to remind the delinquents? Could the pledge numbers in default be put on the bulletin board in the church corridor?

Sincerely,

Philadelphia, April 20th, 1894.

Answer.—The plan has been suggested of publishing each month in the magazine, the pledge numbers that are in arrears up to that date. We will, therefore, begin in the June issue of St. Clement's Magazine, with the kind co-operation of the Accounting Warden, to publish a list of the numbers that are in default. This, of course, will refer only to those who are four weeks and over in arrears.

Question.—I should like to know why the genuflexion at the end of the prayer of consecration occurs at the words, "through Jesus Christ our Lord" rather than at the end of the prayer. M. J.

Answer.—The genuflexion is made at the end of the prayer proper; it is followed by an ascription of praise ("by Whom and with Whom," etc.), which is said standing, according to the church's custom, and to which, therefore, a genuflexion is inappropriate.

Save the Organ.

The organ is sadly in need of a thorough cleaning; the builders have notified the Vestry that it should be done the coming summer in order to prevent the pipes from being ruined. It will cost about $325, a sum that we cannot afford to take out of our treasury. Is there any member of the congregation who would be willing to donate this sum, or part of it, for this important work?

Object Lessons.

Behold a picture. On my chamber floor
Half sitting, half reclining, is a child
With hair like tangled sunshine, and with eyes
Deep blue and earnest, now intent and lost
In eager efforts, from a pile of blocks,
Each lettered, "by herself" to spell a word.
The blocks have grown familiar to her touch;
The letters also; and kind hands have showed
Their uses: and the little one aspires
To form them to a word; but baffled oft,
Tries o'er and o'er, until at last she puts Letter to letter, and word is formed—
The grandest word her thought can ever know;
The dearest name her heart can trust in—God!

So we—we grown-up children, in the world
Are set by the great Teacher, to spell out,
From flower and tree, from bust, and beast, and bird,
From whispering wind, and storm-tossed thunder cloud,
From shining stars, and quiet, holy nights,
From our own being, full of fear and love,
From sin, and death, from life, from all things here,
The grand, deep truths that underlie them all.
"To you" the Scripture saith, "are all things given For food." There is a deep significance,
A meaning and truth, that leads to God,
In every common thing that meets our eye
Nay, nothing now is "common or unclean."
To him, who, taught of God, spells out
The hidden meaning, wrapped and stored away,
To teach him "who is wise, and will observe
These things—even he shall know
The loving-kindness of the Lord."

So does the world we live in, come to seem
To us a revelation, where we see
Through hint, and sign, and symbol, shadowed forth,
The deepest, highest, holiest things of God.
Where once the cross has bridged the gulf between Our souls and God, then we can hear Him walk
In His fair earthly garden, as of old
He walked in Eden, in the cool of day;
And now, at one with Him, be not afraid,
But filled with a God-given, blessed peace,
Can touch, and taste, and handle, reverently,
The food He gives, in each familiar thing,
And climb through natural to spiritual,
And learn at length to spell out from them
—God.

At St. John's Guild meeting, Wednesday eve, April 25th, the Rev. Mr. McGarvey, of the Church of the Evangelist, lectured on the origin of some of the customs of the Episcopal Church. The lecture was very entertaining and instructive, and all regretted when, because of the lateness of the hour, it was brought to a close.

The next meeting of the Guild will be Wednesday evening, May 23d, and as this will probably be the last meeting for the summer, a full attendance is desired.

CHANGE.

It is a not uncommon subject of complaint, in matters both ecclesiastical and secular, that "things are not as they used to be." Sometimes there is more, sometimes less, of reason in this complaint. But in any case it is one for which there must always be opportunities so long as the world stands; for it is in truth a complaint, not against any particular state of affairs, but against the very constitution and order of the world itself. It seems, indeed, reasonable enough to complain when things about us are changed in many ways—some of them, probably, for the worse—and when a change, even for the better, would be unwelcome to one who by lapse of time has become firmly set in his ways and contented with his surroundings. To see new faces around us; new and unheard of enterprises started; new ways of doing business invented, or the old methods carried out inefficiently and awkwardly, as it may seem, by new hands; to feel oneself almost a stranger in one's own place—all this is trying and irritating to the mind and temper of those who have lived long in the world, and given their share of thought and labor to the work which had to be done in it.

The distance into which the past has receded lends its enchantment to all that is bygone; a mellow haze as of an autumn sunset softens all past asperities, harmonizes all past inconsistencies; the future looks dark and crude and cheerless; we lose heart as we look forward; we long for the idealized past, and sadly complain that things are not as they used to be.

But the world is not made up of men and women of a bygone time. There are many—fortunate ones they are mostly considered—who, as yet, have no past, whose lives and work lie all before them. The difference between these and those just mentioned is often one not so much of age as of experience, and it is made manifest by the different spirit in which the new comers view the past and the future. "Things are not as they used to be," they cry, "but they are a great deal too much so. We must change a great deal more, and at once, if we are to succeed in these days." They are all for progress, and the past to them is only a collection of abuses to be reformed. Natural enough, again; many things are wrong in this world; few things are altogether right; all must be changed and changed again, doubtless, before we can come to the perfect life.

But what wonder that the world is full of strife, when it is given up to parties of such entirely opposite principles? What wonder that it is apt to be an unsatisfactory and uncomfortable place, when it is possible to take two such different views of the methods by which its affairs ought to be conducted? Happily, however, it is not necessary to adhere entirely to either party—to be either unstable or unprogressive.

Change is the law upon which the world is founded—year succeeds to year, and season to season, and yet the earth is the same. You yourself are the same person who once lay helpless in your mother's arms; the same schoolboy who once used to "creep unwillingly to school;" yet how much changed you are your mirror reminds you every morning. Would you object to the present year of grace because it is not, say, 1500 A. D., or to the child because he is not a full grown man, or, on the other hand, would you expect the year never to alter, and your children to be condemned to a lifelong babyhood? All things must change, because it is God's law that they should; but they change slowly, and not by convulsion, for the same reason.

And every change has in it something of good, and something of bad, since, however, much things or people may be altered, they must be altered again and again before they can become perfect; and yet on the whole all changes must be for the better, since they are stages, though often very small ones, in the world's onward progress. "Things are not as they used to be"—they never are, or can be; but they are as God sees best that they should be for the moment. It is our part to accept changes and make the best of them, trying to hold fast all that is good and to reform whatever is evil, "forgetting the things that are behind, reaching forth unto those which are before;" not to waste time in mourning over a past which never can be brought to life again, nor yet to be impatient of that gradual growth by which the world and the church will be made perfect in the end.

Choir-Club Concert.

The "Choir-Club" concert, to which we referred in our last issue, and which is booked to take place in the fall, on a date yet to be determined, will have quite a varied program, and will include solos (vocal and instrumental), choruses by the boys, glees by the gentlemen, and madrigals and part-songs by the full choir. It is proposed to issue the tickets in ample time to enable those particularly interested to secure seats before the final rush sets in.

The Organ.

Two hundred and forty dollars have now been received for the needful repairs. This leaves only eighty-five dollars to be made up for the completion of the sum required. The work is to be begun on August 1st.

The Sea-shore Home.

We think that our readers may like to hear a little about our "Summer House," which is now in full work, and to which over a hundred women and children have already been sent down, many of whom have derived great benefit from their stay. The house accommodates over fifty people, and is delightfully situated near the pine woods, the sweet odors of the pines meeting you as you drive up to the house. It stands surrounded by eight acres of ground laid out in grass, and the children are able to be out all day playing around under the trees, or in the swings and hammocks. They bathe daily in the river when practicable (the river, which is salt, being about one-quarter of a mile from the house), and expeditions are constantly planned, either for crabbing or huckleberry picking, and in this way the time passes all too quickly; some of the children who came back last week remarked that it had been a very short two weeks.

There is a nice little oratory in the house where the inmates are assembled daily for morning and evening prayers, and both Bishop McClaren and the Rev. G M. Christian have very kindly gone out during the week to celebrate for the sisters. Bishop Scarborough also paid them a visit last month, and was very much pleased with the house, expressing a wish that it could be bought for us.

The distance from the church is about two miles, but through the kindness of some ladies at Point Pleasant a stage has been provided for several Sundays, to take all who are able to go to the 11 o'clock service.

Many of the members of the Holy Cross Guild are giving two weeks at a time to stay at the house, and are most indefatigable in helping the sisters with the care of the children, and this week they have planned to get up a sort of fair and lawn party for the benefit of the house, and visitors and all have been very busy making pincushions and other salable articles.

We earnestly ask that any of our parishioners who have not yet sent in a donation (the smallest thankfully received), will do so soon, that the sisters may be able to keep the house open as long as possible. Applications for admission occur almost daily, and nearly every bed is already filled for the next trip on the 9th of August. This time we have fifty-four inmates, varying in age from two weeks upward. It is very hard to have to refuse many who seem almost fading away for want of good air and food, but this we have to do constantly, and as so many who go down are not even able to pay their car fare, it is impossible to send all, even if we had room for them.

Pledges in Arrears.

The follow numbers are now in arrears (July): 25, 26, 53, 61, 62, 83, 87, 92, 101, 111, 118, 119, 125, 130, 138, 139, 155, 159, 160, 166.

A Choral Society in the Fall.

The fact that we have in the parish some excellent voices, has suggested the possibility of a choral society to meet once a week for the study and practice of standard sacred and secular music. There appears to be no reason why a flourishing choral society should not be built up in the parish, a society that shall prove both a pleasure and a benefit to its members, and all singers interested in the subject are cordially invited to send their names and addresses to the rector or to the choir-master. If any of those in the parish have acquaintances who would be interested in the matter, they are earnestly requested to speak to their friends in order that the latter may also forward their names, as it is desired to start with as large a membership as possible. Applications will be received during August, and later in the season a meeting will be called for organization. Due notice will be given of the time and date of this meeting.

Choir-Boys Wanted.

More boys are wanted for the choir—bright boys between eight and ten who can read ordinary printed matter with facility, and who have quick, correct ears and clear voices. If any parents of the parish have boys answering these requirements, or if any members of the parish know of such boys, the choir-master will be glad if they will either see him in the choir-room or send the boys to meet him there after any Sunday service, so that an appointment can be made with the boys for the purpose of examining them for admission to the choir.

A few years' service in a properly conducted choir is good experience for any boy, and sometimes serves to bring out latent musical talent that might otherwise lie dormant without creating any suspicion of its existence. Our choir-boys are carefully trained, well looked after, and enjoy a number of privileges and pleasures that do not usually fall to the lot of the American choir-boy.

Of course, many boys that make application for admission to the choir are necessarily rejected, but this is done with due consideration for their feelings, whilst those who have the necessary qualifications have no difficulty whatever in passing the examination, and are very gladly received.

"The Church of England Was Not Founded by Henry VIII."

This is the contention of Rt. Rev. George F. Seymour, Bishop of Springfield. The one "unanswerable reason" the Bishop gives is that it was impossible for Henry VIII. to have founded the Church of England.

"One might, with more plausibility, say that Charles II. founded the English State, or General Grant the United States of America. * *

"In the time of Henry VIII. there was no interruption whatsoever in the continuity of the English Church. * * * Henry VIII. never attempted to found a Church, since, whatever else may be said of him, * * * he was not a fool. Nobody in his day or generation ever dreamed that he was founding a Church; such a fiction was left for Roman Catholics and Dissenters in modern times to invent and spread abroad. Whoever asserts that Henry VIII. founded the English Church proclaims one of two things—either that he is ignorant of English history, or else is attempting to deceive others by stating what he knows to be false. All that was done in the reign of Henry VIII. was to disallow, with the consent of such Bishops as Bonner, of London, and Gardner, of Winchester, the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Rome over the realm of England as resting on Divine right. * * * * *

"It will be seen that Rome, in the exercise of her usurpations, was the primary cause of all the trouble in the domestic affairs of Henry VIII.; and so far as the divorce from Katharine is concerned, Clement VII.

would have granted it had not the nephew of Katharine, the mighty Emperor Charles V. of Germany, had him, metaphorically, by the throat, and given him to understand that if he did so it would be at his peril.

"The Church of England * * * continued on in her unbroken organic life through the reigns of Henry VIII., Edward VI., Mary, and Elizabeth, and so passes on to our time and to us. * * * During all this time, there was but one Church in England, which included all who acknowledged the Catholic faith. There were what may be called different schools or tendencies in the bosom of the Church which struggled for the supremacy. During Edward VI.'s reign, the Protestant School was in the ascendant; during Mary's reign, the Italian School, or those who were devoted to a foreign jurisdiction, gained the victory; when Elizabeth came to the throne, the final settlement was made, and the School which stood for the Pope and Mediævalism was, as it proved, finally suppressed, and the Church, resting upon her national basis, included all who acknowledged the Catholic faith, until the twelfth year of that reign. Let it ever be remembered that, in 1570, the Pope, Pius V., was the author of a schism in the Catholic body in England by ordering, by his bull, those who were willing to acknowledge his obedience to leave the jurisdiction of their Bishops and the altars of their Church, and set up a separate and schismatical Church in immediate dependence upon himself, a foreign Bishop. Henceforth, and now, the Roman Catholic Church in England is a schismatical body, and is justly and accurately defined as the 'Italian Mission.'

"The Pope is the founder of this, if his friends choose so to term it, 'the Roman Catholic Church in England,' in 1570, which broke away from the true Catholic Church of England, which was planted in Apostolic times, and comes down without break or interruption, in all lines of organic continuity, from the beginning to the present time."

PHILADELPHIA, SEPTEMBER, 1894.

Guilds.

Probably one of the most striking features in the great development of religious life and energy which has taken place of late years, is the wide spread formation of parochial and other guilds. It is true they are not new things, either among ourselves, or in the church at large, or, indeed, in secular life. But they have in comparatively recent years assumed a prominence and importance in our own communion which had never before belonged to them. And, like all institutions of recent growth, they have been subject to some criticism and much misunderstanding. By some, guilds have been considered as the realization of all church ideals, the embodiment of perfection on earth. While others have seen in them nothing but a feeble attempt to attain to a standard of life and conduct which is out of the reach of the ordinary run of mankind.

The truth, of course, lies midway between these extreme views. Guilds, like all human inventions, are capable of use and abuse, of greater and less excellence, and like all attempts to reach a lofty ideal, may fall short of their object without necessarily thereby ceasing to be beneficial.

What then is a guild? Its objects are threefold. First, it is an association of persons of like circumstances—in age, sex, spiritual and other attainments—for the purpose of realizing more fully than would otherwise be possible the sense of brotherhood. It is a distinguishing feature of the Catholic Church. In this connection it may be remarked that while the church itself is one great guild uniting in its fraternal bonds persons of all condition, both living and departed, and while the parish is a part of that larger society in which the members are united by closer and more obvious ties, it is nevertheless only possible to experience and exercise to the full the privileges and duties of the Christian community when natural circumstances afford the largest opportunities of intercourse and sympathy. A guild, therefore, is in this view, a means for enabling its members to enter into the fullest possible use of their "membership one of another" in the church; just as a base-ball club is a means for enabling its members to make the fullest use of their powers of playing that game.

Hence it follows, secondly, that a guild exists for the purpose of benefiting its members by mutual example, sympathy, and intercession.

Thirdly, it follows also that a guild is intended to promote the fulfilment of the Christian duties, which are embodied in its rules, whether they refer to the personal and interior life of the members, or to their external duties in the church or the world.

Guilds, therefore, are useful, or the reverse, just so far as they attain these three purposes: The union and friendship of their members; the benefit which earnest piety always bring to those who come in contact with it, and the observance of a rule of life, together, if the guild rule so requires, with the diligent performance of certain specified work for the good of the church.

In other words, the value of guilds depends entirely on their members. A disinterested guild, or an irreligious one, or one in which the members are irregular and careless in their guild duties, is and can be nothing but an organization for the promotion of sin, and must do incalculable harm both to its members and the community in which it exists. A guild, on the other hand, in which all the members are doing their honest best, in spite of human frailty, to fulfill their guild obligations cannot fail to benefit all who belong to, or are in any way influenced by it.

Don't belong to a guild, therefore, unless you are in earnest about it, and if you do belong to one, be charitable and patient with your fellow members' shortcomings. Be regular and careful in all your religious duties, and be exceedingly strict in keeping the guild rules.

Anglican Orders.

BY THE RT. REV. JOHN WILLIAMS, D.D., LL.D., IN The Churchman.

The Abbé Duchesne, the author of "Origines du Culte Chretien," is a high authority on points in ecclesiastical history and liturgiology. He has lately been reviewing an essay by M. Balbus on Anglican Orders. It appears that M. Balbus, while he does not question the fact of Archbishop Parker's consecration at Lambeth, and takes no note of the Nag's Head fable, still finds two difficulties in the way of acceptance of the consecration as valid. It is to these difficulties that the Abbé addressed himself, in a critique of which the following is a translation:

"The author of this brochure has attacked a question of grave importance, which he has treated with great care and perfect fairness. Nevertheless, while his premises appear to me to be well established, I cannot but deduce from them conclusions quite contrary to his own.

"M. Balbus begins by establishing the fact that Bishops Parker and Barlow, from whom the entire Anglican clergy derive their ordination, were really ordained, or at least that there is no ground on which their ordination can be questioned. Moreover the ritual of the Anglican Church is similar, in substance, to that of the Greek Church, and even of the Latin Church up to the twelfth century. The conclusion is, that the ministers of the Anglican Church are as much ordained as Gregory of Tours, Hincmar of Rheims, and other Latin clergy of the olden time.

"But this conclusion M. Balbus refuses to accept, because of two difficulties; first, in regard to the intention of the consecrators at certain times in the historic succession, and secondly, in regard to the sufficiency of the actual Anglican rite; the Roman Church having made certain additions to its rite which have been disregarded in England.

"To the first difficulty, I reply that intention within the limits in which the Catholic rule claims it, intentio faciendi quod facit Ecclesia, is to be presumed unless there is proof to the contrary. There have been outside of England, unbelieving bishops; nor may we forget that a part of the French clergy derive their ordinations from M. de Talleyrand. If I am told that the Church intends, in conferring ordination, to confer a sacrament, that she recognizes in that sacrament such or such an efficacy in the domain of the liturgy, of penitence and other matters, and that, on the other hand, whether by such or such a prelate, or by the Anglican Church herself, a teaching different from that of the Roman Church has been given, then I reply that this has little bearing on the intention or the validity of the rite. Baptism may be validly administered by one who only knows that it is a sacred rite by which one is made a Christian. In the same way, Anglican ordinations have always been administered by those who intended to make bishops and priests. Nothing more can be required.

"Nor is the objection derived from modifications of the ritual admissible. This objection can only apply to the ordination of priests. The schoolmen have laid down that for such ordination the essentials of the rite (materia et forma) are found in the delivery of the sacred vessels (porrectio instrumentorum), and the words which the bishop employs in delivering them. This theory is now abandoned. Indeed, if it is to be maintained, it would be necessary to regard as null all the Greek and Oriental ordinations, and in fact all those of the Latin Church before the eleventh or twelfth century.

"I know that the attempt has been made to get rid of this difficulty by saying that the Church has power over the essential rites of sacraments and that she has used this power in modifying the matter and the form of ordination. This is all very well. But in so grave a matter, it is not combinations of theologians which are to be taken into account, but official decisions of the Church. And where is the public, official and explicit act by which the Church has recognized this rite? Where is the public, official and explicit act by which she has declared that this rite has been put in use in connection with the ordination ritual? I will add that it is worth the while to enquire in what interest so considerable a change was introduced.

"Besides, this objection would not effect the ordination of bishops in England, for the reason that in the Latin ritual for episcopal consecrations the delivery of the instruments has not, and never has had, the position of an essential rite. Nor can it be said that no one can be validly consecrated to the episcopate unless he has been previously ordained a priest. Ecclesiastical antiquity is full of histories of episcopal consecrations in cases where the inferior degrees had not been previously conferred. A number of the popes have been promoted directly from the diaconate to the episcopate. Indeed, it is only from the close of the eleventh century that the contrary custom has prevailed at Rome, and deacons elected to the papacy ordained to the priesthood.

"The result of all this is, that Anglican ordinations may be regarded as valid. I know that at Rome the contrary opinion has been, not imposed in theory, but handed down in practice, and that converts have been ordained before they have been allowed to continue to exercise their functions in the Church. But the Roman Church has the right, and it is her duty, to take into account the scruples of the faithful. In the actual state of opinion few Catholics would receive the sacraments from one who was known to have no other than Anglican ordination. In such matters it is natural to multiply securities.

"But if from present practice and opinion, we go back to the times when they were introduced, we are compelled to own that in the sixteenth century the condition of information in regard to liturgical antiquity was not such as to make it prudent to dispute the theories of the schoolmen. Judged by those theories, then universally accepted in the orthodox world, Anglican ordinations could not but be regarded as invalid or at least doubtful. Add to this the stories early set afloat about Parker and Barlow, and we have a more than sufficient explanation of Roman usage and Catholic opinion.

"There is, however, no reason why we may not believe that, as time goes on, this opinion will be corrected, and that the ecclesiastical authority may modify its position.

"Instructed members of the Anglican Communion do not need any support from Roman authorities for the perfect security of their conviction on this subject. But it should none the less be gratifying to them to observe the abatement of an adverse prejudice of long standing."

The Camp.

St. Clements' "Camp" is now in full operation at Florence, N. J. It contains some fifty boys from the choir and Sunday-school, and is in charge of Dr. Garrett, a veteran camper of the widest experience. Florence is beautifully situated on the upper Delaware, and is particularly well adapted to the purpose as it affords the boys almost every phase of outdoor sport—bathing, boating, fishing, etc.

The boys embarked Monday, the 20th, from Arch street wharf, and will return Saturday, September 1st, and we think it safe to predict that they will crowd a vast amount of pleasure into that brief period.

The Real Value of Higher Education.

At a time when thousands of young men and women are soon to enter upon another school year it is well to consider the true aim and value of learning. The Herald and Presbyter expresses it thus:

Higher education is intended to help fit one more thoroughly for the active duties of life; to train one to larger usefulness; to help develop a stronger, better character. It is not so much what one's learns as what he becomes. It is not so much for the purpose of becoming able to get money and do business as it is to develop true character and become strong, self-reliant, self-restrained, self-poised, thoughtful and courageous. It is not so much the acquiring of accomplishments as the development of character. The young man or young woman who takes on a clean, religious, elevated, well-disciplined character, is prepared, in the providence of God, for meeting the emergencies that may arise in life, accomplishing its duties, and being, through it all, one who is a force for good and for truth.

St. John's Guild.

St. John's Guild will meet for the first time this season on Wednesday evening, September 26th, at 8 o'clock. Every member should endeavor to be present, and all who desire to become members are invited to attend.

PHILADELPHIA, OCTOBER, 1894.

Rector's Letter to the Parishioners of St. Clements.

MY DEAR FRIENDS:—Most of you will, by the time this number of the MAGAZINE is in print, have returned to the city, and the work of the Parish will have begun afresh, after the annual interruption of the summer months. During October all the Guilds will resume their meetings; those of St. Mary and St. Vincent having continued theirs, as usual, throughout the summer.

The Sunday-school has remained open every Sunday this summer, the first for many years in which it has done so. The attendance has naturally been small, but it has been increasing considerably for the last few weeks; and now that the teachers are returning, let us hope with renewed energy, to their work, we may expect a still larger increase; and everything being now in working order there will not be the difficulty and delay in reorganization which has been felt in former years. More teachers are urgently needed, especially men.

The Seashore Home closed at the beginning of September, after a very successful season, during which the house was constantly filled with successive relays of over fifty inmates. The organ has been thoroughly cleaned and repaired, I am happy to say, at a very small cost to the Parish, most of the necessary funds having been provided by the energy and generosity of friends.

The Choir continues to make great progress under its present able direction, as an evidence of which we are promised Mozart's Seventh Mass for St. Clement's Day. More men are needed, however, and the choir-master will be glad to meet any gentlemen possessing tenor or bass voices as early as possible.

It is proposed to establish a Parish Choral Society during the winter. This it is hoped will be both a pleasant form of recreation for its members and also a means of bringing latent musical ability to light.

We are in hopes that a branch of the Girls' Friendly Society, which is doing a great work in many parishes, may be started here during the coming winter, and supply a want that has long been felt.

Many pledges are, unfortunately, in arrear. The numbers appear in another column of the MAGAZINE, and it will be seen that there are considerably more of them than can be thought right, when it is remembered that the pledges are undertaken voluntarily, and involve a promise, which should in honor be felt to be binding, to make a certain contribution to the Offertory every week. To break such a promise is nothing less than disgraceful—certainly none the less so because it is made to God, as well as to man. Many of the present arrears are doubtless due to summer absence, and will soon be discharged; but there are many pledges on which only one or two payments have been made during the past six months, and some on which no payment has yet been made at all. These failures to contribute are to be regretted. not so much on account of the pecuniary loss to the Church which they entail, as on account of the lack of fervor and interest which they indicate on the part of individual members of the congregation. Money, in itself, is not a thing worth worrying about; where people are zealous and earnest in the service of God, enough money is always forthcoming for all necessary purposes; but where zeal and earnestness are absent no amount of money can be productive of real good. Let us hope that we shall see a great improvement in both these respects this winter.

So far, the Church continues to pay its way, though a considerable debt is still owing to the late Rector. What its prospects, spiritual and temporal, may be for the future depends, under God, upon the devotion of the congregation. We have much to be thankful for in the past, and much to hope for in the future. Let us go forward to the duties, spiritual and secular, that lie before us, with a firm resolution to do our best, trusting in the grace of God, and we may be sure in our several spheres of accomplishing His will for each of us, which is the only real success.

Faithfully yours in Christ,

Reopening of the Choir Club.

The summer recess of the "Choir Club" has drawn to a close, and that sturdy organization will, upon Tuesday evening, October 2d, inaugurate its fall and winter campaign of hearty diversion and entertainment. The constant and generous contributions of kind friends are rapidly assisting the club library to a position of practical utility; and, if books continue to come in at the same rate, the library will probably become, at no very distant day, a feature of the club. On Tuesday evenings the choir-room is in full possession of the club, and unrestrained fun and enjoyment—within any reasonable limit—make up the program for the evening.

The club confidently hopes to secure sufficient support and patronage at its concert, this fall or winter, to be able to purchase many things of which it now stands in need, and it is probable that the tickets will be placed upon sale in the near future.

Pledges in Arrear, Sept. 23d.

Numbers 5, 8, 9, 13, 20, 25, 26, 28, 42, 45, 49, 53, 61, 62, 80, 83, 87, 92, 101, 106, 111, 118, 119, 121, 125, 130, 132, 135, 138, 139, 152, 153, 154, 155, 157, 160, 162, 166, 170, 174, 180, 181, 184, 185, 188.

"Our Choir."

If our choir is small, it is certainly ambitious, enthusiastic, and courageous. Throughout the entire summer—with the exception of the single Sunday when the boys were in camp—the full choir was present at each service, and the average of attendance was as good as during the preceding fall and winter. This fact appears somewhat remarkable when we remember that, during the summer months, there is, in most parishes, a more or less general suspension of choir discipline and training, and it serves to illustrate the spirit that animates "our choir." It is only the existence of this spirit of honorable pride and ambition which has enabled the choir to endure the trials that have beset it, and it is this alone which can enable it to surmount the obstacles and difficulties that still confront it. But, with this enthusiasm, coupled with the hard and conscientious work the choir has long been doing, and with visions of its former glory ever before its eyes, with traditions of its old achievements ever ringing in its ears, who shall say that our choir will not some day regain the proud position it once occupied? Indeed we are not only promised new music this very fall and winter, but it is rumored that, among other good things, we shall experience one of our old-time pleasures, that of listening to a mass by Mozart—that master of church music. If the choir can successfully carry out this program, it will certainly have accomplished much in a short time, and will have made a giant stride in the direction to which we referred to above.

Excursion to Cape May.

The annual pic-nic of the Mothers' Meeting and Sunday-school took place on Thursday, Sept. 20th, at Cape May. More than three hundred persons of all ages were on the special train which conveyed the party at 7 A. M., and in spite of the lateness of the season they were favored with perfect weather, and spent a most enjoyable day.

The various amusements of the place were freely patronized, and the sea-bathing was much enjoyed.

Able assistance was rendered to the Rev. G. T. Griffith, who took charge of the party, by Dr. Garrett, Mr. Maury, and other gentlemen.

Sincere thanks are due to Mr. Logan Bullitt, of the South Jersey Railroad, to whose kindness in arranging for the accommodation of the party much of the success of the excursion is owing.

"Erin go Bragh."

Time and time again has the writer propounded to the returning tourist, eagerly recounting the places of interest which he has visited during his annual holiday, "Have you been to Ireland?" Once, and only once, has he been answered in the affirmative.

On all other occasions the reply has been invariably: "Oh, no; there's nothing to be seen there worth the seeing," coupled, alas, too often, with the cruel taunt, "Those wretched Irish! What a miserable and degraded set, and what a funny lot they are, too."

My only reply to such a one is, "Visit it and you will find scenery rivaling, if not surpassing, in magnificence the famous scenes of Italy and the Mediteranean. A people for generosity unbounded; for bravery unsurpassed; for geniality renowned; for sparkling witticism and jocularity unrivaled; for courtesy and hospitality famed the whole world over; intensely patriotic; unswerving and unchanging in love or hate; faithful to friend, generous to foe; in piety unobtrusive and unassuming.

A knowledge of Ireland, the "insula sanctorum et insula doctorum," can only be learned from a perusal of its glorious past and a living acquaintance with its present. This cannot be obtained by a mere flying visit of a week's duration. As well accept as Gospel the American's account of England and the English, who has landed at Liverpool in the morning, lunched at Stafford, visited Westminster Abbey late in the afternoon, and taken the club-train for Dover, later on in the same day for Boulogne.

To see Ireland and discover if it possesses scenery worth seeing, you must visit it. To visit it you must spend time there, and to discover the real, true warm-hearted Irishman "of the rale ould sort" one thing is indispensable, and for the benefit of those of my readers who, I flatter myself, are interested in the matter I will discover the secret: You must trust him.

Suspicion ever begets suspicion, and distrust its complement. So to make the Irishman your devoted slave, trust him, and he will die rather than betray the trust.

So much by way of preface, and now to sights to be seen and the flow of wit and humor to be heard.

As you approach its shores on the good ship which has borne you across the heaving bosom of the Atlantic you cannot but notice the intense eagerness and excitement visible amongst the Irish who happen to be on board. Saloon and steerage are as one here to catch the first sight of the "ould sod," and as its shores come into view the crowding to the side, and some individual having devoutly made the most holy sign of our redemption, and uttered a short prayer of thankfulness to his God, bursts out with the patriotic flow of language: "There you are ould Ireland, my darlin'; the first gem of the ocean and star of the say (sea). Oh, but 'tis yourself looks beautiful this blessed mornin'. Acushla mavourneen Ireland, dye hear me? Ireland, my jewell! I wish ye the top o' the mornin'."

And truly as one beholds for the first time the beautiful harbor of Queenstown as it shimmers in the light of the early summer sunlight he has before him a scene never to be forgotten, nor can he blame the enthusiastic native for his encomiums on his native land.

Then on the journey to the metropolis by rail let us examine points of interest on our route, and first, Cork, immortalized by Spenser, (I think), as "the faire city," and by others as "Rebel Cork." Fair it truly is by nature, and, of course, the first thought in the mind of a St. Clement's parishioner will be: "Here in this city I will hie me to the House of God, and 'low before Him with my praises will fall' at His altar, and adore Him in the Holy Sacrament for His mercy in granting us a safe ending to our journey." Accordingly wend we our way to a noble and imposing structure, which we are told is the Cathedral of St. Finbarre, but oh, the heartsickness and weariness, the door is fast closed, and we are told will not be open until morning service at 11.30, and then there may not be "the pure offering." Saddened we silently turn away, breathing out our very souls in the prayer in the "Preparatio ad Missam," "Oh send out Thy Light and Thy Truth."

Leaving Cork for another occasion, we take our seats in the train and very soon reach Blarney, which is on the left of the line, and famous for its castle which contains in one of its walls the "rale" Blarney stone—not the Chicago World's Fair one, but the "rale o' rale."

But oh ye ignorami request not to indulge in osculatory impressions upon its flinty bosom. The stone is four feet from the top of the battlements, and as you must "do" the thing in correct style, and in orthodox fashion, you are suspended mid air, head downwards, and m indulge in such wise in osculati to your heart's and nerves' conte without fear of prosecution by t Church Association, or sentence imprisonment by the Judicial Co mittee of the Privy Council. T result of your arduous labor will forever rewarded by the gift of bounded eloquence, commonly call "the gift of the gab." J. G. E.

PHILADELPHIA, NOVEMBER, 1894.

The Dedication Festival.

One of the outward signs of the revival of Church life in the Anglican Communion is the solemn and regular observances of the Dedication Festivals of parish Churches. This observance is the natural and almost necessary consequence of a deep and true sense of the value of those privileges which the Church affords. For the object of the Dedication Festival is, first, to give thanks to God for the blessings which the parish Church is the means of bringing to the congregation who worship in it; and secondly, to pray for the continuance and for a more extended use of the means of grace which are offered there.

It is natural, then, that those who really care for their Church and value its gifts should be anxious to do these two things in the most solemn and careful way; and this natural desire has been met by ancient ecclesiastical custom, which has made the Dedication Festival of a Church second in importance and dignity only to Easter for the congregation especially concerned.

The Dedication Festival should, therefore, be kept in the same way as all the great feasts of the Christian year—of which it is itself one of the chief—by solemn and impressive services of praise, by special sermons and instructions, and, above all, by a special reception of the Holy Communion by every member of the congregation, after careful preparation, and with prayer for God's blessing on the parish, and thanksgiving for His past mercies to it.

But there is another aspect in which this festival should be regarded, and which renders it unique among Church observances. It has a specially social or human side to it which no other festival has. In the other feasts, such as Easter, Christmas, Ascension and Whitsuntide, we commemorate the great events by which we have been brought into the knowledge and love of God, in company with all those, living and departed, who constitute the great family of His Church. But of those the vast majority are unknown to us in the flesh, or even so much as by name, though by the power of faith we can have a real fellowship with them in their prayers and their blessings. But at the Dedication Festival we thank God, not only for giving us a place in the great multitude which no man can number who praises Him on earth and in Paradise, but also for bringing us into that small subdivision of the great society which we call our parish—for enabling us to realize the unity of the Catholic Church in the actual visible fellowship of those who belong to the same parish with us, whose names and faces we know, whom we meet Sunday after Sunday in Church, with whom we are associated in Church work, who are fellow-members of Guilds with us, whose little peculiarities are well known to us, with some of whom we are on terms of affection and intimacy, with some of whom, alas, we have perhaps had quarrels and misunderstandings!

This is the human, natural side of the Dedication Festival, and it is of no less importance than the purely spiritual or ecclesiastical one.

In this view the Dedication Festival should be a time when we pray especially for one another—when we try to forget and put away all jealousy and dislike of one another; a time from which should date fresh and more earnest efforts to extend the kingdom of Christ by hearty and diligent co-operation with our brethren; when new resolutions of forbearance and patience and Christian charity should be made before God's altar.

If we all come to our Communion on St. Clement's Day, or on the following Sunday, with consciences cleansed from sin, and with earnest prayers and thanksgivings, and in the spirit of Christian fellowship and kindliness toward all those with whom God's providence has joined us as members of the same parish, then our Dedication Festival cannot fail to bring the greatest blessings to each of us in particular, and to the parish as a whole.

Choir Boys' Recreation Club.

The choir boys have again started their Tuesday night club with a slight change of name, which makes the object of the club more definitely understood. It is now "The Choir Boys' Recreation Club," open to ex-choir boys of good standing as well as those now singing in our choir. I wonder if many members of our parish, when they look upon and listen to our white robed choristers, realize, or know, all the watchful care, all the patience and anxiety that little procession needs and receives in order that the interior may be a little in keeping with the exterior. I wonder if any one ever thinks of the little missionary field behind those choir stalls. We do not wish them to be spoiled by over praise, but we do bespeak a kindly interest of those who listen to their improved singing from Sunday to Sunday.

After the two festivals, St. Clement's Day and Christmas, are over the boys expect to give a concert, for which we beg the kind patronage of all who wish to encourage their independence and add to the pleasure of their club.

The Truth of It.

Teacher—"Johnny, can you define for us the difference between 'caution' and 'cowardice?'"

Johnny—"Yessum. When you're scart to go out on a boat an' stay home for fear it'll sink, and the boat comes in all right, it's 'cowardice.'"

Teacher—"Well?"

Johnny—"And if you're scart and stay home and the boat does sink, then it's 'caution.'"

A Distinguished Visitor.

The Bishop of Springfield, Ill., the Right Rev. George F. Seymour, spent the day with us, Sunday, October 28th. He celebrated at the 8 o'clock celebration, and preached the sermon at the 11 o'clock celebration, and at solemn even-song.

BISHOP SEYMOUR.

The text of the morning sermon was from the epistle for the day, St. Jude 3.

"The Church had from the beginning," he said, "to contend for the deposit of faith, first, against persecution, then against heresy, then against the forces of ignorance and corruption; and now, when the faith is assailed by all of these, by foes without and heresy within, it is more than ever a duty to contend earnestly, but not in narrowness or bitterness, to defend and teach the faith once delivered to the Saints, defined by the Church in the Catholic creeds, and transmitted with the institutions of the Church as the heritage of Christ's family.

"The idea of the Church is largely perverted, or practically destroyed. The brethren in the various religious bodies, who are doing a large amount of good, speak of the Church as a voluntary association. Men in the coming election will probably join other parties. The moment we say join the Church, we degrade her to a voluntary association. It is impossible to join the Church. Did we ever hear of a man joining a family? Who wrapt around us the ties of kindred? It was God. No matter what we are, peasant or monarch, rich or poor, we are still the son of our parents, the brother of our sisters."

The text of the evening sermon was the second verse, eleventh chapter, Gospel of St. Luke, and was on prayer, "the converse of man with God."

At the close of the service, the Bishop, in his cope and mitre, gave his blessing from the altar.

Second Annnal Report of the Clothing Club of St. Clement's Infant School, November, 1894.

The object of this Club is to help mothers to buy clothing for their younger children by taking care of such small sums of money as can be saved each week for that purpose.

Only members of the Infant School can belong to the Club. Money may be brought to the School on Sunday afternoon. A card, marked with the amount of money sent, will be given to the child bringing it. These cards will be taken in payment for clothes.

No clothing may be taken home until it is paid for, and no promise will be made to hold any garment for more than two weeks.

Shoes, clothing for boys, hats, etc., will be bought for Club members and sold to them at a discount.

The clothing will be sold in the Sunday-school room every Thursday evening after eight o'clock. The Club opens November 1st, and closes June 30th. The ladies in charge of the Club desire to thank the many friends who have so kindly helped and encouraged them by donations of money, materials, half-worn garments, and the making of new garments.

Thanks are also due to Strawbridge & Clothier, to Joseph P. Cooper & Son, and to the Eastern Penitentiary for discount on all goods purchased from them.

Donations of money, materials and half-worn garments will be thankfully received, and can be sent in care of Miss Katherine Smith, to 1924 North street, 120 North Eighteenth street, or 2047 Tower street.

During the year we have given away 116 pieces of new clothing (value, $33.58), and 59 pieces of old clothing. Following is a condensed account of the receipts and expenditures:

RECEIPTS.

Balance on hand	$26.14
Sale of clothing	58 50
Donation	25.00
	$109.64

EXPENDITURES.

St. John's Guild.

The next meeting of St. John's Guild will be Wednesday evening, November 28th. There is a small bill outstanding, and every member will be expected to pay a small assessment.

Music and Drama.

A musical and dramatic entertainment will be given under the auspices of St. John's Guild, on Monday evening, November 12th, at 8.15 o'clock, in the school room, 2024 Cherry street. An evening of enjoyment and amusement is promised to all who attend.

The musical part will be under the able direction of our choirmaster, Mr. Remi Remont, and the drama will be in charge of Mr. Geo. W. Marcellus.

PROGRAMME.

PART I.

1. Quartette, Sweet and Low, Barnby.
2. Contralto Solo, Miss Markland.
3. Ocarina Solo, Mr. Remi Remont.
4. Soprano Solo, Mrs. Garner.
5. Piano Solo, Mr. R. Bibighaus.

PART II.

SLASHER AND CRASHER.

Rosa, Miss Ailenroc.

This is a very funny farce, and under the management of Mr. Marcellus is sure to be a success.

For Women and Girls.

Night school for girls at the Sisters' House on Mondays and Fridays, 7 o'clock.

Bible classes for women and girls on Sundays, at 3 P. M., at the Sisters' House.

Pledge numbers in arrear are on page 4.

For the Sisters.

The Sisters would be very grateful to any one who will either give or lend a piano or organ for use in the Mission House. Donations of old clothes for men, women, or children will also be thankfully received.

Erin Go Bragh.

Leaving Blarney Castle with its famous "Blarney Stone," which

"Who ever kisses,
Oh he never misses to grow eloquint,
'Tis he may clamber to his lady's chamber,
Or become a mimber of shweet Parliamint,
A clever spouter he'll shure turn out, or
An out-an-outer to be let alone.
Don't hope to hinder him or to bewilder him,
Shure he's a pilgrim from the Blarney Stone,"

let us wend our way toward the metropolis, stopping over for a little time at the ancient city of Cashel, famous in the annals of Irish history.

I fancy I see an incredulous smile upon the features of my cosmopolitan readers as they read the words "Irish history." Irish history indeed! But let me assure you Ireland has a history, and a most enviable one, and indeed I will pronounce absolution upon all classes save one for their lack of knowledge in this particular. But this class must be left amongst "reserved cases," so detestable and so contemptible does it appear. I refer to that class of grovelers, who, having received all from their mother land, patrimony, education, position, etc., are nevertheless ashamed to acknowledge Ireland as their own native land, and would fain, if they could, forget even its very existence.

Cashel is one of the most ancient cities, being the capital of the ancient kingdom of Munster. It was undoubtedly chosen on account of its possessing unusual physical advantages in the shape of the Rock of Cashel. The position of this rock is most striking. It rises a precipitous crag out of the plains of Tipperary. No other crag or eminence is in sight. How it came there none can tell. Let me tell you the popular legend. The Rock of Cashel exactly answers to the curious natural gap called the "Devil's Bit" in the mountain which overlooks the town of Templemore. Now for the legend. His sable majesty being very much angered at some disappointment or other betook himself to Ireland, and the mountain impeding his passage, he bit this portion right out of it, and winged his flight over the county of Tipperary, carrying his mouthful of it with him. Wearying of his indigestible and rather unmasticatory article, he spat it out in its present position.

There is one fatal objection from a scientific point of view to the legend. The geological formation of the rock and that of the mountain from which it is supposed to have been bitten are totally distinct; that of the Rock of Cashel being an igneous formation, while that of the mountain is, I think, calcareous. But do not venture to dispute this point with the local historian. You may do it indeed, but with a glance of withering scorn and in an aggrieved tone of contempt the historian will demolish all your geological "higher criticism" with the following satisfactory explanation (?) which I here reproduce: "Shure an' thrue (true) for ye, yer honor, but shure twas the grate (great) hate (heat) out iv the divil's stummick that melted it into sawther (solder) as he flew away wid it."

[The following sermon was preached before the Guild of St. Barnabas, in St. Paul's Church, Washington, D. C., on June 9th last, and was sent us by one of our subscribers, at whose request we publish it.]

"Rejoice with me for I have found my sheep which was lost."—St. Luke, xv., 6.

Last Sunday the Gospel likened the kingdom of Heaven to the great Supper. To-day the Gospel tells us of Christ Himself going forth to seek those sheep which were lost. The parable of the ninety and nine is one most grateful to mankind. More lessons have been learned — more hymns written from this story than can possibly be imagined. Thousands who have never been in Church have been wonderfully touched as the familiar strains, "There were ninety and nine that safely lay in the sheltering arms of God," sung by a pathetic and powerful voice, came to them. The beauty of the story rests upon the after-care for the recovered sheep. "When He hath found it, He layeth it upon His shoulder." And His care ceases not until within His own home the lost one rests. "He cometh home, bringing His ransomed one with Him, and He calleth His friends and neighbors together, saying, 'Rejoice with Me for I have found the sheep which was lost.'" The relation between the two subjects, the Gospel of Love and the Law of Reconcilation, is a clear, easily detected step in a logical reasoning. I mean this: The Church holds out the Gospel of love to the whole world, and says God so loved the world that He gave His Son for you. What man of decency of intellect and sympathy who would not be touched by these words? If Christ so loves me, then why not love Christ, and go to His great Supper having the spotless robe of the marriage garment, showing that you have a tremendous claim upon His Divinity as well as humanity? And so speaks the Priest to him whom he would confirm. In the eagerness of the Fishers of mankind to secure the candidate—in the wonder of the new communicant at the true beauty and peacefulness of the life he is living, compared to the horrors which came before, too much of the brightness and too little of the tremendous responsibility of confirmation is given to the candidate, and after the first joy of the new life has been taken away, there stands the new commu-nicant helpless to a greater or less degree. He has stepped into new breathing-spaces, and the air is vitalized with Guilds of Mercy, care of the sick, chapters of praise; in fact, people filled with enthusiasm of the Gospel talk to the newly-confirmed as to how all the hours of the day and night can be spent in worshiping God and singing His praise. The new life opens out such unexpected avenues into work that is most unselfish. Have you ever realized the state of that man upon first learning these things? He must be well nigh suffocated by this vital blast. Suppose him to have cut loose from a number of bad associates, and between times, before he has anchored himself in his new life, and before he can completely tear himself from companions who beg him so pathetically to have one more evening with them, the between times are times fatal to the soul. This between times, this waiting for the old life of discontent to change to the life where content should reign most supreme, is one of the many bad mistakes our own dear Church makes in the charge of her people. In the first place, Church people who are bent upon carrying out to the letter the commands of Christ should be more cordial in their greeting to strangers. In place of the hearty shake of the hand, there is the cold stare and slight inclination. We do not seem to realize that the membership of Communion with God in His Holy Church is a surety for membership of all kinds. There can be no different classes of worshipers in our Church. We are all children of one great family, and should welcome most warmly the new children born into Christ's kingdom. In spite of all this, which is true as far as brotherly love and Christian character go, we find a most unpleasant state of affairs. We are accused as a body with a great lack of hospitality. It has been said of Episcopalians that they do not care whether any one comes into their Church or no. They are indifferent to strangers. Many who have been attracted by the beauty of our service have been prevented from going farther by the coldness and indifference of the members. Certain it is that the denominations are more courteous and considerate than we. The moment people join the Church, then they spare no pains to gradually interest them in some work, to show them the use of this chapter and that, and to persuade them in turn to save the lost sheep, as our Saviour Christ has found and saved them. I wish that we could say the same of our own Church. In every class for confirmation there are some who, after having seen the Priest, perhaps daily, see little of him after confirmation, and feel that they have been neglected. They do not remember that there are other people to be talked to, reasoned with and convinced as to the proper way of living. Or, perhaps, the Church into which they have been confirmed is small and young, and the different chapters of the Guild just begin to realize the obligations of the work. All these things are most discouraging, and it is one of the saddest confessions to make that out of a class of forty who receive confirmation ten become dissatisfied, and gradually drop out of the active Church work, and then stop coming to the services, until one great part of the work here today is the aim to bring back those who have erred and strayed from their ways like lost sheep, and also our duty toward those who have been brought back. The teachings of the parable in its main features is very clear. Bring back the lost sheep and care for them when brought back. As the Lord receives lost sheep, so should we endeavor to do. "When He hath found it He layeth it upon His shoulder rejoicing." Yes, this is all beautifully clear, and on the face of the question there should be no difficulty, but try to apply this law of recovering a soul and there are at once great practical difficulties. It is hard to fix upon any great form of organized effort. There is no doubt of its tremendous value, the value of rescue work. The frequent moral relapse is a sure sign that rescue work has not been sufficiently developed. Why should this after-care principle be so hard to follow? because organized after-care is the very life and principle of part of the Christian duty. This parable, rightly understood, teaches of what spirit we, as Christians, are bound. So long as we remain in the number of men who are quite sure of their own righteousness, we are not among those whom Christ came to save. Then to be Christians best pleasing to God, we must all consider ourselves as lost sheep; and being so, to obey the rescue call which this parable trumpets forth, will cause us to be at the last raised on the merciful shoulders of our Heavenly Father and taken to our Home. I mean this, that unless we all feel ready to turn about and bring some soul to God, then most surely shall we step back again into the old ruts, and rescue work will be done in our behalf, as well as the work which we once started out to do, but now have neglected. If we come into Christ's Church we must do organized work, for if we do not, organized work will need to be directed toward our soul. That covert sneer, "He saved others, Himself He cannot save," surely has become a truth in the measure of these latter days. Finance plays a part in Church matters as elsewhere, and lack of financial organization in the chapters of a Church is another means of bringing shipwreck upon the soul. The keen business man, fresh from the wonders of alliances of trade, is at first amused, disgusted and finally indifferent at the slipshod business methods which are used in conducting Church affairs. Why is it that the Church, which should stand to outsiders as a model of business probity and uprightness, is often anything but this? Brothers, it is to our shame. But, thanks be to God, there is another side to the question, and that is this: Go into the newly-erected Mission House of the Episcopal Church in New York; there you will find all the great branches of the Church's work, which is chiefly the rescue work of the souls. There you will find some of New York's business men actively interesting themselves in the thorough social and financial managements of the different great works. The rescue work, to be properly felt, must be systematized, and, brothers of the laity, the Church looks to you to make it more systematic. Let every Church have a good, plain, systematic method of management, and some of the so-called rescuers will not have to be themselves rescued. That is the call, then, that the Church would make to the laity. She will indicate the kinds of work to be taken up. It is your part to see that the work is placed upon business principles.

It is the Eve of Saint Barnabas. Nearly eight years ago a system of organized work was started among trained nurses. As the parable of the lost sheep reveals God's pity and love toward His fallen creatures, so did His disciples follow the footsteps of the Master in doing deeds of mercy where-so-ever He found need. Taking for their example Saint Barnabas, "with his singular gifts of the Holy Ghost," these few trained nurses began to live their lives about the bed of sickness and pain with the cheering assurances that now the Church was watching their efforts, and that their badge of union was a link between themselves and the higher life; for the very passing of the hand over the bronze is to feel in every nerve the divine vital spark of mercy given to them direct from God the Son. Their rules of life have a twofold meaning and profit. First, the spiritual life of the associates themselves; and second, the "after-care" which such a spiritual life is able to bring to those to whom they minister. The bed of pain and

It is the Eve of Saint Barnabas. Nearly eight years ago a system of organized work was started among trained nurses. As the parable of the lost sheep reveals God's pity and love toward His fallen creatures, so did His disciples follow the footsteps of the Master in doing deeds of mercy where-so-ever He found need. Taking for their example Saint Barnabas, "with his singular gifts of the Holy Ghost," these few trained nurses began to live their lives about the bed of sickness and pain with the cheering assurances that now the Church was watching their efforts, and that their badge of union was a link between themselves and the higher life; for the very passing of the hand over the bronze is to feel in every nerve the divine vital spark of mercy given to them direct from God the Son. Their rules of life have a twofold meaning and profit. First, the spiritual life of the associates themselves; and second, the "after-care" which such a spiritual life is able to bring to those to whom they minister. The bed of pain and sickness is a mighty teacher of itself, and upon it rest many "lost sheep," who need the gentle Christian direction of their poor souls. The associates have the assistance of Priests whenever they call upon them. One vow, which at the time of entrance to the Order do they make, and that vow should be always uppermost in the minds and hearts of associates. The Holy Communion, administered in the intention of their work, the sole means of success both for rescuers and rescued. To that end, the more they call upon the Priest Associates to celebrate at the bed of the sufferer, the more will the organized work for Christ be a mighty power to save souls alive. The property of the true nurse is gentleness and pity. Here is no coldness in welcoming the sinner back to physical and moral God-like health. And so the Guild of Saint Barnabas for Nurses, with its thorough organization and plan for Christian work, both for its members and those to whom it ministers, stands as an admirable example of one of the best methods of rescue work, and it is a direct following out of one of the hardest teachings of the Christian faith. The patience and perseverance—the endless toil involved in the effort to recover the lost sheep—to bring to repentance him who has erred and strayed, it is the hardest of all duties to win the crown here; but let the members of the Guild remember their badge: "Blessed are the Merciful!"

Let this then, brothers, who are daily discouraged with poorness of management and weakness of organization found elsewhere, let this thought be a mighty encouragement for you. While every one cannot be associated with the Guild whose working I have mentioned, yet there is a glorious chance for every one who is a communicant to turn away and do for his friend who has erred and strayed what has been done for him. Then would the whole state of Christ's Church militant be turned into a rescue army for after-care; then would we all be able to say: "Rejoice with me for I have found the sheep which was lot!" Amen.

Stability.

"We shall continue to do business at the old stand." So a member of the congregation recently indicated the result of the negotiations in which we have all been interested of late, and which had for their object the removal of the church to another site, the payment of the debt on the church and other buildings, and the provision of a permanent endowment for the Parish. The account of the failure of these negotiations is already a thrice-told tale, and need not be repeated here. There are probably few members of the Parish who are not glad to remain in the old church, however much they may regret the failure to acquire a new and handsomer one, together with a sum of money, which would have put us beyond the possibility of financial embarrassment; while there are some whose affection for the very stones of St. Clement's is such that they would gladly retain them on any terms. But the somewhat secularly-worded sentence which begins this article suggests some topics which it is well to consider.

In the first place, the old stand's standing-power is somewhat doubtful; in other words, the church is in urgent need of external repairs as well as of interior re-decoration, which would cost from $1,000 to $1,500. This sum is not at present available; and we should consider whether it could not, by some means, be provided.

Then, as to our "business," there is still a debt of $23,500 on the church and parish buildings. The debt on the church is as old as the church itself, and has been reduced by a great deal since it was contracted.

But it is nothing short of a scandal (for which, however, the present generation is not responsible), that there should remain any debt whatever upon a consecrated building; and the payment, annually, of $1,000, by way of interest, from which the Parish derives no direct advantage, seems to be an unprofitable kind of outlay.

It is to be hoped that some scheme may be devised by which the debt may be further reduced, if not completely extinguished. Lastly, there is our proper "business"—the salvation of souls and the extension of Christ's Kingdom on earth; and it is impossible to resist the conviction that if we can be thoroughly in earnest about this, we shall not long be troubled with any anxiety on other matters.

May the Happy New Year, which we wish all our readers, see the "old stand," which has weathered so many storms, more firmly fixed upon its material foundations, and get more deeply rooted in the affections of those whose life's chief business is centred there!

Is YOUR number in the delinquent pledge-list?

James Alexander.

Funeral services were held in the chapel Thursday morning, December 13th, over the body of James Alexander, who met his death in an accident while engaged in his occupation of carpenter. Quite a large congregation was present, as were also members of the Sons of St. George, and the Guilds of St. John Evangelist and the Iron Cross. The Rev. Geo. T. Griffith was celebrant.

Correspondence.

C. M. W.—Why isn't ST. CLEMENT'S MAGAZINE entered as second-class mail matter?

Extract from "Official Postal Guide," page 19: "Rate of postage on second-class matter sent by publishers or newsagents is one cent per pound, except that on other than weekly newspapers, when the same are deposited in a letter carrier office for delivery by its carriers, the rate is uniform at one cent each, to be prepaid by affixing an ordinary one cent stamp to each paper, and on periodicals, excepting weeklies, mailed at a letter carrier office for delivery by its carriers, not exceeding two ounces in weight, the rate is one cent each, to be prepaid by affixing an ordinary one cent stamp to each publication; if weighing over two ounces, two cents each, to be prepaid by affixing two cents in ordinary stamps to each publication."

As our subscribers are almost entirely in the city we would derive no benefit by having the magazine entered as second-class matter.

EDITOR OF ST. CLEMENT'S MAGAZINE.

SIR:—It seems to me that it would be a good plan to publish the names of the persons who are on the delinquent pledge-list. Some of those on the list may not know their number and so forget that they are in arrears.

Respectfully, M. A. T.

The members of St. John's Guild do not, evidently, like the snow. Wednesday evening, December 26th, the meeting night, was a stormy one, but the storm was not a good enough reason for so small an attendance. Only three members, including the chaplain, had arrived at 8.15 o'clock, and only four more at 8.30; not enough for a meeting.

It was impolite to the lecturer, to say the least.

The Parish Tea.

The members of the Parish had their annual tea in the school-room, Tuesday evening, November 27th.

In the forepart of the evening it must have been a difficult matter for a man to "hear himself think." It was a merry party, almost like a huge family, each one talking to his neighbor, and the ever-present small boy, like the shrill whistle at a ship launch, being heard above all the others. Refreshments were served by the fairest maidens of the Parish, and although some persons were served three or four times and others not at all, which, by the way, was their own fault for not asking, yet all were happy.

"The Kentucky Bell" was recited in a very charming manner by Miss Emelie B. Brown, who is quite a young lady. But as it is impolite to guess a lady's age, we will not say that she is scarcely in her "teens." When the applause had ceased, Mr. E. Belinfante gave us the benefit of his baritone voice in a solo: "When Knights were Bold."

The Rev. A. B. Sharpe made an address appropriate to the occasion, and made allusion to the proposed sale of the church and parish buildings, and then Mr. John Neill stated a few "cold facts" and mentioned a few figures, showing the urgent need of money, and the means of acquiring it. While every one saw the evil, few could with pleasure accept the remedy. The evening's enjoyment closed with a vocal solo by Mr. Remi Remont.

A good New Year resolution—to pay your pledge.

"The Choir Boys' Recreation Club" wish to thank the kind friends who have sent them books and magazines, and whose names are not known to them. The boys continue to spend happy evenings, and enjoy the addition to their Club of three honorary members, two ladies and a gentleman, who come regularly to the Club every week, and add much to the interest and enjoyment of the boys in joining in their games and instructing them in new games.

Our Illustration.

With this number of the magazine we present our readers with a reproduction of a photograph of the interior of St. Clement's Church, showing the altar as it was on the Sunday after St. Clement's Day. This is the best photograph that has ever been taken of the interior of the church, and it is really a work of art. It is ten by thirteen inches, and mounted on fourteen by seventeen inches white cardboard. Copies may be bought at a small price from the sexton or from Mr. E. Belinfante, 1416 Fairmount avenue, by whom the photograph was taken.

Christmas Day.

The Christmas festival has been a bright and joyous one. The number of communicants, in spite of absence and sickness, was greater than last year. The church, thanks to the labors of the Guild of St. Vincent, presents the festive appearance usual at this season, and the music (Mozart's Seventh Mass) at the High Celebration on Christmas Day did infinite credit to choir, organist, and choir master. After the service a meeting of the choir boys was held, under the presidency of Mr. Remont, at which a number of rewards for diligence and good conduct and Christmas presents were distributed, and a silver medal was presented to Miss Darrah by the members of the Choir Club, amid much enthusiasm.

The mission services during Advent were well attended, and there were more people present at every service than at the eleven o'clock celebration on Christmas Day. The Rev. Father Huntington, Order of the Holy Cross, preached the sermons.

Girls' Friendly Society.

A preliminary meeting, for the formation of a Branch of this Society in the Parish, was held on Monday evening, December 17th, and was well attended.

Mrs. Kilgour, 2300 De Lancey place, was elected President, and Miss Ruff, 318 South Twenty-first street, was elected Secretary. Mrs. Fox, 2009 Pine street, and Miss Weiser, 1800 Arch street, became Associates.

The Girls' Friendly Society, as is probably well known, is a large organization in England and America of girls and young women who are united in it for the purpose of mutual help and improvement, and for encouragement in leading a Christian life. The affairs of each Branch are managed by the Associates; and there are also Honorary Associates who are not necessarily engaged in the work of the Society, but are interested in and sympathize with its objects, and contribute not less than one dollar a year to its funds.

We trust the Branch now formed at St. Clement's will have a useful and prosperous career.

The first regular meeting will be held on Tuesday, January 8th, at 8 P. M. Any girl who may think of joining will be welcome at this meeting.

Honorary Associates are needed for this Branch; and those who are willing to join in this capacity are asked to communicate with the President, Secretary, or one of the Associates, or with the Rector.

Several contributions have been unavoidably withheld from this number.—ED.

DUBLIN.

Let me tell you somewhat of the history of this most beautiful city:

You have all, doubtless, heard of the ravages of the Danes in England, but have you ever heard of the ravages of the Danes in Ireland? If not, let me give you a brief history in so far as it relates to the subject of this article.

Who has not heard of the celebrated Ragnor Lodbrook (or, as he is called in Irish history, Turgesius), whose descendants founded the Danish kingdom of Northumberland? Presuming you have heard of him, he it was who likewise founded the Danish kingdom of Dublin (circum A. D. 840). Landing in the northern part of the island, near Coleraine, he sailed up the River Bann, and entered Lough Neagh. Disembarking upon its shores, he proceeded to attack Armagh (A. D. 832), which then, as now, exercised supreme ecclesiastical dominion over Ireland. After a long siege, during which it was thrice assaulted in one month without success, it at length yielded, and from it he extended his conquests until he came to the ford of Ath Cliagh, or Dublin.

With the eye of a skilful general, Turgesius recognized its importance as a centre of operations, and captured it. Before his time it had been simply a ford, where the great road from Tara (the ancient Irish capital) to Wicklow, Arklow and Wexford, crossed the Liffey. A village existed there before his days, which was deemed worthy of notice by such an authority as Tacitus, in his "Vita. Jul. Agricola;" but Ragnor Lodbrook, or Turgesius, was the first to mark the fitness of the place as a military stronghold, and to erect there the Dun or Castle of Dublin, which now, for over a thousand years, has overawed the natives and guarded the ford of the Liffey.

Thus Dublin took its rise, and thus it came into prominence, first as a commercial centre, and afterward as a military stronghold.

And now for a tour of the city, and as all distances in Dublin are reckoned from the General Post Office, we will first of all visit that imposing structure.

It is a truly magnificent building, in the Grecian style of architecture, and stands at the junction of Upper with Lower O'Connell street (formerly Sackville street), and between Prince and Henry streets. The letter-boxes, or, as they are called on this side the water, "letter-drops," are on the outside of the building, underneath the colonnade which forms the stately facade of the building. The apertures of these letter-boxes are closed on the inside by a hinged shutter, which falls against the opening, and is held tightly in place by a very strong spring. Punctually as the great clock of the General Post Office booms out 6 P. M., the busy clerk inside touches the lever, and down comes the shutter, causing the enamored but impecunious swain, to deposit the precious "billet doux" in the "too late" box, paying thereon a "too late" fee of an additional penny (two cents). Failing this, it will remain over until the next mail, or, "horribil dictu," have the sweet object of his vows pay double postage thereon, and that would never do.

Many are the expedients resorted to in order to prevent the falling of the shutter. Here one, with more daring than good sense, inserts his fingers so that he may prevent its shutting at the exact moment, but the mechanism is perfect and inexorable. The clock strikes six, with a bang the shutter falls, and above the din and confusion rises a howl of anguish and some prayer, which, it were well for the hearers, were in a tongue not understanded of the people.

Surmounting this facade are three statuesque figures. What they actually represent I have forgotten, but let me tell you a story, which may explain somewhat of their history:

"Once upon a time an English tourist visited Dublin, and started forth to see the sights, hiring for this purpose an Irish jaunting car, driven by a ready-witted and humorous son of 'the ould sod.'

"Passing up Sackville (now O'Connell street) he observed through his monocle the General Post Office, when the following dialogue took place:

"'Pat, what building is that?'

"'That's the Posht Offis (post office), yer 'oner (honor).'

"'And Pat, what are the figures on the statues on top?'

"'Thim's the twilve (twelve) Aposhles (Apostles), yer 'oner.'

"'Oh, Pat, that cawn't be. I see only three figures?'

"'But it's as thrue as I'm tellin' ye, yer 'oner.'

"'But, man, it cawn't be; there are but three figures.'

"'But, shure an' it's as thrue as the Blissid Goshpel (gospel), yer 'oner what oim afther tellin' ye. Shure that's Saint Pether an' Saint James an' Saint John, an' the resht (rest) av thim is inside soartin (sorting) the letthers (letters).'"

Everything in Ireland, save the Protestantism of the Irish Church has an apostolic origin. J. G. E.

To the Parishioners of St. Clement's.

MY DEAR FRIENDS:—You are doubtless all aware that I have been called to my old work in London, the charge of which has been rendered vacant by the unexpected death of the Vicar of St. Peter's Vauxhall, about two months ago, and I have decided, after much hesitation, to accept the invitation. I shall greatly regret leaving St. Clement's after holding the chief responsibility for so short a time. But I think the affairs of the Parish may be best cared for in the future by one who is either an American by birth or, at least, has a longer acquaintance with this country than I have.

In the meantime the Parish is in good condition financially, and it may be hoped and believed spiritually as well. The Vestry are making earnest efforts to find the right man for the rectorship, in which they are, I trust, aided by your constant prayers; and there is every reason to believe that, if the people of St. Clement's will but remain united and faithful, the blessing of God will be upon the Parish in the future as it has been in the past. Though my departure for England cannot be delayed much beyond the beginning of March, I hope to remain with you long enough to see the new rector appointed and arrangements made for carrying on the work of the Parish efficiently.

I cannot, I fear, expect to see much of St. Clement's hereafter, and I shall always feel the warmest interest in its welfare, and I trust you will sometimes remember me and my work, which will not be a light or easy one, in your prayers.

Yours, faithfully in Christ,

A. B. SHARPE.

Annual Dinner of the Guild of St. Vincent.

The Guild of St. Vincent held its annual dinner at the Hotel Aldine on St. Vincent's day, Tuesday, January 22d, 1895. Every member, with one exception, was present. Professor W. A. Goodwin, of Bellefonte, Pa., organist and choirmaster at St. John's P. E. Church, was there in all his glory. The Rector presided at the head of the table. There was the usual amount of bantering and sarcasm, which can only be appreciated by a member of St. Vincent's Guild. A continual spirit of mirth was kept up throughout the dinner, especially when the punch was served, the flavor of which was doubtful, and one member, presumably a devotee of Mrs. Winslow, suggested soothing syrup. One of the members enjoyed Turkish cigarettes, his appetite for which was appeased before the close of the evening, and probably for some time to come. A letter of regret was read from Mr. Wright, the absent one. One of the members evidently liked apples, several being found under his chair after dinner. Red and white were the colors of the evening, they being the colors of the Guild.

The Choir Boys' Recreation Club.

The boys continue to have their pleasant Tuesday evening. There is usually a good attendance, and the evening passes much too quickly, it would seem, from the reluctance with which they reply to the "good night, boys," which is the signal for hats and overcoats. The Club has had gifts of many new games in the last month, and a number of magazines. The same kind friend, who last winter furnished the means for an occasional refreshment evening, has again kindly remembered them. The absorbing interest of the Club just now is the concert, which they are preparing to give next month, and where they hope to see all their friends.

The next meeting of St. John's Guild will be Wednesday, February 27th, 8 P. M.

Part II—"Who is Who"—Mr. Simonides Swanhopper, Mr. C. Bill, Mr. Lawrence Lavender, Mr. M. B. Matthews; Mr. Broomfield Brambleton, Mr. G. S. Christie; Miss Cicely, Miss Susan H. Arnold; Matilda Jane, Miss Florence Allibone.

The music will be under the direction of Mr. Remi Remont, choirmaster of St. Clement's Church.

The Choir Concert.

It has been decided to hold the choir concert on the evening of Thursday, February 21st, in the Sunday-school room. Tickets will be placed on sale in a few days (possibly by the time this issue of the magazine appears), and can then be obtained from the choir-mistress, the sexton, the choir-master, or the organist. The price of general admission will be twenty-five cents; but for the benefit of those who find the Sunday-school benches and forms inconvenient, or who desire to secure more desirable places, several rows of chairs will be placed directly in front of the stage, and these seats, which will be reserved, will be sold at fifty cents each.

The choir feels that it has many friends in the Parish; and, as it is to be presumed that each friend will purchase at least one ticket for the concert, quite a large audience is expected. In anticipation of this the members of the choir have been for some time hard at work, and are, apparently, determined not only to merit the good opinion of their friends, but to send the latter away from the concert feeling that they have received several times the value of their tickets. Although the aim will be to have a strictly first-class concert, it is not proposed to make it wearisomely formal or classic. Those who come merely to be entertained and amused will not, therefore, go away disappointed; and neither will those who desire to hear some good music be compelled to leave with that desire unsatisfied.

As soon as all the details of the programme have been definitely arranged, it is probable that preliminary copies will be printed for distribution to the purchasers of tickets; suffice it to say at present, therefore, that there will be, among other things, instrumental solos, vocal solos, songs by the boys, glees by the gentlemen, choruses by the full choir, and, perhaps—though this is not yet positive—selections by an orchestra. In fact, there will be such a bewildering variety of good things and funny things and serious things—and things of all sorts—that we are rather inclined to think that it may, perhaps, be advisable, after all, to adopt the suggestion which the choir-master recently made to us, but which we thought at the time more humorous than practical, namely, "Be on the safe side, buy tickets as soon as they are placed on sale, and 'avoid the rush.'"

A Peculiar Incident.

A sailor was shipwrecked on the treacherous shore of a very small desert island; so small, in fact, that it did not take the worthy seaman more than a half hour to walk around it. The third day after he had been shipwrecked he began to give up all hope, and determined that after taking one last feeble walk around the island he would resign himself to fate and struggle no further against the inevitable. He walked slowly, gazing longingly upon the bright expanse of water, until he came to the little inlet where he had floated ashore. He stood taking a last sorrowful farewell of it when his eyes suddenly lighted on a dark object lying in the sand. He hurried forward, and picking it up found it to be a box of cigars. He had been an inveterate smoker all his life, so his joy was unbounded. He sat down and opened the box, and to his delight found the upper layer perfectly dry and smokable. But, horrible predicament! How could he light one? Not even a flint did the island boast of. A wave of bitter disappointment came over him. How he would have enjoyed one last smoke before he died. He sat gazing at the cigars in the box, and as he was doing so a brilliant idea suddenly struck him. With the quickness of thought and the avidity of a famished man, he snatched a cigar, and the cigar-box became a cigar lighter. E. C. P.

"Noel."

I.

Full many a round of years have swung
Their Christmas bells from turrets old,
Since erst in Orient lands was sung
The message glad—by angels told—
The joyful news—the Christ-child's birth,
Rung out in blessings over earth.

II.

Above us still upon the night
That dims our path, there beams a star
Whose lustre is so wondrous bright,
It seems Heaven's gates are left ajar
That erring children such as we
The glories of that land may see.

III.

We roam not now in doubtful quest
To find the Babe wise men adored;
We, at His feet, seek that dear rest,
They clearly know, who love our Lord;
Oh! let us then while pilgrims here
In faith arise and follow Thee.

IV.

Be Thou the Star to bless and cheer
And guide us o'er life's stormy sea;
And surely to that country blest
Our lone, frail barks in safety bring,
And bid us wave-worn wanderers rest
Forever with our Lord and King.

Choir Notes.

Donations continue to come in for the Choir Boys' Recreation Club, and the equipment of this organization is gradually becoming so complete that the meetings are a genuine pleasure to the boys, and are always well attended by members and ex-members of the choir. In fact, so attractive and enjoyable are the meetings of the Club becoming under the present able and progressive management, that there are, at times, as many as half a dozen adults present; and if the attendance of the "grown folks" continues to increase, it may be necessary, in time, to limit admission to those holding tickets. At any rate, if the new and novel plans at present under consideration by the supporters of the Club are put into execution (as they probably will be), it is, to say the least, not at all likely that the Club will decrease in popularity. We are heartily glad to observe the steadily increasing prosperity of this Club, glad, not only for the sake of the organizer, whose disinterested and self-sacrificing labors have created and fostered it, but also because of the insinuating and unobtrusive influence for good which it exerts among the choir boys.

GHOSTS.

I have been asked to read before you a paper having for its subject the gruesome title "Ghosts." A request coming from such a dignified body as the Guild of St. John is worthy of all due respect, and the subject which in its wisdom it saw fit to set down for treatment should be treated by one skilled in the ghostly science. Now, I do not profess to be at all skilled in this particular science—the fact is, I know practically nothing at all about it. I approach the subject, therefore, more in the sense of a learner seeking more light, and simply throw out a few suggestions which have suggested themselves to my mind. If in any point I have made mistakes, I pray your pardon, begging you, ere passing judgment, to remember the story of the Irishman and the Bishop adorned with valid Catholic orders, but imbued nevertheless with Protestant theology.

This Irishman (being his valet and a Roman Catholic) was one morning addressed by his master as to the truth of this axiom "Outside the Catholic Church there is no salvation." The argument waxed long and hot, the Bishop maintaining that it was a monstrous thing to assert such an axiom much more maintain it. At last, to bring matters to a crisis, His Lordship said, "Well, Pat, do you think it likely that I, staunch Protestant as I am, will be saved?"

"Well, me Lord," said Pat, "if ye are to be saved at all, at all, it will be by raison av yer onconcaivable ignorance."

I pray you remember this, and be charitable in your judgments because of my "onconcaivable" ignorance of the whole matter.

Two questions face us as we consider this matter.

1st. What is a ghost?

2d. Do ghosts appear to mortal beings?

What is a ghost? I can tell you what it is supposed to be. A ghost is supposed to be an apparition, or the appearing of the spirit of some person, in visible shape or form, and whose body has been dead for some time, long or short, at a certain fixed place and at a certain fixed time, amid certain surroundings to certain persons. It is said to have neither flesh nor bones, but to appear as a thin film or vapor, in shadowy outlines of the deceased to certain mortals for the purpose of giving admonition or guidance to that person, warning him or her of danger about to be incurred by himself or already incurred by some member of his family or devoted friend, or even of his own death. It is also said to inform the person of the means to be used for averting the threatened calamity. In other words, and very briefly stated, a ghost is the spirit of the deceased come back to earth.

Now we are face to face with the second query. Can this be so, or as I have already put it in other language, do ghosts appear to mortal beings? In answer, I admit at once that it may be possible, but nevertheless it is highly improbable. Again, if it be possible, can the spirit of the deceased be seen? For if the living spirit of a living man or woman be not seen, is it not reasonable to conclude that the living spirit of a dead man cannot be seen?

Now, I am far from saying with Lucretius in his work "De Rerum Natura" Book III, that the spirit is born with the body, it grows with the body, it decays with the body, it dies with the body.

You ask me: How then are you to account for the appearance of the Banshee in Ireland, and the various other apparitions which have from time to time appeared to persons of undoubted intellectual ability.

I offer the following as a reasonable explanation though, I am far from making it an "ex cathedra" pronouncement. My opinion is that the whole subject is unexplainable, and that with our present limited knowledge it will remain inexplicable. But may not the following be somewhat near the truth: That the persons who see such apparitions are the victims of hallucination, or a diseased state of the imagination. Because the activity of the imagination is the chief source of certain mental appearances in nature outside of, or contrary to, regular natural laws.

These extraordinary appearances are called; 1st. Illusions or deceptive appearances. 2d. Hallucinations or diseased state of the mind; and 3d. Dreams.

The causes of these hallucinations we may divide into two great classes: Subjective and Objective.

Subjective hallucinations are those which are caused by mental influences.

Objective, those caused by irregular conditions of the world, including in the term world the state of our own organism.

Now the material directly presented to us, even by the power of sight, is very small indeed. By far the greater part of our information is obtained by means of the memory, by inference and kindred sensations of other of our faculties faintly revived in our imagination.

PHILADELPHIA, MARCH, 1895.

At a meeting of the Vestry, Friday February 22d, the Rev. G. H. Moffett was elected Rector.

The Envelope System.

The financial year of the Church ends March 25th; and before that date, envelopes for the year 1895–6 will be sent to all those who are at present pledged to contribute a fixed sum to the weeky offertory; and it will be considered that the amount pledged in each case will be continued for the ensuing year, unless notice is given at once to the contrary.

The expenditures for the year are based upon the income entirely, which is represented by pew rents, pledged and unpledged offerings. Of these the last item is an uncertain one, and therefore every member of the Parish should make a fixed and regular contribution to its support. Those who do not now take the pledges should do so, and all should pledge as much as possible.

The results of the pledge system during the past year have been quite gratifying, and we have, after a fashion, been able to live within our income. But there is still a debt of $23,500 on the Church and Parish buildings, and there is pressing need of exterior repairs as well as interior redecoration. Our income must be increased, and it can be very largely if we all do our share.

Diocese of Pennsylvania.

A Quiet Day for Churchwomen will be held on the second Thursday in Lent, March 7th, 1895, at the Church of the Incarnation, Broad and Jefferson streets, Philadelphia, to be conducted by Rt. Rev. PHILA., Feb. 25th, 1895.

MR. EDITOR:

Dear Sir.—Whether the choir concert was a success financially it is impossible to say at present, as all the returns have not yet been made. That it was a success in every other respect, however, seems to be the unanimous opinion. The two great objects of the management were, First, to give a good concert; Second, to make money; and, as the first was not sacrificed to the second, the expenses were greater than might be supposed, and the profits will, consequently, be correspondingly light. However, there is an enjoyable sense of satisfaction in having done a thing to the best of one's ability; and as the choir did the best it could under the circumstances, it is experiencing —from the oldest member to the youngest, from the biggest man to the smallest boy—the sense of gratification referred to. Imperfect as the entertainment was in many respects, it seems to have given considerable enjoyment; and, whether the profits be great or small, we have the pleasure of knowing that, in the opinion of our friends, the choir has, in this matter, lived well up to its motto, namely: "If a thing is worth doing at all, it is worth doing well."

The choir feels that its sincere thanks are due to the audience, not only for their patronage but for their close and gratifying attention; and if those present enjoyed the affair as much as did the choir itself, they certainly secured the full value of the money invested.

Personally, I feel that my own thanks are due to the members of the choir for their interest, enthusiasm and zeal. The concert involved much extra work and considerable hard training, all of which was cheerfully submitted to without even the suggestion of a complaint from the smallest boy; and, though it may not come altogether graceful from me, I nevertheless feel constrained to say that I certainly think the members of the choir and the friends associated with them in the enterprise, fully merit any success the concert may have achieved.

Very truly yours,
REMI REMONT, Choir-master.

C. M. W.—We will try to publish hymn in next paper.

Sunday-school Entertainment.

The entertainment for the benefit of the Sunday-school and Poor Fund was given Tuesday evening, February 5th. In "The Happy Pair," Miss Helen Caldcleugh Staley played the part of Mrs. Honeyton, and Mr. George Stuart Christie that of Mr. Honeyton.

It was not definitely decided to have the second play, "Who is Who?" until two weeks before the date, and though it was enjoyable, want of more study and rehearsals was too plainly evident.

The Guild of St. Vincent.

The annual meeting of the Guild of St. Vincent was held Wednesday evening, February 6th, 1895. Mr. I. Ernest Linton was reëlected Warden, and Mr. J. C. Goodwin, Jr., was also reëlected Secretary and Treasurer. This Guild now enters into its ninth year as an organization of St. Clement's Parish. It was founded in January, 1887, by Father Field, previous to which the Acolytes were all members of the old St. Christopher's Guild. Of the original members five are still serving, and still members of this Guild, A. W. Howes, W. H. Carson, Erskine Wright, P. T. Kneale and J. C. Goodwin, Jr. The Guild has a membership of twenty-two, twenty of whom are active, one is in the General Theological Seminary, New York, and one is living in Bellefonte, Pennsylvania. The amount of church work that devolves upon the members of the Guild of St. Vincent includes very much more than their actual service at the altar, and the full extent of it can hardly be known to the congregation in general, and the extent and nature of this work inevitably involves the danger of formalism and unreality which has always to be fought against by each member. We therefore ask your occasional prayer for the Acolytes serving to keep warm their affection and love for the service of God, and to help them to be pure and sincere in their daily life. Surely such a prayer will be of benefit to the Guild of St. Vincent in its life and work, and in the uncertainties and changes in this Parish will help them to be faithful and united, and to keep always before them their motto—Amori Christi et Ecclesiæ.

The Choir Concert.

Like the sudden ascent and the brilliant bursting of a sky-rocket the choir concert passed into history.

We cannot single out any one thing and say it was best, because they were all best. Master Herbert Wayne, especially, covered himself with glory, and after his clarionet solo he had grown about six inches taller.

Choir, choir-master and organist have the congratulations and best wishes of the members of the Parish.

Erin-go-Bragh.

Sackville street, Dublin, is a street of monuments to the illustrious dead who have fought the battles of their country by land or sea, or who have benefited the municipality by their services and labors on its behalf.

Foremost among these monuments stands that of Lord Nelson, commonly spoken of as "Nelson's Pillar," or "The Pillar." On its base the victories of this naval hero are recorded, including that of Trafalgar. The monument is about 220 feet in height, and is surmounted by his statue in full naval uniform, as an Admiral of the Fleet.

From the top of the "Pillar" a magnificent view can be obtained on a clear day of the Bay of Dublin and the mountains of Wicklow and Dublin, and all this can be seen for the modest sum of two pence (4 cents), plus aching limbs caused by the climb to the summit.

To the north is seen an unfinished statue to the memory of Father Matthew, the Irish "Apostle of Temperance."

To the south can be seen the marble statue of Sir John Gray, Baronet, erected to commemorate his successful efforts to introduce a pure water supply to the city. Before his term of office Dublin suffered to a limited degree under the same evils as Philadelphia in aqueous matters.

The water supply, however, never did attain, even in its most evil days, to the consistency of liquid mud. Now, thanks to the exertions of the honorable Baronet, Dublin possesses in the "Vartry water" the purest drinking water in the world. It is conveyed by pipes from the source of the River Vartry in the Wicklow mountains to the water mains of the city, and "the highest satisfaction" has been not only "guaranteed," but obtained, and "the reservoir does not leak."

Next, at the northern entrance to O'Connell bridge (formerly Carlisle bridge), stands the bronze statue of "the Liberator," Daniel O'Connell, while at the southern entrance is placed the white marble statue of the leader of "48," William Smith O'Brien.

Continuing our walk southward through Westmoreland street we came to College street, and here stands the bronze statue of the poet Moore, immortalized forever by his poem on the "Vale of Avoca."

To his left stands "dear old Trinity," within whose walls the youths of Erin love to contend for the mastery in law, medicine, divinity, science and arts. Of which college more anon.

Right in front stands College Green; apparently a misnomer, as not a blade of grass is to be found on that busy thoroughfare. Why then so-called?

Dublin, as I have already told you, was partly of Danish origin. Now this name "Green" carries us back to the Danes from whom it obtains its name. Every Scandinavian Assembly had attached to it a "Green" or place of assembly, surrounded by a thingmote or hill, on which the leaders and chiefs took their seats, and from whence the laws were proclaimed.

This Scandinavian institution obtains to this day in the Isle of Man, where the laws which are passed by the House of Keys have no force till they have first been proclamed from the Tynwald.

Now Hogges Green or College Green served to Dublin in olden time the self same purpose as the Tynwald does to the Isle of Man.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

A Dream.

It was in the year 1894 that I had a dream, a dream that to me was very solemn. I dreamt that I was going over to some other country, and this country was far away, and when I went down to the landing to go on the boat it had gone, and a man told me that I would have no other way to go except by water, and the distance was great. I thought to my self how could I get there, but God was with me, as He is always, with my thoughts and actions. And the man told me if I would wait the ship would return and I could be carried over safely. My thoughts at that time were with no one but the Lord. The Lord had sent His kind angel and told me to lower myself down to the edge of the water, and as I was going along something took hold of me and lifted me over the water, and I went over dry shod. And the angel of the Lord said: "Keep cheer, for I am with thee."

After I had come to that beautiful country I could not express the happiness, joy and peace which I enjoyed. There were all my kind friends, father, mother, brothers, sisters, my kind associates that were here, were there, and such a meeting it was to meet all those that I loved on earth. And, therefore, I was in the spirit that day as John saw it. And behold how nice and joyful it is to trust in the Lord, and such happiness to meet with the Saviour there above. Sickness, death, disappointments were never known. And, my dear friends, it was a very pleasant dream for me to think of being in that celestial country. The light of that day was superior to the sun on earth, it was so bright and pure. I have never gotten through praising the Lord for passing me over that river, the water of which was as clear as crystal.

GHOSTS.

Accordingly, the condition of the mind immediately before the impression of any particular object, has a most important influence in determining how this object (ghost for example) will be perceived. If the imagination be vigorously excited (e. g., by a ghost story), and we have a lively expectation of seeing something special occur, there is, to say the least, a strong probability that anything bearing even a remote resemblance to it will be mistaken for the thing itself. I well remember being in 1883 for a short time in the county of Meath, in Ireland. Near the rectory was a farmer's cottage. In the neighborhood of this cottage his Satanic majesty was by common repute supposed to appear at frequent intervals, and in the shape of an animal which is doomed to exclusion from the Heavenly Jerusalem; that of an enormously large dog, whose coat was, of course, of sable hue.

The farmer was possessed of a large black dog, and on one occasion a neighbor's porcine gentry had invaded, after dusk, the horticultural preserves of the farmer. His daughter perceiving the scene of havoc and destruction rushed forth, calling to her assistance this famous dog. Having successfully disloged the invaders and pursued them, even until she was weary, she began to retrace her steps homeward. On the way she perceived approaching a son of the soil in a rather jovial frame of mind, caused by a loving indulgence in the famous beverage called the "crathur."

As a gentleman in such a state is rather demonstrative, and to a limited (?) degree a nuisance, this young woman very wisely retreated into the shadows of the well-kept hedge row of white thorn, and awaited the further course of events. Her dog, meanwhile, guarded her as jealously as ever Cerburus guarded the gates of Hell, pacing to and fro with bristling neck and fiery eyes.

Onward came the joyous swain, singing the old song, "I lost me hat and I'll never get drunk any more," until opposite her hiding place, when a fierce growl recalled him to his senses, sobered him instantly in fact.

"Oh, may the Holy Saint Patrick preserve us," said he; "sure an 'tis often enough I've herd tell that the divil himself was seen in this shpot, but I niver believed it afore; an shure now, shure enough, here he is; bad luck to 'im; right forninsht me, loike a big black dog as big as a calf and wid red eyes in him as big as saucers. God deliver me sowl," said he; "but how am I to get pasht him at all, at all." With that came another growl from the dog. "Och, murther, di ye hear him now, just like his Rivirince tould us off of the Althar lasht Sunday, like a roarin' lion sakin' whom he may devour. Saints aloive, but I musht get out av this some way or another." Summoning up all his courage, he faced to the right about and went back, crossed the hedge and into the fields, and making a wide detour passed the fatal spot, and believes to this day that he really saw his Satanic majesty.

PHILADELPHIA, APRIL, 1895.

PARISH NOTES.

It is expected that the Bishop of the Diocese will visit St. Clements, to give confirmation, some time in May, the date has not been agreed upon. The clergy would ask all those who desire to be prepared, to give their names as soon as convenient, that the classes may be arranged for and proper instructions given.

Envelopes for the next year have been sent to all who have been subscribers during the past year. Every member of the congregation ought to give regularly each week, for only in this way can the services be maintained and the work carried on. It is very desirable that a larger number of subscribers be obtained even for small amounts, and envelopes would gladly be supplied to any who send their names.

Father Huntington, O. H. C., will preach at the "Three Hours" on Good Friday. The attendance at the Sunday night services has been very good. The plain, practical nature of the conferences of Father Sargent cannot fail to produce a good deal of thought on an important subject which is too often lost sight of. St. Clements is under great obligations to the Order of Holy Cross for their help, spiritual and practical, during this Lent.

The Dorcas Society asks for further contributions in money and work, that they may be able to meet the many calls made on them; donations may be sent to Miss Mary Lex, 11 South Twenty-first street.

Penitents may avoid the hurry and numbers by coming early in Holy week for their confessions. It will also relieve the clergy somewhat. The hours will be found in the Kalendar of the MAGAZINE; also on the notice boards in the corridor. Easter Day ought to appeal to all communicants, so that they would prepare and receive the Sacraments with proper dispositions. Last year the number of communicants was greater than the former year, and it is to be hoped that there may be a further increase this year.

Members of the congregation, whose names and adresses are unknown to the clergy, are asked to write them out and give to the clergy. Any who desire to be considered members of the congregation will kindly obtain letters of transfer from their former parishes and present them, for only in that way can their names be entered on our register. The clergy are always glad to know all who attend the services.

Persons who desire to make a thank offering for any blessing or privilege, are reminded of the sinking fund, which is being accumulated to take up the ground rent when it becomes due. Money may be placed in an envelope marked as to the intended purpose, and put in the alms basin; it will be given to the Trustees of the fund. This ought to appeal to all, each member of the congregation ought to give at least once in the year for this purpose.

Many repairs are needed in and about the church buildings; money is asked for the repair fund. It may be designated for the particular object in which the person is interested. Acknowledgments will be made in the MAGAZINE of money given either for sinking fund or repair fund.

A well kept Lent ought to mean a generous offering at Easter. Let each one do what he can, and there will be no reason to complain.

The usual retreats have been held—the Outer Sisters of all Saints at the Mission House during the first week of Lent; the members of Holy Cross Guild on second Sunday in Lent at the same place. Both were very well attended. The mothers' retreat, conducted by Rev. W. W. Rutherford, of Holy Comforter, was held on Thursday, March 28th. The Guild of St. Vincent expects to have a retreat on Passion Sunday. F. Sargent has very kindly promised to take the retreat. Members may show their appreciation by making the retreat earnestly and carrying out the fruits of it.

The men's retreat is to take place on Palm Sunday; the names of all who expect to make the retreat are asked for, that means may be provided.

Letters have been received of Rev. A. B. Sharpe's safe arrival in England. St. Clements will always remember his good work here, and the people will always pray for a blessing on his work at St. Peter's, Vauxhall.

The first number of a parish paper established at Church of St. John Baptist, St. John, has been received. It contains lists of Lenten services, sermons, etc., an article from ST. CLEMENTS' MAGAZINE, and, not least, the names of our friends, Rev. J. M. Davenport and Rev. P. Owen Jones.

Many old friends will be glad to know that letters have come with the good news that F. Maturin is much better and able to take some work once more. He has to be very careful, so as not to over-exert himself. It is, perhaps, needless to say that he still retains his old love for St. Clements.

Tickets are now given to the children attending the 9.15 Mass on Sundays, to encourage them to come punctually and regularly. We ought to reach a larger number of children and develop our work in that direc. tion. It is very important that they should be properly instructed; teachers are now needed for several classes. It is, of course, needful that any volunteering should be regular in attendance and interested in the members of their class.

Attention is called to the list of Holy Week Easter services. Small cards will be given out, and all are asked to fill out the cards and hand them in as soon as possible, that the clergy may know how many to expect at each Mass.

The Choir Boys' Recreation Club.

The Club still lives, and is well attended every Tuesday evening. The boys and their friends are enjoying the comfortable feeling of being in good financial condition, owing to their successful concert. New books, and games, when needed, refreshment evenings with ice cream, Saturday afternoon pic-nics in the country, as the days lengthen and grow warm are something to look forward to. This week one of our honorary members will leave the city for a long time, much to our regret; his constant attendance and interest in the boys has so won their affection, and that of all the members of the Club, that they feel keenly what a real loss he will be.

The Club has four new members this month, three of them new boys in the choir, the fourth in the preparatory class, making the number in the Club thirty; of that number eight or ten are not constant attendants, some of them living at too great distances to attend regularly.

Notice.

At the last regular meeting of the Guild of St. Vincent, it was resolved that the Guild declare itself ready to resume its former work of watching by the dead that are left at the church over night before burial.

Choir Notes.

Another great festival is rapidly approaching, and as church festivals intimately concern the choir, the latter has been for some weeks actively preparing for the Easter services. On Easter morning the Mozart Mass used on Christmas will, probably, be repeated; Woodward's Te Deum in Eb will be sung; and the anthem will be Stainer's "What are These?" In the evening, Tour's Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis will be used, and the anthem will be Abt's, "O Lord Most Holy."

Several more bass singers are needed in the choir—volunteers who have fair chorus voices and who can attend the rehearsals and services with regularity. Men possessing experience, and some knowledge of music preferred. Application can be made to the choirmaster any Sunday after service.

A Fair for the benefit of the House of St. Michael and All Angels for Young Colored Cripples and the Mission to Colored People, will be held in St. Mark's Parish House on the 1st and 2d of May. It is earnestly requested that parishioners lend their aid to this project and help forward these good works. Contributions in money or articles may be sent to Mrs. Grubb, 253 South Sixteenth street; Mrs. Williams, 220 St. Marks Square; Mrs. Linton, 672 Brooklyn street.

The Phœnix.

There was a wonderful type of the resurrection seen in Arabia, writes St. Clement, our patron Saint, to the Corinthians.

"There is a certain bird called a Phœnix; of this there is never but one at a time, and that lives five hundred years, and when the time of its dissolution draws near that it must die, it makes itself a nest of frankincense, myrrh, and other spices, into which, when its time is fulfilled, it enters and dies; but its flesh putrefying breeds a certain worm, which, being nourished with the juice of the dead bird, brings forth feathers, and when it has grown to a perfect state it takes up the nest in which the bones of its parent lie and carries it from Arabia into Egypt to a city called Heliopolis, and flying in open day, in the sight of all men, lays it upon the altar of the sun, and so returns from whence it came. The priests then search into the records of the time, and find that it returned precisely at the end of five hundred years.

"And shall we then think it to be any very great and strange thing for the Lord of all to raise up those that religiously serve Him in the assurance of a good faith, when even by a bird He shows us the greatness of His power to fulfill His promise?"

Purple and White.

Fasts and petitions to the Lord of love,
Vigils and hours in works of mercy spent,
While the spring sky is ashen gray above,
And the wind whistles in the budding trees—
Yea, prayer and psalm and penitence;
All these are violets of Lent.

Great joy succeeding gloom,
Glad bursts of song;
An altar radiant with golden light,
Rapture of heart which we would fain prolong,
These are our Easter lilies fair and white.

Mr. Abbey's Pictures.

Who doubts but that many pictures have done holy work for God? Even the simplest print, after Fra Angelico, suggests something of the religious feeling that holy monk intended when he painted them. It is with something the same feeling one looks upon Mr. Abbey's fine pictures of Sir Galahad, that perfect knight, to whom was given the privilege of finding the Holy Grail, that sacred vessel used by our Lord at the last supper, and which was said to have been purchased from Pontius Pilate by Joseph of Aramethea. Each one of Mr. Abbey's pictures is a sermon in itself, and all who visit Boston should make a point of seeing them. No one can stand and gaze upon that wonderful light reflected from the wings of the company of angels, gathered half invisibly above and behind King Arthur's table, where the vacant seat is waiting for the perfect and pure knight who alone may sit in it without feeling lifted above this world. It is rather rare in these modern days of art to see religious pictures, especially such Catholic ones as these, that have found their resting place in the Boston Public Library, like a band of silent missionaries to that city of learning, rather than religion. May they do good work!

ART STUDENT.

Card of Acknowledgment.

The Rev. George Taylor Griffith desires to thank very sincerely the good friends of the Sunday-school and charity work under his charge, for the whole souled manner in which they responded to his appeal for material aid, by acknowledging, with kind words and generous enclosures, the tickets mailed to them for the entertainment given in St. Clement's Hall, Feb'y 5th.

The net proceeds of the evening were $85.00, a sum sufficient to meet the expenses of the Christmas Festival, to square up the Charity account to date, and to leave almost thirty dollars in the treasury.

Ghosts.

It is not very surprising, then, that where the anticipation of an event is very strong, and the representation of it made beforehand very vivid, the mind may perceive an event before it happens, or even see an object where none exists.

This species of deception in which the mind is excited without external cause is called subjective sensation, and the pain or pleasure of this sensation may be fully as great as if the appearance were a reality.

To illustrate this: I have read of a butcher who, on trying to hook up a heavy piece of meat above his head, slipped, and the sharp hook penetrated his arm, so that he himself was suspended. Being examined by a physician he was found almost pulseless, and said he was suffering most intense pain. The arm could not be moved without causing agony, somuch so that in cutting off the sleeve of his jacket he frequently cried out. When the arm was bared, it was found to be quite unharmed; the hook having only traversed the sleeve of his coat.

The inclination to believe in that which we like best meets us at every turn and in every walk of life.

This being so, I am met with the objection that certain persons disliked and did not believe in "ghosts," and yet have seen them.

The answer to this is: That dislike can be equally conducive to the production of an illusion, for the most important constituent in that which we call fear is aversion or dislike, yet fear of anything frequently tends to create in the mind a counterfeit perception of the thing feared.

The timid wayfarer by night sees a highwayman in every gate-post, ready to pounce upon him and demand at the pistol's point, "Your money or your life!"

The timid householder by night, when aroused by his spouse to discover "what noise was that," sees in the dim light a burglar in every piano lamp, etc.

The child listening to ghost stories, before going to bed at night, sees a ghost in every article of furniture in the nursery after the lights have been turned low.

I myself have mistaken my own ulster for an Irish moonlighter, and pommeled it right vigorously and straight from the shoulder, only to find out, alas, that an ulster had not flesh and bones, but that my knuckles possessed both flesh, bones and nerves to an eminent degree of painfulness.

NON-MENTAL OR OBJECTIVE ILLUSIONS.

This second class of illusions may be divided according to what the cause of the deceptive appearance may be.

(1) Illusions caused by ill-health either of the organs of the body which are employed, or ill-health of the brain and nervous system considered as a whole; or, (2) illusions caused by irregularity in the composition of that which comes between our sight and the object seen.

Illusions arising from an unsound condition of the organs of the body are very numerous, and it will suffice to mention only a very few familiar to most of us here.

Color-blindness causes the person so afflicted to mistake one color for another.

A person suffering from jaundice imagines everything around him to be of a yellow color.

In certain cerebral and nervous diseases the person not only misapprehends real things, but even sometimes becomes incapable of distinguishing between real objects and pure phantoms of the imagination.

The delirium of fever and the horrors of delirium tremens are also familiar examples of illusion caused by ill-health.

For examples of illusions caused by irregularity in the composition of the medium which comes between our vision and the object seen.

If we look at the sun through blue, green, or yellow colored glasses only rays of these colors will be allowed to pass, and the sun will appear to be of a blue, green, or yellow color, as the case may be.

The transformation scene at a pantomime is the result of the skilful management of colored lights, and the apparitions of spectres or ghosts are caused by the skilful adjustment of concave mirrors at the sides of the stage, and figures seen through a fog seem larger than they really are.

In most of these cases, however, the scene is perfectly truthful as regards its own discoveries.

Now we have considered largely how it may be possible to account naturally for some apparitions. Some, I say, but not all, for as we read the Holy Scriptures and the [History of the Church] lives of the Saints, there have certainly been appearances which I, for one, would be the last to disbelieve or even doubt, and for these we cannot naturally account.

What I have tried feebly to guard against is that prurient spirit of the day which seeks to reduce everything, whether profane or sacred, open to the gaze of the whole world and its inhabitants.

To guard, in brief, against that looking into the unseen which God in His All Wise Providence has seen fit to withhold from the public gaze.

Of one thing I am sure, and that is, that those holy and blessed ones from Blessed Mary the Ever Virgin, down to the last Beatified and Canonized Saint, these, I say, have communion with us and we with them.

Our best interests are theirs, and to the Eternal unceasingly ascend their chaplets of prayer for us who still remain, weary with the toil and dust of the strife in this weary world below.

And for those, our dear ones gone before, not yet made perfect, we may still offer up our prayers in unison with that blessed company, praying Him who is like them invisible, to hasten their perfection in His holy will that they may enjoy His presence always.

This is indeed some, I may go further and say, an unspeakable consolation, but then who of us longs not to see those gone before?

We shall see them, and sooner than we ever hoped for if we will only wait GOD'S time, and be perfect in the entire submission of our wills to His.

To sum up the whole matter that there are such beings as "ghosts" no one can, I think, deny; that they appear visibly to mortals may also be true, and I do not deny it, although I have never seen a spirit or ghost. The whole subject belongs to a sphere beyond our own, contains many things hard to be explained and still harder to be understood, and so far has remained unexplained except in the few cases I have mentioned, and will, I am sure, remain unexplained until that last great day, when the God of the spirits of all flesh shall make all clear as the noonday to our view.

Till then let us reverently leave the spirits of the dead in His keeping, and seek not selfishly to withdraw them hence, for even could we do so their power is limited, and since God has been indeed made flesh, let us seek Him to guide, direct, control and warn and protect until He comes.

The Passion Flower.

This flower is an emblem of the Passion. In the center is the Cross; the stamens are the hammers; the styles, the nails; the circle, the crown of thorns; the radiance, the glory around the head of our Lord; the tendrils, the cords with which He was bound; the ten petals, the ten Apostles (Peter, who denied, and Judas being absent); the leaf, the spear; and its five points, the five wounds. —The Crucifer.

PARISH NOTES.

Easter Day was a glad day for St. Clement's; much work had been done by the members of St. Vincent's Guild in preparing the altar; a new system of lighting had been placed on each side of the sanctuary arch, so that the whole interior was very bright.

The faithful work of the Choir Master, Organist and Choir showed itself in the music, Mozart's Seventh Mass, which was well rendered. The old English Processional, "Hail, Festal Day," was sung, together with the hymn, "Oh, Sons and Daughters." A quartette of strings and two horns added greatly to the beauty and effect.

The children's service was in the afternoon; and solemn even-song at night, with procession and Te Deum, fitly closed the day.

Four hundred and twenty-nine communions were made at the early masses; this alone is something to be thankful for.

The Guild of St. Vincent had their eighth annual retreat on Passion Sunday, Fr. Sargent, Sup. O. H. C., Conductor. Twenty made the retreat, four being from Church of the Holy Comforter.

The members of the Guild deserve our gratitude for the quiet, faithful and efficient work which they do in the services, as well as for the outside labors which they ungrudgingly perform; especially at festival times a larger amount of work devolves on them.

The men's retreat (Guild of St. John) was very well attended on Palm Sunday; the Chapel was well filled at the various exercises; in both retreats a preparatory address was given on Saturday night.

At the last meeting of the Guild of St. John, committees were appointed to arrange for work. Suggestions were made that the members consider the subject of repairs to the Church and care of the grounds. It it hoped that they may take up these matters. The Church buildings need pointing very much; other repairs are needed.

Fr. Huntington, O. H. C., preached the "Passion" on Good Friday; the large congregation remained during the whole of the time.

The Council of the Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament are very anxious to establish a Ward in Philadelphia. They have asked us to make arrangements at St. Clement's. It is hoped that we may be able to do so by Corpus Christi. Fuller particulars will be given in the next number of the MAGAZINE. Meanwhile, it is asked that those who wish to join give their names to the Rev. G. H. Moffett

At the time of going to press the Easter offering for the Sinking Fund amounts to $1,000, the whole amount of fund about $2,000. Perhaps we may hope from time to time that many may give for this purpose. The Repair Fund received $17. Foreign Missions $2.50, this will be sent to the Bishop of Shanghai, China, for his work. Other special offerings amounted to $50.

We must soon be thinking of the Seashore Home again. The same house has been secured for the coming year; it seemed better not to make any change. The printed report, it is expected, will soon be ready for distribution.

Regular attendants are asked to send their names and addresses to the clergy. Nearly four hundred persons sent in the Easter communion cards. It would be a great help if those of the congregation who neglected this would send their names and addresses now.

There will be the usual intercessions on the Rogation Days. Those willing to take time are asked to decide what they can do before the days. The time-table will be posted and they can put down their names and hours. Much spiritually depends on our use of these days, and it is hoped that many will devote some time each day.

The Altar Guild was kept very busy during Lent on various orders, and they managed to get off several pieces of work for other parishes before Easter; they are now busily engaged on the orphreys of our own red cope, the hood of which will not be ready for Whit Sunday, as it is intended to make it an elaborate piece of work.

St. Clement's was represented at the Ecclesiastical Art Exhibition in New York only by our XVI Century Chasuble. It seemed wiser not to send more, partly because of the risk, and also because we needed some of our vestments for use during the time. Judging from the accounts in New York papers, the exhibition was very varied and complete.

The various other Guilds—Holy Cross, St. Mary's, Holy Child, as well as the Mothers' Meeting, have had their usual meetings, services and instructions.

It is hoped in the next issue of the paper to give some items from the annual report to the Convention.

We are all glad that the Rev. Herbert Parrish has come to help us in the work. We hope he may receive Priest's orders at the Trinity ordination.

Confirmation.

The Bishop of the Diocese has appointed the Vigil of Ascension Day, May 22d, as the date of his visitation to this Parish. It seems as if we would not have very many confirmed this year; instruction is now being given to those who have handed in their names. Classes are held by the Clergy and Sisters at various times (schedule follows) to meet the needs of individuals. There will be a general instruction on Friday evenings, at 8 o'clock, in the Chapel; also, classes at Sisters' Mission House.

Girls: Monday and Thursday, 7.30 P. M.

Women: Tuesday, 7.30 P.M.; Sunday, 3 P. M.

Children: Monday and Thursday, 4.15 P. M.

Boys meet Monday, 7.30 P. M.

Men meet Tuesday, 8 P. M.

The hymn, "Even-song is Hushed in Silence," was published in London in 1866 (Hymnology, Julian), but we cannot find it in any collection of hymns, nor have we been able to procure a copy of it.

DONATIONS.

Miss H. Smith, games; Miss Weiser, books; Miss Crispin, books; Master Ralph Remont, books; Miss Wright, tickets for Zoological Garden; Mrs. John Cope, magazines; Unknown, magazines and books; ST. CLEMENT'S MAGAZINE, Easter eggs; a friend, refreshments for December.

Magazines are always welcomed. After being looked over in the Club they are passed on to the boys' homes, and often much appreciated by older members of the family.

Choir Boys' Recreation Club.

Some one may possibly remember the balance left in the exchequer of the Choir Boys' Recreation Club this time last year, just four cents! What a contrast to the fine beautiful balance now in their possession! They feel themselves the richest organization in the Parish. No mental worry; no puzzling problem as to how the Club can raise a little money to start with in the autumn; only a comfortable feeling of ease and prosperity, and the happy satisfaction that the money now in their treasury is the result of their own industry.

Tuesday of Easter week the Club had its Easter entertainment, and twenty-one boys sat down to ice-cream and cakes, bonbons containing small Easter eggs, and the usual sentimental couplets; also, bonboniers, out of which are produced caps and bonnets of many colors, with which the head of each boy is quickly decorated, making a lively and picturesque table. The Club had the pleasure on this evening of entertaining for the first time the Rector, and enjoyed seeing him condescend to bonbons as well as ice-cream and cake. This was the last indoor entertainment for the season; one or two out-of-door ones are planned.

The Easter Music.

Every member of the Parish must have enjoyed our fine music and felt some of the old time fervor awakened by it.

The fine orchestral accompaniment to the wonderful singing of our well-trained little choir must have brought back some memory of the dear old time when we were noted for our fine music. It is to that old standard our choir would like to bring the music of St. Clement's, but how to do it is the trying question. The few men who sing regularly in the choir, and attend rehearsals and our little handful of boys are strained to the utmost to keep up to the requirements of the music. Every one knows what it is to work a machine to its utmost capacity. The writer has talked with members of the choir; has seen the tired and anxious faces of those responsible for the music, before and after some of our festivals, and has realized, as many of our parish perhaps do not, how taxed they are. Could we not, before another season, find some way to increase our appropriation, so that we may have more men, good voices (which can only be had for money) and relieve a little the strain on our good choir and faithful choir-master? Does it not often happen that those who come to a great mission church like ours hear, besides the music, something that takes root and often bears fruit a hundredfold? Would not the money be capital well spent in mission work, and bring good returns to the parish? Will some one think about it?

AN OLD PARISHIONER.

A Fair for the benefit of the House of St. Michael and All Angels for Young Colored Cripples and the Mission to Colored People, will be held in St. Mark's Parish House on the 1st and 2d of May.

Girls' Friendly Society.

St. Clement's Branch of the G. F. S., which was organized in December, 1894, has gone quietly forward, and now numbers twelve members, four Working Associates and two Honorary Associates. There is a class for Physical Culture the second Monday of each month; and a business meeting, followed by service in Chapel, each fourth Monday. A Current Events Class has been started, and a Literature Associate appointed.

The work of the G. F. S. is too well known to need any account of it here; the purpose of this article is to ask the interest of the congregation for our Branch, that it may become as powerful a factor in helping girls and young women as other Branches have been.

In the fall we hope to have a room of our own, where the girls can feel at home; where they may come for rest and recreation as well as for instruction; where they may make a cup of tea and find suitable books and magazines. For this room not money only, but also gifts of furniture, such as rugs, tables, chairs, etc., and especially books and periodicals, will be gladly accepted.

The Secretary and Treasurer is Miss Margaret Ruff, 328 South Twenty-first street.

Palm Sunday.

On Palm Sunday the palms were blessed at the altar before the seven o'clock celebration.

At the eleven o'clock mass there was the usual procession, and the choir and acolytes received palms at the altar.

At night Fr. Sargent gave the last of his conferences. Large numbers of people have attended these, and seem to have been much interested. Fr. Sargent gave the ten o'clock meditations on the first three days of Holy Week; his work has been a great blessing to us this Lent.

St. John's Guild.

The members of St. John's Guild are very lax in their duties; of about sixty members only ten made their appearance at the meeting Wednesday evening, April 24th.

At the March meeting committees were appointed to attend to the garden and the repairs to the Church, and there is evidence that both committees have done some work; but they were not prepared to make reports at the April meeting of how much had been accomplished. The repair fund is sadly in need of money, and the Church is sadly in need of repairs, and when the committee has money to work with the repairs will be made. The new lighting system, that the committee had placed on each side of the sanctuary arch, is an improvement that all must appreciate.

The next meeting of the Guild will be Wednesday evening, May 29th, and it is hoped that there will be a large attendance.

"Erin-go-bragh."

On the south of College Green stands Trinity College the Alma Mater of innumerable statesmen, orators, scientists, and poets, of which more anon.

Immediately inside its gates are the statues of Burke, the immortal orator, and Goldsmith, the poet and historian. Outside is the statue of Grattan, famous for his oratory and patriotism. Further on, as we ascend Dame street, is the equestrian statue of the perfidious William of Orange. Faithless to friends; relentless to foes; known forever on the pages of history as the instigator of the massacre of Glencoe, and to Irishmen the world over as the repudiator of his own "Treaty of Limerick."

Anglicans have no reason to do him honor. An alien in race and in religion, he it was who first, in the annals of England, sought to foist upon the Catholic Church of England the title "Protestant," a title, by the way, to this day indignantly refused by her Houses of Convocation. His statue is an insult to the citizens of Dublin, and especially to the alumni of Trinity College. And that it is so regarded is evidenced by the fact that once (and if I remember rightly twice) has he been blown sky high, and the perpetrators never discovered.

But, to return, these statues give rise to a riddle: Why is College Green like a Land League meeting? Answer: Because there is Gratton making a speech; there is Goldsmith taking notes, and "King Billy" is riding off to Dublin Castle for troops or reinforcements.

The explanation being that the Government, in the days of the Land League, sent down Government reporters to take notes of the speeches of the Irish members of Parliament, in order to prosecute them for seditious utterances. This procedure frequently gave rise to an onslaught by the populace on these reporters, when a horseman was dispatched to summon troops or police for their protection.

On the north of College Green stands the Irish House of Parliament. A magnificent building supported by exquisitely carved Corinthian columns, and lighted from the roof.

Alas that it is no longer the House of Parliament, but the Bank of Ireland. The Commons' Chamber is now used as the bank proper, while the Lords' Chamber is used for the meetings of the Board of Directors.

PARISH NOTES.

The Bishop of the Diocese made his annual visitation to St. Clement's on Wednesday evening, May 22d, at 8 o'clock. Quite a large number of people came, and thirty-nine received the Sacrament of Confirmation; one man had already been confirmed at the Ascension. Several have already made their first communion, and the rest hope to make theirs on Whit Sunday.

On Ascension Day a solemn high mass was sung at 7 o'clock, other masses at 6 and 9.30. There was a slight increase of communions over last year, but still not as many as there ought to be. It is a good test of the interest of our acolytes and choir when they come out in such good numbers so early in the morning. Breakfast, simple and plain, to be sure, was served in the parish building, after the service, to those of the acolytes and choir who so desired. The boys went off in high spirits for a day's outing with Rev. J. G. Ewens and Dr. Garrett. From various reports we judge they had a good day of it.

The Rogation Days were kept as a time of continued intercession. The wet weather interfered somewhat with the attendance of certain persons who had promised to be in church. St. Vincent's Guild were responsible for the night hours, they kept them faithfully. One is not surprised at this, of course, for it seems to be of the very nature of the Guild that performance should more than correspond to expectation.

The Diocesan Convention met in St. Luke's Church on May 7th, and continued in session three days; there was the ordinary routine of business. The question of appointing an Archdeacon seemed to engage a good deal of attention and interest—his status and functions. It was settled that the Diocese should have one, and we suppose the proper committee will arrange the details of precedence and work. Dr. Mortimer called attention to the fact that in earlier times this dignitary had the custody of the "holy oils," so, perhaps, this may be a move in the direction of restoring this "lost pleiad of the Anglican firmament" to its proper place and importance. Excuses do not seem to be sufficient that account for its practical disuse. According to "apostolic practice, in case of grievous sickness the faithful were anointed and prayed over for the forgiveness of sins, and to restore them if God so willed, or to give them spiritual support in their maladies." (St. James, v: 14, 15.)

Surely every devout person will hope to receive unction as a privilege of a member of the Catholic church.

All Saint's Home, 2034–36 Cherry St.

We are trying very hard to get the list of communicants into order, and ask the interest of every individual. There are a good many names of persons with no residence, and no way of tracing them.

Already quite a number of people have gone away from the city, but there is no good reason why the church should not be well filled at the Sunday services during the summer—plenty of people are here. The various Guilds will not meet as regularly, but we hope that the members will keep their rules faithfully.

The men's Bible class has been closed until the fall.

The same house has been taken at Point Pleasant by the All Saints' Sisters for the Sea Shore Home. The account of expenses for last year was published in the March number of the MAGAZINE. We hope that the same interest may be shown, and generous contributions may not be lacking. It is a part of our work that would be very much missed.

The Rev. Herbert Parrish is to be ordained priest on Trinity Sunday at Calvary Church, Germantown. We ask the prayers of the people for him. He will say his first mass in the church on the Monday after at 7.30 o'clock.

Several persons have given their names as members of the C. B. S.; pressure of other duties has prevented arrangements for Corpus Christi. Any further plans will be announced later in church, or on bulletin.

It was a very great pleasure to us all, those who were at the service, and others who were not, to have F. Longridge with us in the evening of the Sunday after Ascension. Naturally the affection for those who have been helpful to people lingers on when they are ministering elsewhere. It is a joy to see them as often as we can; they, to a certain extent, belong to old-time friends.

Our readers are asked to save cancelled postage stamps, and send them to the sexton.

Even-song is Hushed in Silence.

Even-song is hushed in silence,
And the hour of rest is nigh;
Strengthen us for work to-morrow,
Son of Mary, God Most High;
Thou, who in the village workshop,
Fashioning the yoke and plough,
Dids't eat bread by daily labors,
Succor them that labor now.

CHORUS:

We are weary of life-long toil,
Of sorrow, and pain, and sin;
But there is a City with streets of gold,
And all is peace within.

We have sung the Psalms Thou sangest
In Thy Father's House of old,
When the voices of the Levites
In a storm of music roll'd;
We have done as Thou has't order'd,
Offering up the Bread and Wine:
Words of power are softly spoken,
Jesus comes unto His shrine.

CHORUS:—We are weary, etc.

How are we to reach that City,
Whose delights no tongue may tell?
By the faith that looks to Jesus,
Who sat weary by the well.
Sinful men and sinful women,
He will wash our sins away;
He will take us to the Sheepfold,
Whence no sheep can ever stray.

CHORUS:—We are weary, etc.

When we enter that bright City,
What the vision we behold:
Gates of pearl, and walls of jasper,
Streets of pure transparent gold!
Are the many mansions empty,
Lone the terraces so fair?
Jesus and His angels pace them,
How He longs to see us there!

CHORUS:—We are weary, etc.

There the dear ones who have left us
We shall some day meet again;
There will be no bitter partings,
No more sorrow, death, or pain.
Even-song has closed in silence,
And the hour of rest is nigh;
Lighten Thou our darkness, Jesus,
Son of Mary, God Most High;

CHORUS:

We are weary of life-long toil,
Of sorrow, and pain, and sin;
But there is a City with streets of gold,
And all is joy within.

Lost and Found.

Where wert thou when the Tender Shepherd found thee?
On the desolate moorland bleak and bare,
All the terror of the night around thee,
Only gloom and sorrow everywhere,
Till the heavenly radiance of His face
Made a glory in that lonesome place?
Nay! He found me in the world's green garden,
Dearer to my heart than aught beside,
And He drew me close and spoke of pardon,
And He said it was for me He died.
Now I think no wilderness could prove
Drearier than the world without His love.

Patients' Outing Fund.

Several friends of the Hospital kindly aided us in giving an entertainment in behalf of the Patients' Outing Fund, on Tuesday, May 7th.

As usual, our genial Choirmaster, Mr. R. Remont, and several members of the Choir, came to our assistance and discoursed most pleasant music and soothing melodies. To our organist, also, Mr. L. Gaff, courteous and obliging as ever, with the other gentlemen of the Choir, we extend our most grateful thanks.

The hit of the evening, by unanimous consent, was the portrayal of character sketches by Messrs. Harrington and Dougherty; and no one could say, on that occasion at least, that the "Irish were not in it."

And the ladies—well, they are always good—but at this time one was especially good.

We refer to Miss Gilpin, who, at short notice, and with admirable sacrifice of time, brought on the stage that most promising amateur dramatic club from our neighboring Parish of the Ascension.

One and all, the patients are most thankful, and we are sure that those who worked so well and so heartily do not consider that the giving of this entertainment was "Love's Labor Lost."

Choir Boys' Recreation Club.

The Club now numbers thirty members; fortunately there is never a full attendance; fortunately, because space and closet room is limited. Our choir room is the infant school room, the guild room, the hall connecting the clergy house with the church, as well as a choir room, and not among the least of the disadvantages is the necessity of giving up the Club on the nights when there are entertainments in the Sunday-school room, or service in the chapel, often necessitating the writing of many postal cards to announce that "there will be no Club." Tuesday evening is unfortunately a favorite night for entertainments in the parish, and also the only night on which the Club can meet; we hope some day in the not too distant future we will be such a rich church that we will have ample room for all our parish work. Refreshment evenings are over, and all the members of the Club, grown-up members, as well as small boys, are looking forward to their pic-nic, which will be on Decoration Day, when the choir master can go with them. They propose to have a good old-fashioned pic-nic, with quarts of milk from some near-by farm houses, coffee made in gypsy style for those who like it, plenty of good things to eat, grab bags and games, and a good time generally. We hope the boys' friends will wish them a pleasant day.

The Priesthood.

We worship a living Christ, not a dead Christ. We worship a Christ who has not only become incarnate and given us the example of a flawless life, but who has ascended into heaven, and who, by the power of God the Holy Spirit, and by means of the sacraments, raises us from the natural life to the life supernatural; from a life of intellectual darkness to a life of intellectual enlightenment (we know God; we know the purpose of our being)—a Christ who is ever active in "the ministry of reconciliation," cleansing His people from sin and making them holy.

Our Lord is a priest. By virtue of His sinless human nature and His perfect sacrifice of Himself in the obedience of God's will, even unto death, He is acceptable to the Father. He stands before the Father, "the Lamb as it had been slain." He pleads His sacrifice for humanity and offers the propitiation for our sins. Through Him we are made acceptable to God. As priest He conveys our prayers to the Father, and as priest He conveys the Father's benediction and forgiveness, God's truth and God's grace to us.

Christianity is preëminently practical. If it is a fact that God loves us, and if it is a fact that He has given us the means of grace, that is to say, the means of union with Him and the spiritual power or force to strengthen our wills and to overcome sin in our lives, it is necessary first that we should be told these facts; and, secondly, that we should come into actual contact with the means of grace, and our Lord has provided a visible extension of his priesthood for this purpose—the ministry of the church. "The ministers of Christ," says Dr. Liddon, "are not a body of lecturers whose business it might be to investigate a subject which is imperfectly understood, and to make periodical reports of their successive investigations. The first duty of the Christian ministry is to witness persistently to the fact that in Christ Jesus, God and man, mankind and God, are really reconciled. And this is not its highest duty. Since the reconciliation is of no avail except to those who are actually reconciled, it is not enough for a man to learn that it has been made; he must know how he personally may reap its benefits. Thus the Christian ministry is a ministry of grace as well as of truth; it bids every man, on the one hand, hold out the hand of faith that he may receive God's gifts; while on the other, it is itself a means whereby the grace or invigorating force of Christ, conveyed by His spirit, and reaching man by the certified channels of His approach, makes us one with Christ, and Christ with us."

"As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you," said our Lord to His apostles. He gave them the power to preach and to baptize [St. Matt. xxviii: 19]; to remit or retain sins [St. John xx: 23]; to celebrate the Eucharist, i. e. to offer His memorial sacrifice to the Father [St. Luke xxii: 19]. He extends His own priesthood, in other words, and makes it effective in a practical and common sense way for mankind. so that St. Paul could say [II Cor. v: 20], "Now, then, we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us; we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God," and we read in the Acts and in the Pastoral Epistles how the apostles handed on this power by the laying on of hands—the sacrament of Holy Order, and thus the priesthood of the Christian church is the priesthood of our Lord. The priests of the church represent our Lord. In the administration of the Word and sacraments they act for Him. The mysterious powers they possess as "stewards of the mysteries of God;" the power to consecrate the body and blood of Christ, and the power of remission of sins in Christ's mystical body, are really His powers. It is He who baptizes, He who forgives, He who consecrates, He who blesses through them—they are a kind of sacrament of Him, and in in this sense St. Ignatius, Bishop of Antioch, said that we should regard the bishops, priests and deacons as our Lord; for while it is doubtless quite true that "we have this treasure in earthen vessels," yet the treasure must be reverenced in itself, and it lends a certain respect to the vessel.

People who object, as they say, to having "a man stand between them and God," must remember that the same objection would apply to every department of human life. God makes us dependent upon others for everything in existence. As has been pointed out recently there are the priests of wealth who have the power of the keys and the privilege of sacrifice; there are the priests of science whose temples throng with catechumens; there are the priests of art and the priests of political influence. It seems to be a Divine law that the masses of men should depend upon the few, and certainly it is not unreasonable that in a society like the church, composed of human beings, there should be officers and a government as in all human organizations.

But we should all try to remember, whatever our office in the church, that each one of us has a priesthood, at least a personal priesthood, and that in the exercise of this priesthood we are dealing with a God who considers the heart and the motive of a man rather than his office. Christ is the acceptable high priest, not because he belonged to the tribe of Aaron, but because He did the Father's will. "I come to do thy will, O God."

Many thanks are due to our readers who so kindly sent us information about the hymn, "Evensong is Hushed in Silence." It was published in the hymnal of the S. S. J. E.

Copies of the hymn and information were received from the Bishop of Vermont, Miss Hutchinson, Mrs. A. M. Davies, and several others.

All communications relating to the business or columns of this paper should be addressed to the Editor, 1009 Clinton street, Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, JULY, 1895.

Subscribers who change their addresses during the summer months should notify us as soon as possible; unnecessary confusion will thus be avoided.

The beginning of the warmer weather means less energy for aggressive work, as well as fewer workers. Although many people are away, still enough are in the city for us to expect good attendance, if people are in earnest. The eight o'clock mass on Sundays has been discontinued. Various Guild meetings will not be held during the summer, but communicants and Guild members ought to remember that rules and habits of devotion are not episodes of winter work, but means of disciplining and strengthening character, and it is very important, if they are to be ways of growing in grace, that they should be faithfully "kept" during holiday times. The spiritual loss is very great in many during their summer wanderings and out-of-town idleness.

The sessions of the Sunday-school were closed on Trinity Sunday, when prizes for faithful attendance were distributed; it is to be hoped that the children will realize that they have a duty to God during the summer, and that there may be a goodly number present each Sunday at the children's mass.

It is a very real danger at the present day that zeal in mission work, and sympathy with the needs and trials of others, may cause people to forget that unless they are helped to live more for God, and to appreciate the need of the sacraments, mission work counts for but little. People get into the way of going where they can get most done for them in a material way, often sacrificing principles just to obtain earthly gain. The Church has her mission for souls, and Christians are not accomplishing the work of the Church unless they bring people to God.

The Sea-shore House at Point Pleasant, N. J., was opened on June 17th, when the first party went down—about thirty persons in all; the house will accommodate more, and later on there is every indication that its fullest capacity will be tested. It is to be hoped that sufficient money may be given to keep it open during all the hot months, and give an outing to all who wish to avail themselves of the opportunity. There is no fund available for this or other "treats," and these must depend on what is given by kind friends.

The increase in the "envelopes" during the month is due to the fact that many subscribers have sent in their money for all the time during which they are to be absent; their forethought will enable us to meet our ordinary expenses during the summer. There are still a very large number of members of the congregation who do not give regularly; all have a duty, and if they fulfilled their obligation our income would be much larger.

Those who were confirmed this year made their first communion on Whitsun Day, at seven o'clock.

Several persons have been admitted to the C. B. S., and others have applied; there is every indication of a strong ward in the fall.

St. Clement's Hospital is very much in need of funds, this has been a hard year for all charitable institutions—the raising of money has been difficult, old subscribers have not renewed or decreased the amount, and it has been impossible to get new ones. After as long a delay as seemed wise, the managers have reluctantly determined to reduce the number of patients as much as possible until the fall, when it is hoped that some plan may be found to carry on the work.

In this reduction the Dispensary must be included, this will no doubt be a hardship to those who have availed themselves of its advantages, especially for the children; simple remedies quickly administered are the great need of these little sufferers during the heat; a little longer walk in the sun may mean much harm.

Perhaps one of the various plans as to a Colony Farm may be brought forward practically.

Attention is again called to the Sinking Fund and Repair Fund; we do not solve difficulties by forgetting or avoiding them; if all would bear in mind these needs and give what they can afford, we would soon accomplish even something practical. The buildings very much need "pointing," the work ought not to be delayed; the lowest estimate of cost is over $500; at present the vestry can hardly undertake to have it done unless the money is in hand.

Ordination of the Rev. H. Parrish.

The ordination of the Rev. Herbert Parrish to the priesthood took place at the Trinity Sunday ordinations at Calvary Church, Germantown. The rector of St. Clement's presented the candidate, and several of our parishioners attended the service. It is interesting to note that the first form in the ordinal was employed by Bishop Whitaker, who has now established that use in the diocese, and also that none of the laity present were communicated at the ordination mass. A luncheon was provided at the church after the service. The newly-ordained priest sang solemn even-song at St. Clement's, Trinity Sunday night, and celebrated his first mass the next morning at 7.30 o'clock at the high altar. At the even-song the Rev. George Read, who was made deacon the same day, read the lessons, and the Rev. Augustus Prime, of Brighton, Massachusetts, who presented Mr. Read, preached the sermon. There was a large congregation. About fifty people attended the mass next day, including several of the newly-ordained deacons; the rector served, and our XVIth century chasuble was used.

Edward Carter Babcock.

It is with sorrow that we record the unexpected death of Edward Carter Babcock, in his nineteenth year. He served faithfully as an acolyte at God's altar in this parish ever since he was a small boy until about one year ago, at which time he moved to Fort Washington. Edward was highly thought of by all who knew him. He had been a worthy member of the Guild of St. Vincent, and several members of the Guild, and many of his friends, attended the funeral mass in the Chapel. Six young men acted as pall bearers, among whom were Messrs. Henry Clay Borden and George W. Borden, who were two of Edward's most intimate friends. The mass was said by the priest who knew him best, the Reverend George T. Griffith; and he, along with the acolytes, eight choir boys, accompanied the body to West Laurel Hill cemetery for the blessing of the grave and the committal. Our prayer to God for Edward is, Requiescat in pace. Amen.

Flowers for the Altar.

Flowers are needed for the decoration of the altar during the summer, perhaps it might be possible for some of the parishioners to send us flowers on Saturdays from near-by places.

Persons who have cards for Bishop Seymour's Mission are requested to return them, as soon as convenient, to the Rev. Geo. T. Griffith.

Personals.

Master Bert. Wayne, our first soprano-soloist, and his brother, Harold, are now with their parents in Europe, where they will remain, we believe, until some time in August. The responsibility of all the soprano-solo work devolves, consequently, upon Master Herbert Stafford during the summer, and we hope that he will rise to the occasion and accept the responsibility with the seriousness it merits.

Master Winnie Stevenson is off for the summer, and will spend the time in the country with relatives.

Master Basil Downey is, we understand, at the shore with his parents.

Master Sidney Greenfield leaves some time in July for Canada, and expects to spend a pleasant summer there with friends and relatives.

An Exception to the Law that Hea "Expands."

For churches with small choirs i is a providential arrangement, or a exceedingly fortunate concatenation of circumstances—according as th reader may be disposed to regar the historical facts of the case—th summer falls in the midst of th Trinity season when there are n great festivals to be observed; for choir that is small at the most favo able season of the year is smaller the summer approaches, and small when the heat is fiercest. So it with our own choir at present. As stated above, five of our boys are away for the summer. How many more will go it is impossible to s —we hope not any—but those w have already left us have made a d plorable hole in the choir, as mig have been observed on the evening of Sunday, June 23d, when we had but seven sopranos to sing solemn even-song. This, in a huge church like ours, made the choir puny, and, perhaps, in the minds of some, almost ridiculous. However, the circumstances must be remembered; and, after all, we no doubt have reason to congratulate ourselves upon the fact that we are able during the summer months to hold together a sufficient number of choristers to sing the masses and maintain the services intact throughout the entire year. Of course, it is very hard upon the handful of faithful singers who keep up their attendance and do double work during the most trying and uncomfortable season of the year, and they certainly deserve our gratitude for their regular and faithful service.

When the "cool weather" comes on, some members will return to the choir whilst new ones will join, and thus we shall flourish until another summer rolls upon us and it is again "too hot to sing."

Voices for the Choir.

A few more boys and many more men, particularly basses, are wanted for the choir; boys with clear, high sopranos and men with fair chorus voices. The men should have some knowledge of music, though this is not absolutely necessary if they possess quick, correct ears. Basses are at present very badly needed, but it seems impossible to induce men to join a choir at this season of the year. Any person desiring to become a member of the choir can readily arrange an appointment with the choirmaster, or will usually find him at their service on Tuesday evenings, after 7.45, in the choir-room.

Departure of Choirmistress.

When it is stated in these columns that on Saturday, the 22d of June, Miss Fanny Darrach sailed from New York for Europe, where she will spend the summer, it is the mere notice of the departure of one of our parishioners, and means little or nothing to the general reader; but the same announcement made to the boys of the choir means much more than could easily be explained by an unpretentious member of the MAGAZINE'S corps of writers—brilliant as that staff undoubtedly is!—and more than could readily be comprehended by the MAGAZINE'S readers—intelligent and discerning as those patrons assuredly are! Suffice it, therefore, to say in brief, that the departure of Miss Darrach, our choirmistress, means the withdrawal of a watchful and interested eye over all the affairs of the choir, and the temporary loss of one who will be missed by the boys in a thousand little attentions to which they have grown accustomed; it means the closing of the club and the cessation of all accompanying recreations, excursions and "banquets;" it means the absence of a sincere and sympathetic friend (and the latter, by the way, is to some of them a strange, unusual and much appreciated possession); and last, but not by any means least, it means general, genuine and deep regret. Of one thing Miss Darrach may feel perfectly sure, namely, that she carries with her the best wishes of the choir and its earnest hopes that she may have a safe journey, a pleasant trip and a speedy return—particularly the latter. It might be claimed, by those of cynical or uncharitable disposition, that these wishes and hopes are not entirely disinterested. This we are, of course, compelled to admit, but can truthfully retort that they are—for that very reason—none the less sincere and hearty.

It is very unfortunate that there is not enough money in the repair fund to cover the cost of such urgent repairs as "pointing." The interior of the Church is sadly in need of redecoration, but until the outside repairs are made it would be money wasted to re-decorate the interior.

PHILADELPHIA, AUGUST, 1895.

Subscribers who change their addresses during the summer months should notify us as soon as possible; unnecessary confusion will thus be avoided.

The speech of Lord Halifax, at the English Church Union meeting was very interesting, telling, as he does, the various circumstances which led to the investigation of the subject of validity of Anglican orders; the interviews, discussions, and private audiences at Rome; the deep interest of the Pope; the change of front on the part of the Continental journals and the favorable consideration which the whole matter has received.

It is only natural that those who have already made their submission should not be very enthusiastic at the present aspect of the question; practically they had already decided this question in the negative. It seems as if Christian people might be willing to trust God and submit to Him in the carrying out of His purposes for His church. The reunion of Christendom seems a sufficiently great and glorious idea to awaken a high and holy ambition, and to enable people to forget their prejudices; no doubt this will happen as we look at it longer and from God's side.

The latter part of the speech has a loyal ring, and shows that the President of the English Church Union is fully alive to the many difficulties in the way; also, that while the Anglican Communion must be ready to acknowledge faults and mistakes, yet there is much to be said for her position now and her work in the past; at any rate, we can all pray for a result so high and noble as the reunion of the Body of the Redeemer.

The Sea-shore Home.

Our readers are all interested in the house at Point Pleasant, where so many of our people get their summer outing. Many know how many it can accommodate; it hardly seems possible, as you look at the outside, that nearly sixty sleep and eat there during these months; one party follows closely upon another, each appearing to enjoy themselves to the utmost, and there is no difficulty in keeping the house full; it takes a considerable amount of money to pay railroad fares, even if the company has been very liberal in giving reduced rates; to buy enough food, plain and substantial and nourishing, quite a sum is needed that the Sisters may have no debt at the end of the season, and may not disappoint those already promised for the parties to follow. Will not those who have not already sent their accustomed donation, kindly remember to do so? It has been of great benefit to many children already, and to more than one wearied half sick mother.

It is no easy time for the Sisters and those who have volunteered to assist in the care of the large household; the giving of money is not the hardest part of the work, it may mean some self-denial, but it will bring more than one kind of blessing to those who undertake it. Send money to the Sister in charge, 2034 Cherry street.

All Saint's Home, 2034–36 Cherry St.

The Mission House, of course, is open, and the Sisters have had all they could do, both in Philadelphia and at Point Pleasant; in the two houses we have had more Sisters than usual.

The eight o'clock mass on Sunday is the only one that has been discontinued. The attendance at 9.15, on the part of the children, has not been as large as it ought to be; still quite a number of children are faithful.

Two of the clergy are away on short holidays.

The Acolytes, although the number of those available is not as large as usual, have been very faithful to their duties. In spite of smaller numbers the choir has been kept up remarkably well, the attendance has been good, and the music very satisfactory.

Summer Work.

The record of work during the warmer weather can hardly be written up. Still the effects and results in individual lives ought to be manifested; the depth and reality of them are tested during recreation times. No earnest person allows any time of the year to be idle time; there is no such thing in the spiritual life as letting go for awhile, then starting again from the point at which we stopped; every one soon finds that they go back when they are not eagerly striving; it takes all our energy, with the use of God's grace, to maintain our position. Again, we must not expect to make up for lost time; it is not possible; it is never natural or real; we have the same needs for the soul's life; we are serving the same God all the year. It may be through no fault of one's self that a person has not the ordinary means of grace; it is very sad, and such an one must be more watchful and particular that they do not lose ground. In some places there may be no church services, but such a fact cannot make it right to attend the services and preaching of the various Protestant bodies, even if friends and relatives cannot understand our reasons. We must be true to God and our principles. Sometimes people think that by going with friends that they may return the courtesy, and some future time come to some church service, but what good can that do? It does not make our conduct right, nor does it justify our violation of principle; it almost seems like trifling with God and holy things.

It has been most helpful to those of us who remain in the city to see that attendance at the Sunday services has been so good; considering all the circumstances the average has been large. It might be possible for some who are home to come to the daily mass. We ought to value our privileges and take advantage of our opportunities. The large communion on the first Sunday in July seems to show that many were mindful of rules.

Most of the Guild meetings have been discontinued until the cooler weather, and there is good reason for this. The mothers' meeting is held every Thursday night, and the Guilds of St. Mary and St. Vincent have had their usual offices and instructions.

The picture over the altar in the chapel began to look rather badly, a member of the congregation has had it put in good condition.

After all, the Children's Dispensary of St. Clement's Hospital was not closed; at the last moment it was found possible to keep it open; the physicians in charge, Dr. Peckham and Dr. Massie, made such urgent representations of its need, together with practical suggestions of a mode of keeping it open that it was so determined. Dr. Morton is in the Catskills, and Dr. Shoemaker is acting director.

Our thanks are due to those out of town who have so kindly sent flowers for the altar, perhaps more may be encouraged to remember us when they know that the request was seriously made, and understood in earnest by some.

All but a very few of those members of the congregation who sent in cards with their names and addresses at Easter have been visited, together with a large number of others whose addresses could be obtained. It seems reasonable to suppose that all who desire the clergy to call upon them will take the trouble to send any change of address. A great deal of time is lost in looking up wrong addresses, and trying to visit persons who live at a distance.

Personals.

Masters Bert and Harold Wayne have returned home, and we hope that the experience and knowledge gained on their European trip will benefit them in many ways, and will, among other things, make them even better choir boys than they were before.

One of our choristers, Master Joseph Hill, has just moved to the West. We are sorry to lose Joe, but we wish him happiness in his new home, and success in the choir which he proposes to join, and to which he has taken a letter of credit and a certificate of good standing from St. Clement's.

Summer Trials.

Last year our choir remained nearly intact during the entire summer, but this year things have been very different, and we have had many absentees. With a small choir this is, of course, especially unfortunate, as we can ill spare a single voice, much less a half dozen or more. Our complement is twenty boys. Before the summer set in we had nineteen in attendance. One of these was the librarian, leaving eighteen singers. Of these eighteen singers, upon whom the music of the parish depended, two departed for Europe; one went to the country; one to the sea-shore; one to Canada; another moved West, and two others resigned, on account of the distance of their home from the church, but afterward concluded to remain for the summer during the school vacation. This is, of course, very disastrous and cripples us severely; but, as it cannot be helped, we shall have to get through the summer as gracefully as possible, and hope that we shall not be subjected to such misfortune another year.

Return of Choir Chaplain.

On Monday night, the 22d of July, the choir boys had the pleasure of a brief visit and a few words from our Choir Chaplain, the Rev. J. G. Ewens, who had returned from an absence of several weeks, looking much the better for his little respite from parish duties. Judging from his manner, however, we think that, no matter how pleasantly he may have spent his time, he was glad to be with us again, and we feel quite satisfied that he has found no place that is as dear to him as old St. Clement's.

Unhappy Epiphany.

The Church of the Epiphany is indeed in a sorry plight; six hundred thousand dollars in cash at their command, enough to buy a suitable site in a good location, and erect a handsome church building, and one man says, "trespassing forbidden." Is not this an injustice? They are told to "go down-town or up-town," or any place but where their parishioners live, and where they have a moral right to go.

It seems to be a very unwise canon that will place so much power in the hands of any one man, and it seems to be a very unchristian-like way to exercise the power to refuse permission to build a church on a site not more than three squares from the church that has been sold.

Epiphany is not a new congregation that has been just organized, but it is one of the oldest in the city, and therefore there is not a valid reason why their request should not be granted, and at once.

The Feast of the Assumption.

It is a traditionary pious belief, that the body of the Blessed Virgin was raised by God soon after her death, and assumed to glory, by a singular privilege, before the general resurrection of the dead. This is mentioned by the learned Andrew of Crete, in the East in the seventh, and by St. Gregory of Tours, in the West in the sixth century. It is an opinion perfectly conformable to the sentiments of piety and respect which we owe to the glorious mother of God. This preservation from corruption and speedy assumption to glory, was a privilege which seems justly due to that sacred body from which the Eternal Word received His own adorable flesh, by whose hands He was pleased to be nourished and clothed on earth, and whom He vouchsafed to obey and honor as His mother.

So great was the respect and veneration of the fathers toward this most holy and most exalted of all pure creatures, that St. Epiphanius durst not affirm that she ever died, because he had never found any mention of her death, and because she might have been preserved immortal, and translated to glory without dying. Much more ought piety to incline us to receive with deference a tradition so ancient and so well recommended to us as is this of the corporal assumption of the Virgin Mary; an opinion which the Church so far favors as to read, from the works of St. John Damascen and St. Bernard, an account of it in the breviary as proper to edify and excite the devotion of her children. But then, that our piety may be discreet, we must imitate the moderation and cautious reserve of our holy mother, the Church, and not put mere opinions any way upon a level with articles of faith, or matters of divine revelation.

This solemnity, in ancient martyrologies, is promiscuously called the assumption, passage, or repose of the Virgin Mary. Whether this assumption was of her soul only, or of both soul and body, is no part of faith.—Holy Cross Magazine.

Bishop Howe Dead.

Bishop Howe, of Central Pennsylvania, died at his summer home in Bristol, Wednesday morning, July 31st.

Mark Antony DeWolfe Howe, S.T.D., LL.D., first Bishop of the Episcopal Diocese of Central Pennsylvania, was a native of the town where he died—Bristol, R. I. He was born at Bristol, April 5th, 1809, and at the age of twenty-one he became head master of one of the public schools of Boston. In 1846 he accepted the rectorship of St. Luke's Church, on Thirteenth street, below Spruce, Philadelphia.

Dr. Howe was in 1850 elected Secretary of the General Convention, a post which he filled with marked ability for twelve years; and he was in 1871 made first Bishop of the Episcopal Diocese of Central Pennsylvania. In 1884, owing to the increasing duties of the diocese and to Bishop Howe's advancing years, Nelson Somerville Rulison, D.D., was appointed Assistant Bishop; and since 1889, when Bishop Howe withdrew from all active work, has performed all the duties of Bishop.

PHILADELPHIA, SEPTEMBER, 1895.

A copy of "The Transfiguration," done in water colors, was hung in the chapel on the Feast of the Transfiguration; it is the gift of a kind friend. We are also very grateful to all who have sent flowers during the month for the decoration of the altar. We have had an abundant supply.

From time to time articles written on the subject of the Pope's encyclical have appeared in magazines and reviews; the discussion has been carried on from various standpoints, and discloses very divergent impressions while it is still in the present form. This is to be expected, it could hardly be hoped that any overture would be endorsed by all the various elements of the Roman communion, for, in many cases, the subject of Anglican orders has been considered quite decided in the negative. Statements have been made; books have been written; arguments have been used; old ties have been broken; new and difficult steps have been taken, based on the supposition that it was a "closed" question. The present aspect is entirely strange and very unexpected; it takes time to realize that we have entered upon a new state of affairs, nor have those separated from Rome, whether Catholics or Protestants, welcomed the idea with any greater unanimity; fears, warnings, apprehensions have been put forward. A change of attitude does not settle the question; an invitation to prayer, while a great step, does not carry with it the practical reunion. It ought to lift us out of the mere petty view, and make us remember that we can help, or we can hinder, but our God can bring about the fact. The following prayer may be a helpful one to use; many have been saying it for years:

O Lord Jesus Christ, who saidst unto Thine apostles, Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you; regard not our sins, but the faith of Thy church, and grant her that peace and that unity which is agreeable to Thy will, who liveth and reigneth God forever and ever.

The Sea-shore Home.

Interest in our country home has been very practically testified by substantial help from some of our parishioners, and others; help which has justified us in keeping the house open through the summer months; but in order to close without debt we must appeal to them again in behalf of this, the special summer work of our parish. Will not those who have already given renew their donations, and those who have not given anything send a liberal contribution?

Any sum, large or small, will be most gratefully received. We are convinced that now, as in the past, the fact that funds are needed will insure their forthcoming, both from our own people and generous contributors outside the parish.

The home accommodates over fifty persons, and has been full throughout the season. The life has been much the same as that of which we told our readers in the August MAGAZINE of 1894. It has given to the weary mothers, who came to us with their babies, rest and refreshment in the woods, where they breathed all day long the fragrance of the pines; only the mothers and very little children were long content with this quiet life under the trees. The older children and young girls, as is always the case, craved more active amusements, and expeditions had to be constantly planned and carried out to give exercise to the energy which never flags. Huckleberry picking, bathing in the river, and beach parties, when the whole family filled stage and wagon, and took their merry way to the shore, with tent and well-filled baskets, returning in the evening with happy memories. The freedom from even the ordinary children's ailments has been a strong proof of the healthfulness of the air. Quite as real an indication might be found in the general contentment and happiness that has prevailed. This year, even the babies have kept the peace, and this is saying not a little, when there have been as many as four in the house at one time, all under fourteen months old.

All subscriptions and donations may be sent to the rector, or sister in charge.

The Choirmistress' "Sub."

During the absence of Miss Darrach, the choir linen has been looked after by Master Adam Preston, who has assumed charge of this department for her, besides attending to his own duties as librarian of the choir, and we take this opportunity of complimenting Adam upon the manner in which he has discharged the obligations of this new office. The soiled cottas have been regularly and carefully collected each week and clean ones hung in each closet. Not once has there been the slightest forgetfulness or carelessness in this matter, and we must congratulate Miss Darrach upon having left with us such an alert, efficient and entirely satisfactory "sub."

PERSONALS.

Mr. Kneedler, our tenor soloist, took his annual choir vacation of two Sundays upon the 18th and 25th of August. He has been in the choir so long, and is such a hard and faithful worker, that we think these two Sundays of respite each year must cause him a curious sensation of uneasiness, such as we feel when we start upon an unusual errand and are unable to rid ourselves of the idea that we have "forgotten something."

Our choirmistress, Miss Darrach, is expected to return from Europe in the early part of September.

CHOIR VACATIONS AND SUMMER LASSITUDE.

When the size of the choir was more nearly equal to the requirements of the church than it now is, the number of members in attendance rendered it possible, each year, to grant the men, in a body, a month's relaxation from all choir duties, while the boys sang the services each Sunday. Vice versa, when the men returned, the boys could be allowed a summer holiday of a month, and their absence could be taken advantage of to render masses written exclusively for men's voices—a treat which comparatively few parishes in this city, with the exception of St. Clement's, have ever had the pleasure of experiencing. Such an arrangement renders the hot summer months much less trying upon the singers, who—no matter what the temperature—have to work vigorously through the services in stiff, uncomfortable linen collars and heavy, heating vestments; with all the additional personal uneasiness caused by the formal, reverend and appropriate behavior incumbent upon a chorister singing the praise of God in one of the most holy portions of the church. A relaxation of the kind in question seems to make a great gap in the otherwise incessant "grind," and appears to stimulate flagging energy, refresh weary spirits, and sustain interest in the choir work. This is particularly true of the little chorister of ten or twelve (almost upon the threshold of life) who is, as a rule, an irresponsible and morally undeveloped being, not yet capable, from a sense of duty or moral obligation, of placing his "nose to the grind-stone," and voluntarily keeping it there in spite of the pain and discomfort. In such cases there is naturally one overpowering desire and irresistible impulse; namely, to escape altogether from the "grind-stone," or to hold the "nose" just far enough away to cheat the "grind-stone" of any opportunity to work upon the material. The latter is the more common method. Comparatively few boys resign from the choir during the summer, unless compelled to by circumstances over which they have no control, but it is one of the most difficult things to get them to sing creditably on a day when the heat is intense. They display a lassitude, a lack of energy and a weariness of spirit that are appalling. It is cruel to drive or coerce urchins in this state, and the best and only proper method to pursue is to conjure them into the right mood by a skilful and imperceptible infusion of the necessary spirit into their dull minds and torpid brains.

A GOOD EXAMPLE.

One of the members of our parish recently set an example which we sincerely wish could be imitated by all the singers connected with our church. Feeling that he was not in a position just now to accomplish very much for his parish, but desiring to do whatever lay in his power, he concluded to join the choir as a voluntary singer, a decision which he very promptly put into execution.

A man who gives his services to the church in this way, attending rehearsals and services regularly, and making himself a reliable and interested member of the choir, really does much more for the parish than might, perhaps, appear at first sight; for "good men and true" are not too plentiful, even in the most flourishing choirs, and are pretty sure to be appreciated by the choirmaster. Moreover, when a man does this, he presents to the church, yearly, the actual equivalent of a certain number of dollars and cents—depending, of course, upon the value of his voice and the conscientiousness of his work.

Moral:—If you cannot give money to your parish, give your services in any practical way that presents itself. A parish must have both workers and money, and one is as essential as the other.

BOYS FOR THE CHOIR.

More boys are wanted for the choir. Owing to a number of changes that occurred this summer there are several vacancies in the choir for boys with clear, high voices and accurate ears. A monthly salary is paid and the boys are carefully taught, being rehearsed three times a week. In addition to this, there are many little benefits connected with membership in the choir; the Choir Club, with its refreshment nights once a month; visits to the Zoo in the summer; entertainment parties each month for the boys with a perfect record for that month; pic-nics and excursions during the summer; and, usually, an annual visit of a week or more to the shore, the country, or a camping ground.

To be accepted, boys must meet the above requirements, and the number received into the choir is small compared with the total number of applicants; but the choirmaster is glad to try boys, and upon any Sunday, before or after service, will be pleased to make an appointment with any boy who wishes to apply for admission.

Pledges in Arrears.

Nos. 5, 15, 32, 33, 46, 47, 49, 52, 53, 59, 61, 62, 72, 77, 78, 80, 85, 93, 97, 99. 101, 108, 112, 126, 133, 135, 138, 140, 142, 147, 154, 155, 157, 158, 159, 170, 173, 179, 180, 181, 183, 184, 186, 189, 190, 191.

Several others are in arrears for a few weeks. It would be a very great relief to the Church treasury, if all money promised and owed could be paid, for then we could begin the work this fall very much more comfortably. Debts paid, and the careless ones bearing their share, we would have no financial worries.

The Holy Angels.

In proportion to one's faith and life in the Catholic religion, one's insight into the unseen and eternal increases; but in proportion to one's lack of faith, one's perception of the spiritual world grows dim. We rejoice at the approach of the festival of St. Michael and All Angels, to remind ourselves that we belong to that church of God which has lived on this earth in communion with heaven, and in the conscious realization of "the great cloud of witnesses" which surrounds us. To us the angels are not the mere vague unrealities of a vanished faith; they should be the spiritual allies of our Christian war, who guard and attend us, whose worship of God we join, and who are as possible to our perception as those St. Peter saw, and those of whom St. Chrysostom wrote, "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth," so that they have a prior existence to man, heaven being God's first creation, and they are thus a different order, an order of ministering spirits who sustain and operate the universe under the will of God. What knowledge, what power, what purity, what instant obedience must be theirs who are in the immediate presence of God and enjoy constant communion with the Father of Spirits! The holy angels have been eternally innocent, since they have always been beholding the face of God. They have been eternally happy, since they have always been flooded with the sunlight of the Divine love. To know God is to be at the source and centre of all knowledge and all power, and to know God postulates, moreover, perfection of character and moral excellence. "In heaven their angels do always behold the face of My Father which is in heaven," said our Lord, speaking of the guardian angels. It has been asserted by theologians that it will be the duty of the angels to separate the good from the bad at the judgment day, as the Scriptures reveal, not only because they are the natural ministers of God, but because they have watched over us who are the "heirs of salvation," and they alone know fully our thoughts and words and acts, our resistance of grace or our triumphs over evil. Let us never forget the holy angels; they are, on the one hand, an example for us to imitate in their innocence of character and obedience to the will of God; and, on the other hand, they may be either our spiritual safeguards or the instruments of our destruction, smiting us as the angel smote Herod when he gave not the glory to God. With them we may live forever in the beatific vision, or of us it may be written, "Let them be as the dust before the wind and the angel of the Lord scattering them." Remember the perfection of their purity which enables them to see God, and so shall you attain to the perfection of their knowledge and of their power which they derive from their dwelling with the Father of Lights.

The Repair Fund.

In the August number we reported $31 as given for this fund, we did hope that some more might come; the object, "pointing" the stone work, seems a necessary one, needful to preserve the structure in good condition. This is a practical appeal. "A stich in time saves nine, and a few hundred dollars spent now will save, probably, two or three times as much in the not very distant future. Aside from the necessity of "pointing" the stone work, it will greatly improve the appearance of the building and make it very much more attractive.

The New Sunday-school.

There has been a revolution in the method of teaching religion to children. The system of learning—or, rather, not learning—a dreary catechism by rote and reciting it on Sunday; the dull half hour of question and answer; the monotonous disorder; at best, the very limited progress in a few elements of doctrine, have been done away. Within the last few years there has been developed and perfected, chiefly in France, a new way of teaching religion, which is no longer a burden or, at least, of small profit to the child's soul, but which is a constant surprise and delight; not only instructing children in the whole round of the Church doctrine with minute accuracy, but practicing them in the necessary actions of their faith, and developing, moreover, a love of God, a devotion of soul, and a spirituality of heart such as children alone attain. Of course, there have never been wanting families, or even ideal Sunday-school teachers, who have developed the saintly life in their children; but the new method of teaching Sunday-school, called the Dupenloup method, turns the whole Church into such a family and such a teacher, and accomplishes, by principles of scientific teaching, really remarkable results in large numbers. This method is being adopted in this country; a number of parishes use it, in modified forms, already, and it has been found of great service, also, in missions. We hope to introduce it at St. Clement's this fall.

We want the children. There is no more important work. They are the men of the future. No time is so impressionable as childhood, and no teaching is so important as that given to children. The effect of the lessons of childhood lasts all through life. What a wonderful thing; what a blessing to the child; what a constant strength and safeguard all through the long years of a life of temptation and trial in the world; what a fair prospect of arriving at our true destiny in the world to come, if from our earliest years we were taught the whole Catholic faith; if we practiced that faith; if, moreover, we were drawn to love that faith and that practice with the whole heart! And that is what the new Sunday-school does; it makes children love their religion; it takes the soul in its earliest years, before sin and Satan have already begun their work of destruction, and it surrounds the child with the means of grace, which it is taught to enjoy; it fills the child with an affection for virtue, which it learns to respect. Already there are encouraging results, both at home and abroad, of this system; not only in the increasing number of children who come voluntarily to confession, and for their communions, but in the effect upon parents, and even whole families.

The new Sunday-school is held in Church, where the opportunity for suitable devotion is at hand. The girls sit on one side, the boys on the other, and the smallest children are in front. Hymns are sung and prayers are said, the children being taught how to kneel and bow and cross themselves properly. Only five questions and answers are learned each day; but these are so well learned that every child ought to repeat them on the following Sunday, and for weeks after. The Head Catechist (there are three) gives an instruction, which each child is expected to remember for the next week, writing out at home from memory and presenting the following Sunday as a Diligence, concluding with some original resolution or prayer. There are more hymns, and a game, called "the game of good points," in which those children who have answered well come forward and answer questions put by the Head Catechist, picture cards being given for the best answers. Finally, comes a Scripture reading by the Second Catechist, distinct and forcible, and a homily or sermon, of a very few minutes' length, addressed to the heart and conscience of the child. Everything is bright and quick. The children take an animated interest in what is going on; they readily learn the instruction and questions, and soon catch the spirit of the competition in "the game of good points." Often they are touched and affected by the lessons. Besides, there are, on all the greater festivals, fêtes, on which the prizes are distributed, recitations given, dramatic dialogues on religious subjects recited, flowers, music, and a Magnificat sung, with incense, and corporate communions made.

There is no doubt that the method can be employed with great success at St. Clement's. Further announcements in regard to it will be made later.

PHILADELPHIA, OCTOBER, 1895.

There is a serious matter which demands our attention during the coming winter; it is the financial condition of the parish; that every individual communicant should realize his duty of giving to God. A Christian is not living a religious life unless he gives of his means for the support of the services and for charity according to his ability; his obligation is not satisfactorily fulfilled when he gives to all sorts of strange and unusual schemes which attract his fancy or interest; the amount of money thrown away on "fads" is wasted. It is just as much a part of the worship of God to give regularly and systematically as it is to pray, receive Holy Communion, or make Confession. Quite a number of St. Clement's people give generously, conscientiously and willingly; but there are a large number who do not give any more than they can help, apparently what they think they will never miss. Various are the excuses, but they all come to one in the end; these persons do not care to exercise any self-denial; they take the risk; they expect some one else to pay their debts to God. It is not religious; it is not honest. For the most part such persons expect much attention in sickness, or need; have a very definite idea of other people's duty; do a great deal of criticising, fault finding and complaining. A person who does not give has no particular interest in the parish or its work, and naturally dislikes very much to hear of its needs; they are opposed to begging sermons or articles. Some people do not like to pledge themselves, the result is they give according to impulse, and, of course, give less than they owe God; as a matter of fact the whole Christian life is a life lived under a vow; you cannot escape the obligation, even if you manufacture an excuse, so that you may not feel uncomfortable for not paying. It is a solemn duty for each one to give according to his means, and exercise some measure of self-denial.

Parishes are expected to be honest, but how can they meet obligations if members of a congregation neglect to pay?

There are many people who take advantage of the privileges of St. Clements, speak of the work with interest, it may be enthusiasm, yet their offerings, perhaps, hardly equal their car fares, certainly do not reach the amount paid for their amusement. They do not "set apart" for God's work, but throw in what they can spare. Many think that they have so many other claims that God does not expect them to do anything; that is their idea, but it does not come from God; it is not the voice of the spirit speaking, and it does not relieve them or put them in the way of the blessing.

We hope that those who have not given any pledges—they are not a few, some have never promised, others have become tired of the self-denial—may make a fresh start, then we can clear off all arrears, pay our debts, and make St. Clement's do its work thoroughly and well.

Church Convention.

The General Convention of the Church is to meet in Minneapolis, Minnesota, during this month; the opening service will be in Gethsemane Church on Wednesday, October 2d; all people ought to pray for God's blessing on the work; 79 Bishops are entitled to seats, and there are 424 members of the House of Deputies. There are important reports of committees to be discussed and acted on. Some dioceses have asked to be divided, e. g., Maryland. Missionary work is to be decided on, and perhaps some of the vacancies in missionary dioceses to be filled. The sessions last for about three weeks.

The New Catechism.—Notes.

The new Catechism will begin today—St. Michael and All Angels—at 3 o'clock. All helpers please attend the preliminary instruction at 2.45 o'clock.

The Catechism will be held in the church, and the girls will sit on the gospel side, the boys on the epistle side, the smaller children being in front.

The mass at 9.15 this morning was offered with special intention for the success of the new Catechism.

Besides the regular children's mass at 9.15 every Sunday morning, there will be appointed an 8 o'clock mass on one Sunday of every month, when children will make their communions. The confession of children will be heard on the Saturday before. Parents will please see that their children are regular in their duties.

All the teachers will please attend the Catechism and sit with their classes. They can be of the greatest assistance in the work.

Any child receiving three "good fives" for perfect answers to the questions will be given a prize. The prizes are beautiful illuminated cards with a variety of pictures. Extra prizes in books and medals will be given at the end of the season to those obtaining the highest marks. The record of each scholar in attendance and marks is kept for the year. This record will include also the attendance at the 9.15 mass Sunday mornings.

Every person who desires instruction in the principal articles of the faith will do well to attend the new Catechism. While the instruction is primarily for the children, it will be found useful also for adults. The teaching is simple but deep. All who wish to be present will be welcome.

The first year of the Catechism will be devoted to teaching the chief doctrines of religion, such as: The Creation, The End of Man, The Fall, The Incarnation, Resurrection, Ascension, Descent of the Holy Ghost, The Church, etc., etc.

The children of the Infant School will remain under the instruction of Miss Smith. None but those who have learned the Church Catechism being admitted to the new Catechism. The Infant School will be held in the Sunday-school room, while the new Catechism will be held in the church.

As soon as the Catechism is well started, it is expected to close each session with a special service and a solemn magnificat. It is intended, also, to hold a special fête at Christmas if possible.

Suggestions for receiving the Blessed Sacrament when unable to come to Church.

For various reasons the more reverent and seemly method of receiving the Blessed Sacrament when one is sick, seems to be that it should be carried from the church according to the ancient custom, rather than that consecration should be in the sick-room. Where masses were or are infrequent, or sometimes under other circumstances, it may be necessary to consecrate in private houses, but now that reservation is not unusual and in many places mass is said daily in the church, this is no longer necessary. The present suggestions are of a practical nature, and are not concerned with the proper preparation and disposition of the soul.

In every house there should be at least one blessed wax candle for such occasions.

THINGS TO BE PREPARED.

A table covered with a clean, white cloth; a crucifix upon it or at least a cross; a lighted candle; a small glass of water; a prayer book.

The table to be placed so that the priest does not face the sick person or other persons present. All women present should have some covering on the head, even the sick woman, a cap, lace veil or handkerchief.

Devout persons within the church or house ought to genuflect when a priest with the Blessed Sacrament passes.

In the street some token of reverence ought to be made, men ought to raise their hats if nothing more, saluting our Lord, and women ought to make some reverence.

Stricter attention ought to be paid to the rubric which warns all to notify the priest of a desire to receive Communion, and not to put it off until a crisis, or expect him to know of the sickness and to suggest the need of the Sacrament.

Ordinarily the Sacrament is reserved by tincture, that is, the Sacred Body is dipped in the Precious Blood; in communicating, the more convenient mode is for the priest to place it on the tongue, in most cases only the sick person is communicated.

It is gratifying that the offerings have been so large during the summer. We may expect soon to have all back pledges paid up.

Pew rents are due on October 1st.

Since the publication of our last number we, who have been in the city, have had the privilege of seeing several of our old friends; Father Convers came in for a day; Father Huntington spent a Sunday with us and preached morning and night; Father Field has spent the greater part of a week, as well as promised to arrange to return to us.

Bishop Potter's Work.

One of the important and notable events of the summer has been Bishop Potter's residence during July in the lower part of New York City, taking charge of the work of the Cathedral Mission. The locality is a densely populated one; the conditions are, humanely speaking, rather unfavorable for religious work. One of those places where self-denial must be a part of the outfit of the workers. No one can reach people until they thoroughly realize and understand the point of view of the ones they desire to teach, strengthen and change.

You cannot work a mission church while you live at a distance, even though you may spend a part of each day on the ground. Always be at the disposal of the people, and be deeply interested in their welfare. At best you are on the outside of their life, and to benefit them you must have thrown in your lot with them. They may respect, admire and esteem you, but they cannot entirely take you to their hearts; they do not know you—how can they? You do not know them, of course not. It ought not to be a singular thing for a Bishop to do this kind of thing, though as a matter of fact it is. Those people really have as much claim on their Bishop's time as their more fortunate neighbors. So while honoring the Bishop for breaking the bad custom of the past, we can only feel that he has fulfilled a part of his duty; even Bishops ought not to be above any part of their work; there is plenty of room for a higher standard of self-sacrifice; they ought to set the example rather than simply urge the duty of self denial upon others.

Bishop Potter can now speak of the problems that he has thus been enabled to study from actual observation and knowledge. Perhaps he may be able to point out why so much of our work of a charitable nature rather harms than helps the individuals, dries up their religion, destroys their faith; it too often fosters every covetousness and self-seeking.

There are many idle young men about with no object or aim in life, not only wasting but killing time. Idling seems to be their most serious occupation. Good material being wasted. It might be a good plan for many such to give themselves for a certain period during the winter and summer for solid work; a time when others' interests would have the first claim, when they would spend themselves and their substance entirely for others. It would do them no harm and it might be of some benefit to them.

Notes.

The various Guilds will meet this month as usual, and it is hoped to have full attendance of members and associates.

The Rev. J. G. Ewens has become Chaplain of St. Mary's Guild, and taken charge of the mothers' meeting.

The Rev. G. T. Griffith, after good faithful work here, has gone to Evansville, Indiana. Many will pray for God's blessing on his work there.

Mr. W. A. Carson has resigned as Sacristan.

The Brotherhood of St. Andrew has purchased a house at Twentieth and Race, it is to be fitted up for the accommodation of young men who can only pay a moderate sum for board.

The Sea-shore Home at Point Pleasant was closed the first part of September; there is a deficit which, it is hoped, may be made up soon; a report of all money received, number of people entertained, etc., will be published later on.

Our Sexton, Mr. Thomas Connor, after many years of faithful work, has severed his connection with St. Clement's.

Good News for the Choir Boys.

In a letter from Oxford, England, dated September 3d, Miss Darrach wrote that she expected "to sail from Southampton on Sunday afternoon, September 15th." It is very probable, therefore, that she will be with us again, about the time this issue of the MAGAZINE goes to press.

This will undoubtedly be agreeable tidings to the choir-boys. Every boy in the choir knows that as a member of the choir he has no friend more sincerely solicitous for his moral and physical welfare than Miss Darrach, and the absence of a staunch and true friend, ever thoughtful for one's comfort and interests, is necessarily more or less keenly felt, according to the intensity of one's appreciation. Moreover, the mere mention of Miss Darrach's name undoubtedly arouses in the minds of most of the boys visions of happy "Choir Club" sessions, with all their accompanying pleasures and benefits, so that it is not difficult to believe that the return of our choirmistress will be a cause of great rejoicing in more than one small heart that knows but one friend in our big parish.

The Value of the Volunteer Singer.

As summer draws to a close and the choir attendance begins to improve; as irregular members (compelled by the advancing season to relinquish summer enjoyments) bethink themselves of settling down to regular choir work for the fall and winter; as absentees return to choir duties and resume their old places in the stalls; as applications are received from various individuals for admission to the choir, and the hope of an increased membership gains some possibility of realization; as this annual metamorphosis takes place and the contrast between a summer and a winter choir is made apparent, we are naturally led to wonder what we should do if all choir singers deserted their posts in the warm weather. Salaried singers are, of course, under a sort of business obligation to maintain a regular attendance, and the question, therefore, applies principally to volunteer singers; but, as volunteer singers make up, in our case, practically the entire corps of men, the question becomes a somewhat momentous one to us. Important as the question is, however, it is very easily and briefly answered, for we simply could not do without the volunteer singer. It may, possibly, be thought by some injudicious for us to make this frank admission, lest our volunteer singers become "puffed up" with pride and vanity and imbued with a desire to take undue advantage of the power they possess; but believing that "honesty is the best policy," we do not hesitate to be perfectly candid in the matter; in addition to which we have sufficient confidence in our volunteer singers to prevent our anticipating any such evil result. There have been occasions this summer when, without our volunteers, one side or the other of the choir would have been entirely without men; and, at all times, the parts would be ridiculously unbalanced but for the voices given to us without price. It is right that our volunteer choirmen should know that we realize that their attendance is sometimes secured at the cost of various little personal sacrifices; it is proper they should feel that we fully appreciate their efforts to maintain and improve the choir through regular attendance and conscientious observance of duties, and it is appropriate that we should here mention that the choirmaster has requested us to extend, in particular to the volunteer singers, and in general to all the choir members who have labored through the hot summer in faithful performance of their choir duties, his sincere and earnest thanks and his assurance that he deeply and gratefully appreciates their conscientious efforts and their assiduous labors.

A Choir Excursion.

Some time ago the rector suggested the advisability of giving the choir boys an excursion; and, with his authorization, the subject was taken into consideration. It being a matter which concerned only the boys, it was deemed but just and proper that they should have the ruling voice. Several meetings were, therefore, held, and each boy was given an opportunity to express his views. The novel ideas brought forward, the amazing suggestions submitted, the gigantic proposals received, and the wild and startling theories advanced as the proper basis upon which to conduct the excursion need not be repeated here, as it is sufficient to state that the boys finally concluded to spend a day at Washington Park on the Delaware. Saturday, September 7th, was chosen, and it was determined by vote to meet in the choir room at 6.30 A. M (!) The day arrived, but opened with a rain storm that looked so obstinate and determined that only four of the boys put in an appearance. They reached the choir-room shortly after 6 A. M, with their lunches in paper boxes that could be thrown away when emptied. It was, of course, impossible to have an all-day excursion in a rain storm, and with only four of the boys to participate; so, in spite of the protestations of the faithful four, and their assurances that the rain was stopping, that the sun was coming out, that it was going to be a "fine day," and that the other boys would "come after awhile," they were ordered to go home again, and the excursion was postponed until the following Saturday. However, some of the boys (unable to relinquish the realization of their anticipations after the elaborate preparations they had made) took the trip on their own account, and said to the choirmaster the next day (Sunday), with a triumphant irony whose logic could not be disputed, "Didn't we tell you it would be a fine day?" As the weather had cleared later in the morning, he could only reply meekly, "Yes, you were quite right; the weather did clear very nicely." Experience had taught him the futility of discussing the whys and wherefores of his decision.

On Saturday, the 14th, the excursion took place without interruption or mishap. On that day, the proprietors of the switchbacks, merry-go-rounds, toboggans, Ferris-wheels, and "shoot-the-chutes," may have had more profitable customers than our choir-boys, but they certainly had no patrons more highly appreciative or wildly enthusiastic. There were many strange experiences recounted in the choir-room the day after the excursion, but the principal boast was the achievement in breaking the record on the "shoot-the-chutes." One of the "shoot" pilots stated that the largest number of passengers he had ever carried in his vessel at one time was fifteen. This statement at once aroused the ambition of the boys to such a pitch that, with the desperation born of a dauntless determination to excel (whether in choir singing or in shooting chutes), they immediately proceeded to pack themselves into the boat like figs in a fruit box. When they had crowded and jammed and stowed and bundled themselves till discomfort had reached its maxim and the possibility of breathing had been reduced to a minimum, the boat was "let go." It darted down the chute with appalling rapidity; and, when it reached the water, the pilot guided his craft carefully over the lake and landed his seventeen passengers! The pilot had broken his record and the boys had won an honor whose glory will not fade for many weeks, and whose importance will bear many a boast and vaunt.

Third Annual Report of the Clothing Club of St. Clement's Infant School.

NOVEMBER, 1895.

The object of this Club is to help mothers to buy clothing for their younger children, by taking care of such small sums of money as can be saved each week for that purpose.

Money may be brought to the school on Sunday afternoon. A card, marked with the amount of money sent, will be given to the child bringing it.

Shoes, clothing for boys, hats, etc., will be bought for Club members, and sold to them at a discount. The clothing will be sold in the school room every Thursday evening, after eight o'clock.

The Club opens November 1st and closes June 30th.

The ladies in charge of the Club desire to thank the many friends who have so kindly helped and encouraged them by donations of money, materials, half-worn garments, and the making of new garments. Thanks are also due to Strawbridge & Clothier, to Joseph P. Cooper & Son, and to the Eastern Penitentiary, for discount on all goods purchased from them.

Donations of money, materials and half-worn garments will be thankfully received, and may be sent, in care of Miss Katharine Smith, to 120 N. Eighteenth street, to 1924 North street, or 2047 Tower street.

The benefits of the Club are intended for the members of the Infant School, but during the past season we have been obliged to depart from this rule, it being necessary to clothe the older children, in order that they might bring the younger ones to Sunday-school.

During the year we have given away 64 pieces of new clothing (value, $17.95), and 53 pieces of old clothing.

The New Catechism.

The new Catechism began on Michaelmas, with thirty-eight scholars.

The chatechists are as follows: Head Catechist, The Rev. H. Parrish; Second Catechist, The Rev. G. H. Moffett; Third Catechist, Mr. Greenfield. Mr. James Toole assists in keeping the record of attendance. Mr. Balsley is the organist.

The instructions so far have been on The Creation, on God, on The End of Man, on Sin. The instructions are given by the Head Catechist. The homily is given by the Second Catechist.

The answers to questions should be purely voluntary, and the teachers are asked not to press children to send in their names when the children do not wish to do so. It is most important that the children should not feel that the Catechism is in any way a trial. They learn most when they are enjoying the process of learning.

It is hoped to give a fête about St. Clement's Day.

The solemn Magnificat, sung with cope and incense, has been introduced at the end of the Catechism. Mr. Goodwin is thurifer, and Adam Preston and George Johnson are the acolytes.

Parents are always welcome to attend the Catechism. Quite a number of visitors are present each Sunday.

Choir Fund.

Promises and subscriptions are asked for this fund, that the choir may be strengthened and our music improved; already some money has been given for this purpose and more promised. Surely we are all interested in this matter. All money will be acknowledged in the MAGAZINE.

St. John's Guild.

The members of the Guild of St. John are certainly not very enthusiastic. The first meeting this season should have been in September; but as only three members made their appearance on the stated evening, there was no meeting.

St. Clement's Choir.

The Club.

The Choir Boys' Recreation Club reopened on Tuesday evening, October 15th, with an attendance of twenty-two to answer the roll-call, five were absent. Twenty-seven names are entered for this winter, two new names are on the list, while six are dropped; two being away from the city, three being at a distance in town and one has not been asked to return.

A business meeting was first called; this being the fourth winter of the Club it has been thought well that the older boys should take some active interest in its well being. Harry Cathers was elected President; Ralph Remont, Secretary; Herbert Stafford, Librarian; three boys, Adam Preston, Andrew Roach and Winnie Stevenson, were appointed for the month of October, to assist the Superintendent in getting out games, giving out magazines and collecting and helping to replace in the closet all that have been used during the evening.

Walter McMullen kindly furnished the entertainment of the evening by showing, with the assistance of the President, his magic lantern, a fine one with many pictures.

It has been proposed that there shall be a debating society on one evening in each month; also, a general game, such as the favorite "Potato Race," "Up and Down Jenkins," the "Donkey" or others yet to be thought of, on one other evening. Entertainments for two evenings in the month are not yet settled upon; banquets will come like leap year, when there is a fifth Tuesday, for pecuniary reasons.

A Letter from the Club.

DEAR MAGAZINE:—We, the Choir Boys Recreation Club, are writing to ask you if you can get us a few new things for the Club. We should like very much, we little boys, some building blocks, some soldiers, a new "messenger boy" game, some dissected pictures or maps; a little boy asked the other evening if we had a "grocery store," that would be a good thing too; also, drawing paper, good pencils, and colored crayons. Some of us, indeed many of us, have no games at home, and if we had the younger children would soon break them up, and we, being choir boys, are thought too old for games, but really we are not, we enjoy our Tuesday evenings in the choir-room. Four nights in the week we are there for work, one night we play and have a good time; it seems very much like our evening home. Do what you can for us, dear MAGAZINE, and you will have our grateful thanks. Perhaps some of the many people who read the MAGAZINE will like to help us to have a good time in the coming winter evenings.

THE LITTLE BOYS OF THE CLUB.

In an old church in England, cut in a stone tablet and placed on the wall on one side is this inscription, in memory of a choirman:

"UNDERNEATH
Lieth in peaceful security the last remains of William Spence, who quitted this earthly stage on the 16th of June, 1785, in the thirty-ninth year of his age. Twenty years a chorister of this church, and was allowed to have one of the strongest and finest bass voices in this kingdom."

Parish Notes.

Father Field received a warm welcome on Michaelmas Day. He preached the morning and evening sermons.

Vespers of the Blessed Sacrament were said in the Chapel on Sunday, October 13th, and eight members admitted to the C. B. S.; twenty-six members are now on our roll. It is expected that vespers will be said each month.

The Infant School is now held in the large school room; they are not as crowded as they were down stairs. The attendance has been very encouraging.

The Catechism in Church is fairly started; the attendance of children has not been as large as it should be. Parents and sponsors have some responsibility, as the Church expects of them some care that the children be instructed.

The Rev. J. M. Davenport has given over the title to the house 2036 Cherry street to the vestry, for the use of All Saints Sisters, as a mission house. There is a large mortgage on the property, and interest on this must be paid. The house is needed, and convenient; it is in need of repair.

HAS YOUR SUBSCRIPTION EXPIRED?

The Guilds have resumed their regular meetings. Members of the congregation ought to be attached to, or interested in, some one of these. Christians must not only "believe," but also "do;" and the rule of life of a Guild makes one's religious life definite, not a matter of impulse or feeling. There is room for improvement on the part of some of the members in the regularity of their attendance at Church services and Holy Communion.

The Thursday night mothers' meeting is well attended.

A Perseverance League is being organized for boys who have been confirmed.

The Sea-shore Home deficit is in a fair way of being made up, several persons having sent in money in answer to the appeal.

Congregations are becoming larger as people are returning to town.

November is the month in which we specially remember our dead; it is a custom with some to pray for the souls of those they care for on the anniversary of their death, and to make commemoration on the corresponding day in November.

The second day of the month is observed by Catholics as All Souls Day; names may be given in, that persons may be remembered at the mass on that day, as also on other days during the month.

The General Convention has adjourned; the fears of some have not been realized, the plans of others have not been accomplished; in our next issue we hope to give some account of what was done.

We hope to see every parishioner at the Parish Tea.

PHILADELPHIA, DECEMBER, 1895.

Mr. Remont and Mr. Gaff cannot have too much support in their endeavor to make the choir the model one of the city. The music on St. Clement's Day was excellent, and excepting last Easter is the first occasion upon which so difficult a mass as Mozart's Seventh has been sung in St. Clement's Church for about three or four years. And even more pretentious things are promised; we have heard rumors of an orchestra and one of Schubert's or Gounod's Masses for Christmas. The Christmas music has not been definitely decided upon, but we may be sure of something unusually good.

The Bishops' Pastoral.

The Bishops' Pastoral was publicly read, after due notice, after the eleven o'clock Mass, Sunday, the 17th, in accordance with Title I, Canon 20, § III.

In the opinion of many, this Pastoral is the most advanced document published by any assembly of Anglo-Catholic bishops since the Reformation. It is certainly the most advanced American Pastoral, and this is quite natural, because there has been such a wonderful spreading of Catholic doctrine and practice in this country during the last few years that the general tone of the American church has been appreciably elevated.

Of course, only those who have experienced the blessings of our Catholic heritage are able in any way to judge concerning them. A person, or group of persons, who do not practice fasting, communion, sacramental confession, devotion to the Blessed Sacrament and other Catholic usages, could not have the experimental knowledge required to judge concerning such things. No one who ever earnestly practiced Catholic customs could condemn them; consequently the evidence in the Pastoral Letter, of the desire of the Bishops to claim all of our Catholic heritage—prayers for the dead, in the second paragraph; the acknowledged sacerdotal character of the priesthood, page 9; the reiteration of Catholic dogma, page 12; the full recognition of the Sacrifice of the Mass, pages 15 and 16; the suggested authorization of the Reserved Sacrament, page 17; the propriety of ritual, page 14—in whatever careful way it finds expression, is a sign that the practice of the Catholic religion has become so general in our communion that the Catholic truth has practically triumphed in the House of Bishops.

The Pastoral treats of many things. The first part deals with the state of the Church. It should be a sufficient comment in response to the Bishops' appeals for foreign missions, domestic missions, self sacrifice on the part of young priests, zeal for work among the colored people, the relief of the suffering widows and orphans of clergy, etc., to suggest that this passion for Apostolic fervor should come rather from the Bishops themselves than from the younger clergy. The Bishops are the natural and supernatural leaders in movements of this character, and, if instead of the utterly unapostolic lives many of them lead, with their comfortable homes, relaxed devotion, attendance upon places where money is to be had, rather than upon the places where the souls they desire to save are, they would show some of the enthusiastic courage and self-sacrifice of St. Paul or St. Francis Xavier, they would not want for followers. Money can never be a substitute for religion, and the seat of missionary activity is not on Murray Hill, New York. Everybody recognizes at once the needs of which they speak, but such needs can be supplied only by the practical zeal of the Bishops themselves acting in a self-sacrificing enthusiasm upon these problems. Neither letters, pastoral or otherwise, nor sermons in fashionable pulpits, nor the money secured on the gilded alms basin, will mean one step in advance. This appeal of the letter is to the Bishops themselves.

In regard to ritualistic practices the law of the Church is clear enough for any one who will study the subject, and all questions of vestments or postures are easily determined by very slight investigation into the expressed usage of the English Church; and on this point the Bishops say all that could be desired. Questions of custom; devotion to the Blessed Sacrament; the use of terms like Mass, the Sacrament of Penance, etc., are also discussed in the Pastoral. Of course, one could not expect a very high appreciation of Catholic use or terminology where it is only beginning to be understood and practiced, and the law which governs such things is properly beyond the power of the Bishops to determine. As long as devotion to the sacrament, non-communicating attendance and fasting communion answer to the religious instincts of true devotion they will be generally adopted; and, indeed where there is any true devotion they are adopted. As far as there is any law bearing on these subjects, the law of the Church of England for 1800 years is plainly in their favor, and as long as the terms Mass, Penance, etc., are convenient, expressive and accurate they will, of course, be everywhere used, as indeed they are being used at the present time. The Bishops' letter rather loses in dignity when it attempts the discussion of the use of words.

In regard to the question of Church Unity, the Bishops are as one with the Pope and Archbishop of Canterbury, in recommending prayer as the solution of the problem. "In behalf of this great interest" (of Church Unity), they say, "we recommend that constant and earnest supplication be made to Almighty God, and that no effort be spared to diffuse a knowledge of the true principles of Church Unity; and that the feast of Whitsunday be annually observed as a most appropriate time for such prayer and instruction."

On the whole, the Pastoral is a vigorous document, showing vivid signs of the awakening of Catholic faith and life in our communion. Perhaps these words, taken from it, characterize its underlying principle and express its general tenor. They are from the paragraph on Church Unity. "We can imagine no circumstance that would induce us to consent to any departure from the ancient deposit of faith and order committed to our keeping, for the common benefit of mankind, or to the impairment of any truly Apostolic and Catholic tradition of the Church, or to any measures, which in bringing us nearer to post-reformation communions, would create any new obstacles to reunion with the old historic branches of the Catholic Church."

Parish Tea.

The members of the parish this year had their Tea Tuesday evening, November 26th. It was a merry assemblage indeed, and the monotony of eating and drinking was relieved by an entertaining speech from the Rev. R. H. Paine, of Mt. Calvary Church, Baltimore, solos by the ever obliging members of our choir, Messrs. Hawkins, Belinfante and Master Stafford.

Mr. Henry Flanders spoke a few words, and the closest attention was given him while he was speaking. A Parish Tea at St. Clement's is always well attended, and even last Tuesday's heavy rain did not dampen the ardor of many of the parishioners.

St. Clement's Hospital.

The Hospital was opened again on the first of the month, also the Dispensary. There is no limit to the number who can be treated for their various complaints; the whole difficulty is a financial one. It is impossible, apparently, to raise sufficient funds under present conditions, while the parish gains little or nothing from the connection. The Hospital, it would seem, is not commended to people's notice and interest, by its association with the parish. In our next issue we shall be able to give more definite information about the future.

The Dedication Festival.

"St. Clement's Church—St. Clement's Day," the Rev. Dr. Clendenin gave us the note for our Festival in his sermon, and right heartily did the people take it up and carry it on. Much hard work had been done by the members of St. Vincent's Guild, the Altar Society, the Choirmaster, Choir, and other workers, in preparation. A large number of communions at the early masses began the keeping of the feast, a good attendance at the 11 o'clock service, the dignity and solemnity of the procession, and music of the mass made many hearts glad.

Dr. Clendenin's sermon was a poetic inspiration, and we are glad to welcome him among the number of our friends.

Sunday, though the day was wet, kept up the spirit of joy. The early and children's masses were well attended, and at the High Mass Fr. Convers preached; glad he was to speak to the people he knows and loves so well, and more than glad were they to welcome him.

The letter was read containing the blessing of the Bishop of the Diocese, it being received too late for St. Clement's Day.

Girls' Friendly Society.

A Candidates' Class has been started in our Branch of the G. F. S. The little girls who compose it would be very glad to receive any of the following articles from interested friends. They need not be new:

Children's books and periodicals.
Games (historical or other).
A set of dishes, small but not tiny.
Toy knives, forks and spoons.
Dolls. Also some bright knitting yarns and colored cotton scraps for patchwork.

Donations may be sent to the Sunday-school room any Thursday at 4 P. M., in care of the Branch Secretary,

The New Catechism.—Notes.

The first fête of the New Catechism took place on the Sunday in the octave of the feast of St. Clement. The following children recited billets: Jennie Coles Nannie Clash, Isabella Hoctor, Amy Downey, William Blue, Ruby Haney, Ida Campbell and Edith Smith. The subject was St. Clement. A portion of St. Clement's Epistle to the Corinthians was read by the Second Catechist, Rev. J. H. Moffett.

The attendance at the Catechism is steadily growing, and the interest in it is increasing. All are welcome to visit the Catechism.

The instructions and diligences for the last month have been on the following subjects: Jesus, Our Saviour; the Blessed Virgin Mary; the Incarnation; St. Clement. This month's instructions will be on the life of Our Lord.

On the night before Thanksgiving Day an entertainment with a magic-lantern was given to the Catechism and Infant School.

Some time in Advent it is expected to give a magic-lantern lecture on a devotional subject appropriate to the season.

Some excellent diligences, especially from Miss Kean's class, have been presented lately; and the number who try for the game of Good Points is growing rapidly.

The admonitions hereafter will include advice on saying prayers at home and in church, on attendance at mass, on Holy Communion, on preparation for confession, on conduct, etc.

Dr. Garret is doing excellent work in bringing back to their duties a number of boys who have drifted away from church lately. We are most anxious to increase the attendance of boys at the Catechism.

At Christmas it is intended to have a fête of a more elaborate kind than the one given at the St. Clement's festival. Those who take part will be chosen from the children most regular in attendance at the Catechism and 9.15 mass.

The new cope is to be used at the solemn magnificats hereafter.

Mr. James Toole has succeeded Mr. Greenfield as Third Catechist.

We are glad to print the following from the Church Times in its account of the opening of the new Church of Saint Agatha, Landport, England:

Father Maturin, in his fine, deep voice, gave out Isaiah liv: 2, as the topic of his sermon. And tracing Christianity from its source in the first revelation made to man after the fall, showed that ours was a no less ancient religion than those hoary systems of the East with which the nineteenth century is wont to daunt the Church of to-day. There were, he said, two striking characteristics of Judaism, which was the dawn of Christianity. (1) Its narrowness. (2) Its power of expansion; and proceeded to prove that what the prophet commanded the Jews might to day be reiterated to the Church, "Strengthen thy stakes,"—hold fast to dogma and doctrine. "Lengthen thy cords," draw into the shelter of the tents, after that strengthening, all who could and would come. Will the Church, he asked, be able to adapt herself to the changes of life? Will the Church, which was able to reign in the ages of faith, be able to reign in the ages of reason? We don't trust so! We don't hope so! We know so! After which, turning to a more personal application of the subject to the huge congregation gathered around him, he said: "For ten or fifteen years you have been held in a very close bond; like the Jews of old, kept within narrow boundaries. If you want to go on and to enlarge the work you have done, if you want to hold fast that which you have, beat in the old principles, strengthen your stakes! Don't swerve. Don't give up one tittle of your faith if it is to enlarge the Church ten times over. It is the men of strong convictions that set the world on fire. If you ask me what is the note of a Catholic, that you may know him wherever you find him, I answer, "It is devotion to the Blessed Sacrament." By that you can get up to the beatific vision. Don't give up your love for it. Don't pull up the stakes and let in more by so doing. The old faith must do for you, or you must do without its blessings.

The Committee of Management desire to call the attention of the members of the Parish to the fact that the care of the vestments has been given to the members of the Altar Guild, and it is their duty to keep all vestments in the proper repair and to furnish new ones when needed. This they cannot do without financial aid. Contributions to the vestment fund, no matter how small, will be most acceptable, and may be given to the Rector, or to the Treasurer of the Guild.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 1st, 1894.

PARISH NOTES.

Father Page, Superior of the Society of St. John Evangelist, preached for us on Sunday evening, October 27th, and, at the 11 o'clock mass, on Thanksgiving Day. Father Sargent, Superior of the Order of the Holy Cross, preached for us on Sunday evening, November 10th.

Solemn High Mass was sung on Sunday in the octave of All Saints.

We hope that many kept the Novena before St. Clement's day. Intercessions were made each day after even-song in the chapel.

The week before St. Clement's day seems to have been especially notable in the church life of our city.

Christ Church celebrated its two hundredth anniversary; special services of interest were held, with sermons by distinguished preachers.

The Annunciation also kept their twenty-fifth anniversary in a truly joyful and religious manner.

At Holy Trinity the Woman's Auxiliary had their annual meeting, with addresses by several of the missionary Bishops.

Earlier in the month St Elizabeth's kept their Dedication Festival.

The Altar Guild has resumed its meetings, and already has much work to show; the making and embroidery of a new white cope used for the first time at our festival. This vestment is intended for use at the Catechism on Sunday afternoons and at Guild services. The cost of the materials was met by the thank offerings of some persons on some happy occasions; the work was done by the members of the Altar Guild.

A new Altar book has been provided for our use, the old one had become very dilapidated.

A jeweled morse and a pair of silver mounted cruets have been given in memory of a much-loved communicant of the parish.

The Bible Classes have resumed their sessions.

The League of Perseverance for boys has been formed.

Two new members have been admitted to St. Vincent's Guild.

Father Sargent, Superior of the Order of Holy Cross, will give conferences on the Sunday nights during advent: Subject, "The Four Last Things."

Communicants are reminded of their Christmas Communions. Many of the congregation do not realize the serious times in which we are living. They are shirking their share of the burden and fight, leaving it to the few, hanging on so that if all comes out right they may claim their share, but not helping. These times try the courage of some; the less earnest fall off; the laggards drop behind; the cowards seek easier ways and paths; but the earnest-minded go right on—difficulties call out the best and truest that is in them. No one must expect an easy time. We cannot drop down into the ordinary; the parish and people must stand for zeal for Christ, His Church and His Sacraments. Spend a good Advent; make a good Christmas confession, that you may receive our Lord with proper dispositions to your soul's health.

Special Funds.

The Repair Fund for pointing the outside stone work of the church amounts to $37.

Attention is called to the Sinking Fund. It now amounts to over $2,000.

In our last issue we spoke of the extra Music Fund, the purpose is to increase the efficiency of the choir, to pay for instruments at the festivals, etc. It ought to appeal to many. We print a list of money received.

Mrs. W. L. Fox	$25 00
Miss Barclay	20 00
A Friend	10 00

$250 more have been promised by a friend of the parish. We still need $400.

Donations of money are needed for the Christmas treats.

PROCESSION OF GUILDS.

The Guilds of the parish had their annual procession Sunday evening after St. Clement's day, and it is difficult to imagine a more soul-inspiring service, prettier music, or a more interesting and appropriate sermon. Father Convers said that the members of Guilds should have constantly in mind the two words: "Work—live."

"What are you in Guilds for if not for two things? Wheresoever one stands there is work for all to do. Haven't been asked! Were you not baptized into the church of Jesus Christ? Has He not given to you as one of your privileges the power to work? I do not know what each one of you can do, but I venture to say that if you go to one of our clergy he would give you some work to do. In my opinion one of the seven capital sins is laziness. Don't be lazy, WORK; work for the church; work for your Guild; work for your own sake to dispel the laziness.

"To work we must live, bearing our cross and our trials. We must come to church, and we must make our communion.

"How many of you who are here tonight can honestly say that you have, during the past year, been regular in your church duties? Our religion we call Christianity, but it is only a corruption of it. Can we not live a better life this coming year in St. Clement's Church than we have this last year?"

A LITTLE PRAYER.
For St. Clement's Little Choir Boys.

By GILBERT AUSTIN.

Blessed Lord Jesu! Holy Lord Jesu!
Jesu, who dwelt mid our sorrow and care,
Night draweth round us, shadows enshroud us;
Hark to Thy children's evening prayer.

Blessed Child Jesu! Holy Child Jesu!
Jesu, Redeemer untainted with sin,
Ever be near; and grant us, we pray Thee,
Hearts that are spotless and pure within.

Crucified Jesu! Dying Lord Jesu!
Suffering agony, torture and shame,
Help us to love Thee: Oh, may Thy child be Worthy to bear his dying Lord's name.

And, risen Jesu, gentle Lord Jesu,
Jesu who loveth, who pities e'n me,
Keep us—when erring feet are at rest—for Ever, dear Jesu, ever with Thee.

The choir boys are having a delightful time in the enjoyment of the many new games that have been so generously given to them.

The library of the club has just been reopened, and an increased interest taken in it. Occasionally, new books are needed to keep up the interest. A list is given below to assist any one who may feel disposed to give one book and not duplicate any already in the library. Two of the older boys are proving themselves faithful and careful librarians.

LIST OF BOOKS:

(Nature readers) "Seaside and Wayside."
No. 1. About Crabs and Bees.
No. 2. About Insects.
No. 3. About Beetles and Birds.
No. 4. Animals and Plants.
By Julia McNair Wright. Most instructive little books; can be purchased separately. No. 1 for 25 cents.
Also, Richard Kippling's
"Jungle Book," No. 1 and No. 2.
"The Beautiful Face."
"The White Gipsy."
"The Diamond Ring."
"The Little Blue Lady."

DEAR MAGAZINE:—You certainly are our good fairy! The letter we wrote to you last month has been generously responded to. Two beautiful boxes of building blocks, a grocery store, two handsome dissected maps, messenger boys, and many other lovely games have come to us, and some without the donors' names. We do not know whom we are to thank for some of them, and can only ask that you will thank them for us. Gratefully yours,

THE LITTLE BOYS OF THE "CHOIR BOYS' RECREATION CLUB."

BERTIE, WILLIE, AND MIKE.
A Plain Story, Told in a Plain Way for St. Clement's Choirboys, by a Plain Choirman.

Every one admitted that Bertie Brown had a beautiful voice and a wonderful ear for music. He could sing higher and lower than any other boy in the school, and could learn any ordinary tune simply by hearing it two or three times. The teachers sometimes patted him on the back and said, "Bertie, you sing like an angel;" and then they would turn away and murmur, regretfully, "What a pity it is that a boy who has been given such a magnificent voice should behave so badly in school, and cause his parents such deep anxiety and his friends such bitter disappointment." For Bertie was not considered a good boy by any means.

Willie Smith was Bertie's chum. He, too, had a good voice, but not so good as Bertie's. The two boys, though great friends, were very different in character.

WM. J. RULE,
FUNERAL DIRECTOR

WEST PHILADELPHIA.
d.3m.

Willie was quite a good boy in his way. He never annoyed his teachers or grieved his parents by bad conduct, but he was wretchedly lazy. Nothing could induce him to work. He neglected his lessons, and shirked all his duties both at school and at home.

Mike Jones was a plain, honest, hard-working boy who went to the same school. It seemed to the boys that Mike's only object in life was to do things with all his might and main. When he played football, he played harder than anybody else; when he was engaged in a game of baseball, he had eyes and ears for nothing but the game he was playing; when he was working out a sum in arithmetic, no one could get a word or a look from him. In short, Mike seemed to be unable to do more than one thing at a time; but there was no doubt of the fact that what he did he did well. He was not a smart or clever boy, and yet he was considered by his teachers the best scholar in the school, and they said it was entirely owing to the fact that he gave all his attention to whatever he had to do.

This story will be of interest to every choir-boy.

PHILADELPHIA, JANUARY, 1896.

It seems a strange thing that there should be any vacant houses in the vicinity of St. Clement's; there ought not to be, and it almost seems as though there would not be if people's religion were the main purpose in their lives. A Church with many religious privileges and advantages ought to be a centre; establish a neighborhood for those who are in earnest, living for God and not for merely earthly aim or worldly gain. As a matter of fact what do we see if we care to notice a man, a woman, a family brought to God, taught to value spiritual things and the power of the sacramental; experiencing many evidences of God's favor and grace; responding to the call of God. Suddenly they take a notion, and the first thing one knows they have decided, arranged, packed up and gone to some place where they must make more than an ordinary effort to obtain the very essential of religion. We all know the result.

Take another instance, a person is brought under the influence of the Catholic religion, for awhile they think no effort too great that they may live in the power of this new life; after awhile they feel the strain, the test comes, the distance of residence is a hindrance, they give up, lose their hold. What might have been a preventive of such a sad state they might have made it a point to come near and stay, even if fashion, improvements, trolleys, and the rest, made another section more desirable from an earthly standpoint. How many a one fails because they "moved away," "lived too far."

How seldom we hear, we sometimes do, "I wanted to get near my church." Really and seriously the church ought to be such a spiritual centre, create such an atmosphere that devout and earnest ones would make nearness to it an important consideration.

The Hospital.

We promised to give an account of the future management of the Hospital in this number, buta rrangements have not yet been completed. It seems the wisest plan that something should be done looking to its permanent usefulness; at present, for whatever reason, its appeal for support does not command a sufficient response; there seems no possibility of State aid as it is at present organized, although it is relieving the State of some at least of its burdens. As the Parish cannot carry it on, it is better that some person or persons who can should take it in charge.

The opening and consecration of the Church of St. Mary the Virgin, New York, is a fitting commemoration of the twenty-five years existence of this Catholic stronghold. The building is all that could be desired in its appointments, lofty, grand, beautiful; a witness to the reality of the glory and honor of Almighty God, and a worthy evidence of the work of the faithful priest who has ministered to this people from the beginning until now. Such a church with services and spiritual privileges is of, at least, equal importance to the buildings for gymnasiums and social life which seem to absorb the enthusiasm and drain the purses of people in these days. The services during the week of dedication, from the description of those present, must have been devotional and beautiful. We have no doubt but with these additional opportunities and advantages this Parish will greatly develop its work and usefulness.

We wish our brethren Godspeed.

Notes on the Catechism.

The Christmas fête was given on the Sunday after Christmas. Billets were recited by the following scholars: Lizzie Zipperlein, Katie Gibison, Andrew Roach, Jennie Gutherie, Abbie Clash, and Ella Patton. The subject was the Nativity of Our Lord.

The manger, with the figures of Our Lord in the crib, the Blessed Virgin, and St. Joseph had been put up in the Sunday-school room.

The Catechism entertainment and Christmas tree was held Monday, December 30th. Miss Kean spent several weeks in preparing the children who took part in the Santa Claus cantata, and she deserves much credit for her work. Mr. Remont made an excellent Santa Claus. Each child received a present and a box of candy.

The attendance at the Catechism is increasing every Sunday. The parents of children, and others interested, are always welcome.

The subject of the next month's instructions will be, The Holy Catholic Church.

Report of the Guild of the Holy Cross.

Officers for the Season 1895-96.

Chaplain, the Rector; Treasurer, Miss Frances F. Hazen; Secretary, Miss Elizabeth Keene.

In printing the Financial Report of the Guild of the Holy Cross, it is but due to make an acknowledgment of the faithful and self-sacrificing work done by them now and in past years; more especially in their generous contributions to the Seashore Home, and time and personal care given to the children and in the various interests of the Home.

The good accomplished by them as a Guild is significant from the fact that it is one devoted entirely to spiritual interests, there being no social elements combined with it.

The present officers were unanimously re-elected for the coming year at the November meeting.

PARISH NOTES.

The note for salary due to the Rev. J. M. Davenport, the former Rector of the Parish, has been paid since our last issue; it amounted, with interest, to $758.25.

We are very grateful to Father Sargent for so kindly undertaking to give the Advent Conferences. The attendance was very good, and his earnest, clear words of instruction will surely bear good fruit.

The ordinary parishioner seldom realizes the amount of labor involved at the time of a festival. They come to a service and go away; all goes along smoothly; but both before and after many a one has worked, content to do it for our Lord's honor. Acolytes, choir, devout men and women have all done their share.

Members of the Parish gave generously for the Christmas treats, as may be seen from the offertory account. Bountiful dinners were given to a number of people; the children had their festival—the infant school on the feast of St. John the Evangelist, and the members of the Catechism on Monday, December 30th. The mothers' supper, on St. Stephen's day, was a great time—every one happy and, apparently, contented. A very interesting entertainment was given by some of the children on Thursday and Monday evenings. Christmas Day itself was all that one could wish for. Three hundred and twenty-seven communions were made at the early masses, and the High Mass, at 11 o'clock, was a worthy act of worship to our Lord. The music—choir and instruments—the decorations, the large and devout congregation helped many a soul to rise to a fuller realization of the power of the Divine Mystery.

A letter from Father Maturin says: "Warmest remembrance and Christmas blessing to many of my old friends."

Subscriptions are needed for altar flowers.

The sisters ask for contributions of old pieces of white muslin and linen.

We were glad to get donations for the "Sinking Fund" from the St. Margaret's Ward, G. F. S., and from the children of the Guild of the Holy Child. Some such deep, earnest devotion would enable us to pay off the whole of the principal of the ground rent at the next opportunity—a year or two hence. Why can we not make the effort? Pray and work and give as we can.

After two such glorious festivals as St. Clement's and Christmas, we ought not to have to beg very much for the "Extra Music Fund." We acknowledge with many thanks $20 from Miss Kates, $5 from another source unknown, and $15 from a friend, in addition to what we published in December.

We are sure that the offertory at the Christmas festival represents more than an ordinary amount of self-denial. Although we did not create our present liabilities, yet we receive them with many a privilege as well as a share in a parochial history that is a glory to any congregation. So we may bravely make up our minds to do our best that we may hand on our trust, having done our part.

What do we need to build up the work and assure it? A school, a parochial school, even if only for infants and young children. To have children for two years, even at the beginning of their life, means a good deal to them—habits are formed, character is developed, the child gets a start in the way of God that determines much the after years.

The glass in the windows of the church has been mended so as to keep out some of the cold air. It is an expensive luxury to retain this "old glass"—the lead is rotten and the cost of repairs is out of proportion to the true value.

We note with great gratitude and pleasure that the Bishop of Massachusetts has granted permission to the Rector of the Church of the Advent, Boston, to reserve the Blessed Sacrament in that church. This is a blessed fruit of the Pastoral Letter of the House of Bishops. We look for a large increase in the number of churches where reservation may be the custom. Every priest in active parochial life knows the practical and devotional necessity of it, and the opposition, born of prejudice on the part of those who do not sufficiently value or appreciate the privilege, is gradually ceasing.

Increased Membership.

In pleasant realization of our hopes and expectations, new voices are coming into the choir and the membership is gradually creeping upward. Two men joined us during the month of November, and we hope soon to secure a few more. We now stand badly in need of boys, and arrangements have been made to add about ten more, but this can be done only, of course, as the boys can be obtained. Boys are so scarce that it is an extremely difficult matter to get hold of good boys; and, as we are rather particular upon this point, the majority of those tried are rejected However, if all goes well, we hope by Easter to have secured the additional voices. This should bring our membership up to, say, forty; and, with a choir of that size, we shall at last have come in sight of the path that leads finally to the old conditions and the old triumphs so dear to those who remember St. Clement's choir as it was in bygone days. As we have said, this will require time, and the two things most important and necessary in the meantime are patience on the part of the Parish and incessant work and indomitable perseverance on the part of the choir, but we think each can do its share.

Our "Busy Season."

The busiest season of the year for our choir is the months of November and December. Scarcely is St. Clement's Day well out of the way when Christmas is upon us, and the proximity of the two festivals keeps the choir hard at work for several months previous to St. Clement's Day, as the music for that festival and the music for Christmas must both be learned at the same time, since there is not sufficient time after St. Clement's Day to prepare for Christmas.

Importance and Utility of a Repertory.

It is a matter of time (and considerable of it) to build up a good boy choir, and one of the causes of this is the necessity for a fair repertory. Two years ago the library contained scarcely a single piece which the choir really knew well enough to sing. Since that time, however, it has been working incessantly, so that now it has a very fair repertory. This enables it to put months of work upon the learning of a new mass instead of having to bend every energy to mastering some simple service in the shortest possible time in order to avoid repeating the same music Sunday after Sunday, through lack of a sufficient repertory. It marked a great epoch in the history of our Parish when the present choir sang its first foreign mass (Mozart's Seventh); but, since then, its increased repertory has enabled it to give the necessary time to a new mass; so that, this year, we had an elaborate foreign mass upon each of the big festivals referred to in another paragraph.

How We Build.

BY A PLAIN CHOIRMAN.

In our choir work at St. Clement's we build thus: brick by brick and piece by piece. Therefore, given all the conditions, it would be a mere matter of calculation to ascertain when the structure (the choir for which we are striving) will be completed; but, in our case, it is impossible to make any estimate of the kind for the simple reason that the conditions cannot be given. The future may see our Parish either poorer or richer than it is at present; and, as we all stick together, so to speak, the choir will, of course, share whatever prosperity or adversity may be in store for us. In our choir work we have only begun; we are, at present, merely laying the foundation. We do not know whether we shall be enabled to put up a large and elaborate superstructure or whether necessity will confine us to a small and unpretentious one; we cannot say whether we shall continue to build without cessation and interruption, or whether we shall periodically be compelled to suspend operations as we reach points beyond which we cannot go without additional means and materials; we cannot foresee what misfortunes may overtake us; we cannot predict the obstacles and difficulties that may delay us—for obstacles and difficulties can only delay; but what we do know, what we can say, what we are able to foresee, what we may safely predict is that we will go on with our work as long as we can; that we will continue until we can continue no longer; that we will build the foundation upon which we are now at work so thoroughly and so massively that it will safely and triumphantly bear the most elaborate superstructure that the most unexpected means can enable us to place upon it; then, should the last working day find us still engaged upon the foundation, we can throw down our tools with easy consciences; we can fearlessly meet the eye of the Inspector and calmly say: "We have been slower than some. You will find no superstructure to our building but you will find a foundation. You may examine it inch by inch, stone by stone crumb by crumb, and you will discover no flaw or imperfection in it, for not an atom of it was slighted. Our object was not to make haste to the so-called end, but rather to do the work as well as human skill could do it; for we knew that, should we be unable to build the superstructure, it would make no difference in the ultimate result. And, perhaps, O Inspector, it is better, after all, that the foundation should be ours and the superstructure another's, for, though we can plod and drudge, and erect a structure fit to remain forever hidden from the eyes of the world, we are not competent to design and rear an edifice that shall redound to the glory and surpassing genius of the Master Architect for whom we labor."

A PLAIN STORY.

Told in a Plain Way for St. Clement's Choirboys.

BY A PLAIN CHOIRMAN.

Bertie and Willie always sat together at the last desk in the room, where one was kept by his bad behavior and the other by his unfortunate indolence. Mike always sat at the first desk, where he was kept simply by his close attention and constant hard work. He would often say to his friend, Charlie Archer, "I'm sorry, Charlie, but I can't go with you this afternoon. We have such hard lessons for tomorrow that I shall have to go straight home and get at them or I'll never master them. I'll get the play some other time and do the work now. You see, Charlie, I'm not smart, like some of the boys, so I have to make it up by hard work. If I stop working I'll go right to the foot of the class." Charlie was proud of his friend Mike, so he never tried to persuade him to neglect his duties. Besides, he knew it would be of no use. He had often seen a crowd of boys around Mike, begging him and pleading with him to play in a football match against some other school; for Mike was a host in himself. He could kick the ball as swift and as straight as if driven from a cannon, and he played so hard that it seemed as if his team couldn't possibly be beaten. Mike loved to play football; but it was of no use for the boys to beseech. When he had duties to perform, Mike was as firm as a rock. There aren't many boys who have the courage and the self-denial to act in this way, and it was this quality that made his friends love him and his teachers admire him; and, indeed, I myself am firmly convinced that it was this power of putting his whole mind on a thing which made Mike so expert at all sorts of games.

One morning, Bertie rushed up to Willie holding in his hand a slip which he had cut from a newspaper.

"Look here, Will," he cried, "I saw this in the paper this morning."

Willie looked, and read:

WANTED.—Boys, with good voices, to learn to sing in St. John's choir. Apply to the choirmaster at 8 P. M. Good pay to good boys.

"Well," said Willie, when he had finished reading, "what of it?"

"Let's go," said Bertie.

"What for?" asked Willie.

"Fun and money," replied Bertie, briefly. "There's Mike been singing in a choir for two or three years. I guess he gets well paid, for I've often heard people speak of the way he sings. In fact, I know two or three persons who go to church just to hear him. I'd like to have people come to hear me sing. Now, you can sing much louder than Mike, and I can sing higher. We both have better voices than he has, so we ought to get better salaries. Let's go to-night and see this Mr. Choirmaster. Will you?"

"All right," said Willie, "I'll go. Say, Bert, what church does Mike sing in?"

"I don't know; but we'll find out."

When Mike came in, Bertie called out, "Say, Mike, where do you sing?"

"St. John's," answered Mike, briefly, as he hurried to his place and began to unpack his books.

"Same church," whispered Willie to Bertie.

Bertie nodded. Then he winked at his chum and, leaning over, whispered back, "Mike's voice isn't as good as mine, and it won't be very many weeks till I'll be the solo singer of St. John's choir, and the people will come to hear me instead of to hear Mike."

Our thanks are due to the kind friends who took part in the plays Tuesday evening, January 21st. Many difficulties had to be overcome and much time and attention was unselfishly given for our benefit. We desire, too, to thank those who bought tickets, and thus made the entertainment a success.

A Charity Society.

Some steps are being taken toward a revival of charitable work and systematic visiting; partly, it may be, in connection with the dispensary; partly to deal with the many applications for aid that are coming to the clergy, directly or indirectly. All experience shows the necessity for careful investigation in these cases. Often the applicants seem actuated, not so much by a deliberate and malicious desire to defraud as by a foolish notion that if anything is being given away they might as well come in for a portion of it. The best way to discourage this view of the matter is to give only to those who have been actually visited, and, after all possible inquiry, found to be worthy. It would be unfortunate for a parish to get or keep the reputation of being willing to "do something" for almost anybody who was skilful enough to concoct a pitiful story. The organization now being formed will do well if, while it is protective against such an abuse, it meantime strives to reflect and represent the Divine Charity. Spiritual benefit must be reckoned the highest and the ultimate aim. At the same time there is a danger of too close an association of material and spiritual things in the early stages of investigation. Hence, the great service which discreet and devout layfolk can render in a work of this kind in relieving material needs and preparing the way for spiritual ministration. A number have already offered themselves for the work, but the clergy would be glad if more would take an active interest in the new society, and thus lighten this labor.

The Entertainment.

An invitation was sent to me to see a dramatic performance at St. Clement's, and then I was asked to write my opinion of it. To honestly criticise an amateur dramatic performance is rather a delicate matter; some person is sure to feel slighted, but as I am not personally acquainted with any of the persons who took part in it I am entirely impartial.

"A Morning Call" seemed to be a very clever little play. Miss Massey assumed her part exceedingly well, winning applause several times. The school-room is so large and the roof so high that the voice is lost before it reaches the back part of the room. It is necessary to speak loudly and plainly to be understood.

"An Obstinate Family" was action from the first word to the last, and each part showed careful study. Miss Allibone gave a little more attention to the stage business, but aside from that any one part cannot be singled out as best. The play was sprightly, and the humor of it was thoroughly enjoyed by an appreciative audience.

Lent.

Ash Wednesday falls on the 19th day of February. We hope it may be kept as a day of parochial retreat, that a considerable number of people will arrange their affairs so as to be free for spiritual exercises on that day.

Lent, with its self-denial, stricter rule, prayers, worship and opportunities of devotion, means a good deal in our life; it makes the tone or restores it if it has been lost. Each earnest person might profitably decide just what they can and are going to do in the way of self-denial, devotion, resistance to temptation. Let every one be real, thorough, sincere. The ordinary fashionable method is a mockery, of no spiritual profit. More frequent attendance at mass on week days ought to form an important part of each one's rule. During Lent there will be an extra mass each week day at 7.30, frequent instructions and special services. The Sunday night service will be, according to our custom, a mission service, metrical litany and sermon.

The New Catechism.

The subject of the Catechism Instructions during the past month has been The Holy Catholic Church. Next month the subject will be Grace and the Sacraments. A large number of excellent diligences have been received during the month.

Arrangement are being made to open the library in the Sunday-school room. The library will be opened at the Children's Mass and books may be taken out at that time.

Little by little the attendance at the Catechism is increasing. We have now nearly twice as many as we had last fall. But there is still room in the Church for more.

During Lent it is hoped to have a week-day service each week for children, when it is expected that every child will do missionary work and bring other children to Church.

The children are learning Marbeck's setting to the Nicene Creed, in order to sing it at the Children's Mass. This will add greatly to that already beautiful service.

The admonitions recently have been on "Worship," "Private Prayers," "How to Come to Church," "Why we Reverence the Altar," "Proper behaviour at Mass," etc.

PARISH NOTES.

We have been able to have Solemn High Mass and Solemn Even-song each Sunday during the Epiphany season; of course this has added to the service already done by the members of St. Vincent's, but as usual they have been glad and willing to do their duty. The green vestments, we believe, were worn for the first time, although they have been in the possession of the Parish for many years.

The patentee of the gas fixtures in the church has kindly offered to provide a new set of burners, perhaps before this number is in the hands of subscribers we may have seen the improvement. It will be quite a relief to be able to see the words of prayers and hymns on Sunday nights.

Attention is called to the increase of the various funds during the month, as well as the suggestion of a new one, for providing new glass or outside windows.

At the last meeting of the Vestry the Accounting Warden was able to report all bills as well as all salaries paid up to date.

It is expected that Father Huntington, O. H. C., will conduct the retreat for the Outer Sisters of All Saints during Lent; the other retreats will, doubtless, take place at the usual times, though arrangements for them have not yet been completed.

It has several times been stated that people of St. Clement's do not give anything outside the Parish, yet in lists of various institutions we have noticed names of our parishioners who have given quite a large sum of money; probably if all could be traced it would be found that we were not quite as selfish as we are represented.

On Monday evenings for the present, the Clergy will arrange to be at the Clergy House, the purpose being to get acquainted with the men of the congregation. There will be nothing formal, just an opportunity to know each other. We hope in that way to strengthen interest in the Parish and perhaps sometimes to help along and encourage men who may, in a large city like ours, have no friends, and who might be encouraged to persevere by knowing some of their fellows who have the same Christian aim and purpose as themselves.

It is a general impression among people that the Clergy in some way have an indefinite amount of money to give away to whoever may apply. On what it rests one can hardly say; as a matter of fact the amount in this Parish is very small, and is entirely due to the thoughtfulness of a few individuals. Hardly a day passes without the application of several unknown people who demand their share, and who are more or less indignant when they learn there is no money to be had.

Woes Me!

Experience is very valuable, but a man with the widest experience cannot always extract a dollar from the pocket of an unwilling person. Advertising schemes are thicker than bicycles and trolley cars on Chestnut street. Trade, society, news and almost every other kind of paper, magazine and journal, have persons soliciting advertisements. Some have had experience, some have not.

Many of the large stores have an advertising department, the manager of which is usually courteous and gentlemanly, but the proprietors of some stores attend to their own advertising. Beware of these proprietors. The condition of their temper depends very often upon the condition of business. If business is good you may be dismissed with—"We are not doing any advertising just now, but when we do, we will remember you." If this is the first man you ask, you will feel encouraged, and think that soliciting advertisements is not so unpleasant after all. If business is not good you may be dismissed with—"NO! don't bother me! you advertising solicitors are a nuisance." If this is the first man you ask, you will wonder what kind of creatures business men are; where such a man as this could have been raised. Do not permit such discourteous, ungentlemanly and gruff language to frighten you, but say you will call again when the gentleman (?) is not so busy; then bid him good-bye in the politest language at your command.

When you can get a few minutes attention, after explaining the advantages your paper possesses, and, to your mind, making out a clear case that the firm is actually losing money by not advertising, you will probably be greeted with—"We do not advertise in trade, society or religious papers." "Our advertisements are all placed the first of the year." "We are cutting down our advertising bills." A reply like one of these is very apt to make you feel sick of soliciting advertisements, and without saying another word go out the door and slam it behind you. But don't do it; keep your rising temper down. If you can not think of anything pleasant to say, bid good-bye, bearing in mind, though, that you are a gentleman. In course of time you may succeed in receiving an advertisement if you have the moral courage to stick at it long enough.

After you have asked for advertisements from several business men, one fact must have impressed itself upon your mind. A business man's time is valuable; that you are, or can quickly make yourself, more or less of a nuisance. You use his time unasked. Is it not impolite and ungentlemanly then to stand and talk, wasting more time, when you are told in language you cannot misunderstand, that you are not wanted?

"The Choir Boys' Recreation Club."

The Club goes quietly on, that is, as quietly as a recreation club could be expected to go on; the attendance has never been better, and many of the boys are never absent. The Club is now well supplied with games, and lately the boys have been interested in making scrapbooks for the Children's Hospital. Mrs. ——, whose husband is a choir man, kindly sent them some handsome books and a number of pictures; the stock of drawing materials being very low this winter, this occupation has come in well. New Year's Eve was a fifth Tuesday in the month, consequently a banquet night. Twenty-five boys sat down to ice-cream, cakes, snapping bon-bons, and favors, the latter being small flags with "Happy New Year" in gold letters on them, imported from New York expressly for the occasion; also very beautiful, though rather perishable, musical instruments of the same importation, for the Choir Club assistants. Of course, all were duly appreciated.

Next Tuesday there will be "a lemon race," three prizes for the first, second and third best boys who have picked up the greatest number of lemons in a given number of minutes. The prizes will be lemons, but of a different material, and with contents other than seed and pulp.

This sort of entertainment now and then makes a pleasant variety when funds are low and banquets few. All donations from this time are to be saved toward a summer pic-nic on some holiday, and will be gladly received, however small.

Piteous appeals have several times been made by St. Mary's Chapel, Baltimore, for the angels that used to be on the old altar at St. Clements. There seems to be an impression at St. Mary's that they are entitled to all the things for which St. Clements have no further use.

A PLAIN STORY.

Told in a Plain Way for St. Clement's Choirboys.

By A PLAIN CHOIRMAN.

That day, Bertie and Willie got along better than usual with their school work and avoided being detained. They hurried homeward full of their plan for the evening and, before separating, arranged a place and time of meeting. After supper they met as agreed, and started for St. John's, which was quite a long walk from their homes.

"Suppose the choirmaster doesn't take us," said Willie.

"Bosh!" replied Bertie. "Haven't we better voices than Mike?"

"I think so."

"I know so. Then, of course, he'll take us. And you just keep your eye on me, Will. I can't beat Mike at school, but it won't be any trouble for me to get ahead of him in the choir. You know, they say, 'everybody to his trade,' or something like that; and it's just about the same thing in this case. Mike likes school work and I don't; but when it comes to singing, it's different, for I do like that."

"But," suggested Willie, doubtfully, "maybe Mike does, too."

"That makes no difference," answered Bertie, impatiently. "If we both like it, then I can still beat him, for he hasn't half the voice I have," and as Bertie said this and thought of the many times his teachers had complimented him upon his fine voice, he could not help walking a little bit straighter and holding his head a little higher.

"But, Bert," persisted Willie, "you know Mike's an awful worker. There's no let up to him. He never knows when to stop; and if he takes hold of a thing at all, he pegs at it without a second for breath, and gives a fellow no chance to get ahead of him."

Ah, Willie, without knowing it, you have hinted at a great truth; for no one is harder to "beat" than is he who allows "no chance" for another to pass him.

Bertie could not reply to Willie's last remark, for by this time they had reached the church.

Confident as his words had been, Bertie could not help feeling just a little bit nervous and timid as he pulled the bell, and listened to it tinkling somewhere in the distance.

A boy, apparently a year or two younger than Bertie, came to the door.

"We want to see the choirmaster in answer to this advertisement," said Bertie, in a businesslike manner, as he handed the boy the slip of paper.

"Just step this way," replied the boy. "But I'm afraid you're a little late, for we've had over twenty boys here already."

Bertie's heart sank as he heard this, but he marched down the corridor with Willie following close upon his footsteps.

"Let's go back," whispered Willie.

"No," said Bertie, resolutely. "We won't go back. We'll see the thing through," and quickly catching Willie's arm, in order to prevent his escape, Bertie followed his guide down the dimly-lighted hall, vaguely wondering whether the choirmaster would be gruff and disagreeable, or kind and pleasant.

The hall ended in a large, lofty room filled with wooden benches.

"This is our choir-room," whispered Bertie's guide.

At the other end of the room a man sat at a piano; but as his back was turned to the door, the boys could make out only that he was a large man with thick, gray hair.

"That's the choirmaster, and he's my father," whispered the guide. "And that boy is the soloist. I'm the assistant soloist, and father's been teaching us the solos in the new music we're learning for next Easter."

Standing beside the piano, music in hand, listening attentively to some explanation the choirmaster was making, was Mike; and he must have been working in the same absorbed way in which he labored at school, for he did not even look up as the boys entered.

The choirmaster paused in what he was saying and turned his head.

"Two boys who wish to join the choir, sir," said the guide.

"All right, Roger. Just take a seat, boys, and I'll see you in a few minutes. Now, Michael, let us have this once more, remembering what I have just said, and then I think you may go."

"Mike's a queer fellow," said Bertie to Willie, "he hasn't seen us yet. In fact, I don't believe he knows that anybody's here."

"And if he did he wouldn't care," replied Willie. But, listen, Bert! Did you ever hear anything like that before?"

Bertie was listening with all his ears, and looking, too, as hard as he could stare.

Mike was standing as straight as an arrow, oblivious to everything but his music; and the tones—clear, true, and beautiful—were rippling out of his mouth, apparently without an effort.

Bertie was passionately fond of music; and as he listened to this—so different from the songs and hymns sung at school—his eyes glowed and his face flushed.

"Bert, I don't believe you can beat Mike," whispered Willie. "You couldn't sing that."

But Bertie only muttered, "I never heard anything like that. That's music."

"Very good, Mike!" cried the choirmaster, as the boy sang the last note. "Very good!" he repeated, patting him on the back. "But we'll do it much better by Easter. You may go, now."

Mike turned, and for the first time saw Bertie and Willie.

"Halloa, boys!" he said.

"Halloa, Mike!"

"Good night, Mr. Tracy!"

"Good night, Michael!"

Mike and Roger Tracy went out together, and our two friends found themselves alone with the choirmaster.

"Now, boys," he said, "if you will come over here to the piano, I'll see what you can do."

For the first time Bert looked fairly into Mr. Tracy's face, and he noticed that the choirmaster had great, thoughtful eyes which seemed to look through and through one. His gaze appeared to rest not upon one's eyes, but to go further and deeper, down and down, until it had searched out one's very heart; and there it stopped.

"I'll never try to lie to him, for I don't believe a fib would fool him a bit," thought Bertie, with great discretion, as he and Willie walked nervously over to the piano.

St. Vincent's Guild, Anniversary Night.

Wednesday evening, January 22d, will long be remembered by the members of the Guild of St. Vincent, it being the ninth anniversary of the Guild's existence. This was one of the most successful meetings ever held. The members assembled at the clergy house, and at the appointed time proceeded to the supper room. The table was tastefully decorated with candles and flowers, and the combination produced a very pretty effect. The floral decorations and the bouquets worn by the members were red and white, the colors of the Guild. The rector presided with his usual grace, and the other clergy assisted materially in making the evening a most enjoyable one in every respect.

These occasions are always anxiously looked forward to, and the fact that only two members were absent, and they unavoidably, is sufficient to prove that all consider it a pleasant duty to be present. Mr. W. A. Goodwin made quite a long journey rather than be absent. Several hours were quickly spent exchanging reminiscences and witticisms.

The members of the Guild made their annual corporate communion Sunday morning, January 26th.

A Curious Tomb.

At Wimbourne Church, in England, under the southwest window, is the tomb of Anthony Etricke, who, being offended by the people of the Parish, made the rash vow that he would not be buried in their church or churchyard, under the ground or over it. To carry out his vow he obtained leave from the officers of the church to cut a niche in the wall of the church, and there he placed his own coffin, fixing the date he supposed he should die, 1691. He lived, however, until 1703. His wish was carried out, his body placed in an oak coffin, which, being enclosed in the outer prepared case of marble, was built up in the wall so that his body was half under ground, neither inside or out; the date 1691 being in white, the real date was written over it in gold. The outer coffin is brilliantly decorated with the name and coat of arms of the family. Wishing to be remembered by future generations, and to prevent its decay, he gave to the church forever a small sum of money, the interest of which was to be used to keep the niche and coffin in good repair. This sum is paid regularly; the decorations are kept in perfect repair, looking fresh and bright, a relic of eccentricity of two centuries.

While there is nothing to commend in so eccentric a vow, and one made in bad temper, there is something beautiful in the knowledge that a dying request should be so faithfully respected; a small sum of money left in trust so faithfully appropriated year by year for nearly two hundred years; generation after generation executing in a careful and conscientious way a dead man's wish. Who of us who read this magazine may hope to have a request of our Parish so faithfully complied with, or money given for a special purpose, remain undivested for such a length of time?

The Retreat Idea.

Retreat is a soldier's word. It is a military operation. In war a retreat is made either when the army has been defeated and must retire because the force opposed is too great to be met, or else when the army desires to gain time for better organization, and to make new plans of campaign before advancing to the attack.

A retreat is a time for work, for spiritual exercise, for the use of all the faculties of the soul. The defeat must be repaired, the force must be reorganized, or the soul's cause will be forever lost. A retreat is no time for vague, idle, speculative, or merely sentimental emotion. It is a time for concentrated effort. The retreat is an opportunity for self-conquest, for reformation of the soul's disorders, for the reconstruction of one's whole life. Reform! reform! is the motto of a retreat. The extirpation of sin, the freedom from evil passions, the discovery of weak points, the elevation of the whole life to a higher plane, the absolute conformity of self to the Divine will—these are the objects of a retreat.

And this means work, work for each soul by itself, alone, in solitude, in silence, in setting aside the ordinary affairs of life, in much study, in prayer, in meditation, in the contemplation of God, in the imitation of Christ. In order to make a good retreat one must absolutely give up for the time all thoughts of worldly interest and all plans for the future, and one must put oneself alone before God. Self-examination, confession, contemplation and communion constitute the course of a retreat. The soul must be purged, it must be illuminated, it must be united to God. One should emerge from a retreat a new man, with new purpose, with a reformed life—as when our Lord said to the dead man, "Lazarus, come forth."

Lent is the church militant's retreat. It is the opportunity of each Christian. The end of man is God; therefore order the means to the end. Do this work for yourself. No one can do it for you. Too often there is a tendency to think that the success of a retreat depends upon the priest who conducts it, and to feel that unless our whole Lent has been a time of spiritual entertainment and religious enjoyment it has been a failure; but spiritual success depends really upon no one but yourself. God gives you the opportunity of grace, and it is you who must will to respond to it.

Easter Communion—Important.

Cards will be given again this year, and the request made that all communicants who desire to be considered actual communicants of St. Clement's will fill them out and hand them in. A little trouble in this matter will help us to know how many intend to make their Easter communion. The list of actual communicants will be made up after Easter and reported to the convention, but the clergy can hardly report those of whom they know nothing; whether they have made their communions during the year or are lapsed—this has a further bearing, as persons can hardly be transferred as in good standing, unless it is known they have made their communion in the preceding year.

Employment.

If any persons are in need of help, either of women in domestic service, sewing, cleaning, etc., or of men in any capacity, it would be an act of charity to make known their want to some member of the Executive Committee of the Guild of St. Lawrence. A part of relief-work, most needful, and yet most difficult to accomplish, is the furnishing applicants for aid with the means for making their own livelihood.

Sale for Mission Work.

The bi-annual sale for the mission work of St. Clement's Parish will be held in the Sunday-school room, April 14th and 15th.

We would most earnestly call the attention of our parishioners to this notice, as we are quite confident that they do not realize all that is involved in it, for did they do so, such notice would cease to be necessary. If each parishioner, would contribute, according to his or her ability, some definite amount annually toward the support of the mission work of the Parish, we should have sufficient funds in hand to defray the necessary expenses, which, in the present state of things require spasmodic efforts to meet them, and are a source of constant anxiety and struggle to the clergy and the sisters, whose faithful and unremitting labors amongst the poor, certainly deserve fuller recognition and relief.

One who well knows the generous self-denial and self-sacrifice with which every appeal for aid has been met in past days, is convinced that the only reason for any failure in funds to meet this need is due to the fact that the case has never been properly presented to the people of St. Cement's.

The chief burden of the support of the mission work has fallen upon the few, who were most interested in it, but this is unjust to both sides. The whole Parish should have an equal opportunity of sharing in the privilege of giving to our dear Lord in His poorer members, for we are well aware that what we do for His poor, He will count as done for Himself. Such an opportunity is here, and now presented. Every man, woman and child in this Parish owes a debt to God for the infinite blessings they are enjoying through his mercy at this moment. As a Parish, therefore, shall we not unite in showing our sense of this debt, and our appreciation of these blessings by a liberal and generous offering to the cause now specially needing aid. DELLA.

Contributions of any sort, either in money, material or fancy articles marked for the sale may be sent to the following ladies:

Mrs. Walter Penrose, 1721 Walnut st.
Mrs. Clement S. Philips, 421 S. 15th st.
Mrs. Greville E. Fryer,

PARISH NOTES.

The Parochial Retreat, on Ash Wednesday, was very well attended, the chapel was well filled at all the addresses, and many made the retreat with earnest devotion. Two important notes of the spiritual condition of a congregation are surely the reality of devotion and the depth of the spirit of penitence. The first may well show itself in appreciation of spiritual exercises and attendance at the Blessed Sacrament; the second by taking advantage of the Sacrament of Penance.

Father Huntington conducted the retreat for the outer Sisters of All Saints, beginning Monday, February 24th, and ending Friday, February 28th, at the Mission House; there were many who made the retreat. The retreat for members of the Guild of the Holy Cross is being held at the Mission House on this, the second Sunday in Lent.

It is expected that the retreat for St. Vincent's Guild will be as customary on Passion Sunday, March 22d, and for men on Palm Sunday, March 29th; the retreat of St. Mary's Guild on Thursday, in Passion week, March 26th. These opportunities cannot fail to be of profit to those who take advantage of them.

In the February number of Catholic Champion, we note a careful and helpful article on "Ritual for the Congregation," signed by one of our communicants, treating of the ritual acts under three heads: I. Bowing; II. Genuflection; III. Sign of the Cross.

The proceeds of the entertainment amounted to over fifty dollars, which has been used in paying the deficiency in the MAGAZINE account.

No additions to the various special funds can be reported this month. We look for a substantial increase, however, in the Easter offertory; last year we had about $1,800, this year we hope it may be more. We look for a very favorable showing of our financial condition in the annual report of the Accounting Warden; it only means that we have a good deal of work ahead of us.

The appeal of the Committee on the Sale for the Poor Fund and Mission House Fund ought to meet with a generous response. It is very true that most of the people do not know of the activities of the Sisters' work; the very presence of a religious house is a blessing; it is a witness to the higher life to which all are called in their various vocations; it is also a center of useful work. The winter has been a hard and trying one, and if it had not been for a generous and unexpected donation of a friend and well-wisher of the Parish we should hardly have been in a position to meet the demands.

The Guilds are going along in their quiet accustomed ways, their weekly meetings and monthly offices. Cold and storm have interfered somewhat with attendance, just as it has with the numbers at services.

The Church of the Epiphany is still without a location. Permission was asked of us to establish the work at Seventeenth and Summer, and we were glad to comply with the request; but we understand from the daily papers that the plan has failed, owing to the refusal of the rector and vestry of another Parish. Some one is to blame for the sad and cruel experience of this old city Parish.

We call the attention of communicants to the hours of mass on week days; it ought to be part of the Lenten rule of each one to be present, at least, once during the week.

On Candlemas some candles were blessed, and any person wishing to obtain some may purchase them at the Mission House, 2026 Cherry street, the proceeds go to the Poor Fund.

Although the date of the Bishop's visitation has not yet been decided upon, still the clergy would be glad to have the names of those who are looking forward to confirmation.

The ninth annual meeting of the Guild of St. Vincent was held on Wednesday evening, February 5th. Mr. I. Ernest Linton was reëlected Warden, and Mr. J. C. Goodwin, Jr., was reëlected Secretary and Treasurer for the ensuing year. The members of the Guild reported during the past year 1,797 times for services besides for a good deal of other work which they were given to do.

The Hospital.

Pennsylvania Epileptic Hospital, formerly Hospital and Dispensary of St. Clement's Church. So runs the notice for the adjourned meeting of the contributors to receive the annual report and to elect a Board of Managers to serve during the ensuing year. In other words, our future privileges depend on what we choose to do. We are in the same position as others who may be interested. We have given up everything except the work and self-denial freely, generously and constantly given by the members of this congregation in the past.

It is to be expected now that all these many people whose excuse for not giving in the past has been the connection of this Parish with the charity will promptly and generously provide the necessary funds for carrying it on, furnishing ample endowments, making up for their neglect of duty and to show their future interest.

The Guild of St. Lawrence.

This society has now been in active operation since about the date of our last issue. Its object is to organize the charity work of the Parish. Whether the visiting, which was formerly carried on with such zeal in connection with the dispensary, can be continued with profit to all interested, is a question which the future must solve. The conditions of the work are somewhat changed, and the sphere of labor apparently narrowed. But it is a satisfaction to know that we stand ready to do what the circumstances hereafter may show to be possible. The visiting of other cases, the ordinary applicant for aid, has been prosecuted faithfully and systematically during the month.

In some cases relief has been given where it was certain that the society's beneficence was not misplaced. In others it was necessary to move with greater caution; while in still a third and larger class the first fruits of investigation showed unmistakably the marks of fraud and unworthiness. Fortunately the workers have had such long experience that these evidences of human frailty do not dishearten them, and the one worthy case that is found among a dozen is sufficient reward for the labor spent in seeking for persons whose addresses or whose claims upon the society's bounty have been false.

The Guild aims to avail itself of all the aid that can be gotten from other societies in the city, in the way of information, and, to some extent, in the way of material relief, where it is well understood that such action is in accord with the objects of those organizations. But in most cases the society looks to its own or parochial resources for means to help its beneficiaries, and for this purpose funds are needed and will be gratefully received from any who may wish to give. Such persons may be reasonably assured that their gifts will be distributed with conscientious care and in the spirit of Christian charity. Donations of clothing are also most acceptable. The Secretary of the Guild is Mrs. Lytle; Treasurer, Miss Heylin; Auditor, Mr. William Hult; Executive Committee, Mrs. Grubb, Miss Heylin, Mrs Lytle, Miss Katharine Smith, Mrs Taylor, Miss Emma Thomson, Mrs. VanLear, and the Chaplain. Application for relief should be made to a member of the Executive Committee or to any of the visitors.

Photographs of some of the vestments belonging to the church have been taken, and will be sold for the benefit of St. Vincent's Guild.

I want a little casket,
With hasp, and lock, and key,
To hide a little treasure
That's very dear to me.

My sweetest sin's the idol
I seek to put away,
But I will not resign it
Forever and for aye.

I want it kept securely—
I'm quasi-penitent,
And I'll be very likely
To claim it—after Lent.

SUSIE M. BEST, in Judge.

The Catechism.

A children's service is held in the chapel every Friday afternoon, in Lent, at 4 o'clock. The story of the Passion is sung at it, and the children are instructed in the sufferings of Our Saviour. Both the children of the catechism and those of the infant school attend.

The head catechist has added to the admonitions every Sunday afternoon a short instruction on the ornaments of the church and on the vestments of the clergy. A stole, an amice, a chasuble, or a thurible is produced, and its name, use and significance are explained and learned. Instructions on ceremonial will follow.

Any child who can bring a new scholar to the children's mass, the catechism and the Friday afternoon services, during Lent, will receive a medal at Easter.

Plans for the Easter fête are already being made. Only those who attend regularly and do well while present will be chosen to take part.

The girls write more diligences than the boys. Why?

The attendance at the children's mass is better than ever before. The new music adds greatly to the service.

Books are desired for the library. Will all members of the Parish who have children's books in fair condition, but no longer read at home, please give them to the head catechist for the Library? Bound volumes of children's magazines are particularly desired, but all kinds of books will be welcome. The present library is worn out.

There have been several new children added to the catechism lately. But if parents did their duty there would be many more. The parent who neglects to have a child instructed in religion will reap the fruit of sorrow hereafter. It is a sin.

Note.

Choir cottas are badly needed, and a number are cut out in the choir room only waiting to be made. Are there not ladies in the Parish who would be glad to make one or more during lent? They can be had in the choir room after services on Sunday or on Saturday afternoons.

Music on Palm Sunday and Easter.

The men of the choir are now hard at work on Gounod's Orpheonistes Mass. This is written for men's voices only (the boys taking no part), and the present intention is to render it upon Palm Sunday with an augmented force of men. Nothing of this nature has been heard in St. Clement's for many years, and it will no doubt be not only a great pleasure to our parishoners to hear this Mass sung, but also a source of legitimate satisfaction and justifiable pride to reflect that it is being rendered in our church, by our choir.

On the following Sunday (Easter) the choir will render Schubert's Mass in G, with the full orchestral accompaniment. On Easter night the music will include Stainer's elaborate Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in Bb, and Tour's Te Deum in F.

Tour's Mass in F, will, probably, be sung (for the first time by our present choir) shortly after Easter, as it is also now in preparation.

A Choir Concert.

From the preceding paragraph, which indicates only a portion of what is being done, it can readily be surmised that the members of the choir are as busy as a family of the proverbial beavers, yet we hear some talk of another choir concert, and as we have always found that, when the choir talks, there is "something in it," we are in high hopes that we shall this year have the pleasure of listening to a concert similar to that which created such a sensation last year.

A PLAIN STORY.

Told in a Plain Way for St. Clement's Choirboys.

BY A PLAIN CHOIRMAN.

It did not take long to try their voices; and when the two boys left the church, five minutes later, their names were on Mr. Tracy's roll-book and they were members of St. John's Choir.

Bertie and Willie at once became popular with the boys, and soon found choir life very attractive, probably because there was so much variety to it, for it is strange with what ingenuity thirty or forty boys will relieve the monotony of life—the monotony not only of their own lives but of others; though the "others," if consulted, might in some cases be found to prefer the monotony.

Though they liked choir life, Bertie and Willie did not succeed in shaking off the unfortunate traits that distinguished each, for in the choir Willie was just as well behaved and just as lazy as he was at school, and never opened his mouth to sing a note unless absolutely driven to it by finding those great eyes of the choirmaster upon him; while Bertie, though he worked as hard as Mike, and seemed to love his work, misbehaved a great deal, and was constantly causing some disturbance or trouble among the boys, either during the rehearsals or before and after.

"It is too bad, too bad!" muttered Mr. Tracy to himself one evening when Bertie had been particularly mischievous. "It's a great shame that those two boys, who have been given such good voices and so much musical talent, should simply waste their ability and fritter it away in this careless, indifferent fashion."

When the last piece of music had been practiced, he said to the choirboys:

"Boys, there is something to which I wish to call your attention before dismissing you to-night; something which is of great importance to every boy who wants to make anything of himself, or desires to grow up a useful and admirable man; something which I hope all you boys will think about and practice; for, when a boy gets to be thirteen ar fourteen years old, he is no longer a baby, and he ought then to be able to think a little bit, and should remember that in a few more years he will be what is called a man, and will be expected to act and live like a man. There are some boys here who are merely 'half-choirboys.' You know it takes two halves to make a whole, and the two halves which make a 'whole-choirboy' are work and behavior. Boys who work but misbehave, or who behave but do not work, are merely 'half-choirboys.' Those who neither behave nor work are nothing at all, and have no business in the choir, for we are not here to be idle or to misbehave. And I should like to say," he went on, fixing those eyes of his on Bertie, "that no boy, no matter what his ability, no matter how marvelous his voice, can ever be a soloist for me unless he is a 'whole-choirboy,' for my soloists must be not only musicians, but also thoroughly reliable persons, upon whom I can absolutely depend; and boys of that kind will never be able to say truthfully that they cannot get along in the choir, or that there is no chance for them to work up to important positions. And—"

"I don't know about that," muttered Bertie, giving the boy next him a sly, almost imperceptible poke in the ribs to emphasize his remark.

The words had just come into his head. He thought it a rather witty thing to say, and did not stop to consider that it was very insolent and impertinent; so, with his face turned attentively toward Mr. Tracy, whose eyes were not at the moment upon him, he passed the whisper to his neighbor. No one could hear it, thought he, but the boy beside him, and even were it overheard, it would be impossible for any one to say what boy, out of thirty or so, had spoken.

Yet there came an ominous pause in the choirmaster's words. There stole over the boys a silence that was absolute; while into the heart of each there crept the feeling that "something was going to happen."

Something did happen.

"Bertie Brown, you may go home!"

The choirmaster's voice came in the same calm, even tones from which no boy had ever heard him vary.

It was the first time in many months that a boy had been ordered from the room, and with a manner full of nervous awkwardness and a heart bursting with wrath and bitterness, Bertie took his coat and hat and tried to walk proudly and indifferently out of the door, with an ill assumed smile of disdain upon his face.

Then the choirmaster's quiet voice proceeded precisely from where he had stopped.

"And, boys, most of you have parents; some of you have also sisters; a few of you have only mothers; and I presume that there are among you those upon whom mothers will some day have to depend for support; those who will have to provide for the parents who are now striving to give you an education and to make men of you, in order that you may be better able to fight your way in the world. Now, it seems to me that the disappointment of those parents will be great; the sorrow of those sisters profound; the grief of those mothers indescribable, if those for whom they are working so hard, to whom they expect to look up to so fondly, upon whom they hope to lean so trustingly, turn out idle, vicious or shiftless. If a thing is worth doing at all, it is worth doing well; and the boy who is earnest and honest in his work will, in all probability, grow into an earnest, honest man, who will be a pride to his friends and a comfort to those who love him. That is all I have to say," concluded Mr. Tracy, when he had made this long speech, "but I sincerely hope that some of you boys will not forget it, for it is much more important than you can now understand."

There was one pair of eyes that had never swerved from the choirmaster's face during his remarks; one pair of ears that had eagerly drunk in every word he had uttered; and Mr. Tracy noticed the look of thought and care, almost of pain, upon Mike's face as the boy said soberly:

"Good-night, Mr. Tracy."

"There is a good deal in that lad which does not appear upon the surface," muttered the choirmaster as he closed the piano, "and I shall keep my eye upon him."

Had Mr. Tracy suspected what was occurring in the street, a short distance from the Church, some ten or fifteen minutes after the boys had been dismissed; could he have heard the loud, excited tones; could he have witnessed the flushed and angry faces; could he have seen the fierce, threatening gestures, perhaps he would not have turned out the lights so leisurely; perhaps he would not have passed out of the back door so indifferently; and perhaps he would not have walked so slowly homeward, with that absent manner and thoughtful look.

Scrupulosity.

IN MORAL THEOLOGY a person is said to be scrupulous who, for a vain and empty cause, doubts constantly the honesty of actions, and falsely judges things to be sins which are not sins. The word comes from a Latin noun, which means "a small, sharp stone;" and since all Christians are pilgrims and strangers, the idea is that these scruples get into the shoes and hurt the feet of those who would make spiritual progress.

Scrupulosity may be caused by divine permission as a lesson and a punishment, in order to make men return more truly to God. Or it may be a temptation of the devil, who seeks to bring the soul into dejection and despair. Often it is the cross of a melancholy and suspicious temperament, and of a natural propensity to dejection and to fear. Sometimes it arises from too great care in avoiding the appearance of sin through a selfish regard for one's welfare. Or it may be the effect of unwise spiritual reading and the unnecessary, incautious and unintelligent effort to follow a severe asceticism in a fastidious flight from human conversation.

There is, of course, a true scrupulosity which it would be well for some to cultivate; but the false scrupulosity, which is sin, may be distinguished from the true by many signs. Pertinacity of judgment is the first sign by which the person refuses to follow the counsels of his confessor; but while consulting many directors, obeys none, and so becomes generally confused. Or again, a frequent change of judgment from light motives is a sign of scrupulosity, showing inconstancy in work, and a continually disturbed mind. Or, a fearfulness of sinning in all things joined to doubts about the judgment of one's director, or of one's self even, shows scrupulosity by frequent questioning. Unnecessary reflections about the circumstances which were or might have been connected with some action, the anxiety to have complete certitude when that is impossible, an obstinacy in regarding as sin what is not so, and a continual anxiety about past confessions, in spite of the fact that they were good ones—these things indicate scrupulosity. But he should not be called scrupulous who is moderately solicitous, lest he should offend God; nor he, who, after a life of sin, is not satisfied merely by confession, but desires to make a fuller expiation; nor he, who, after a deliberate and serious sin, is anxious about the fulness of his confession. One is sometimes scrupulous, too, about one thing and not about others.

Serious spiritual and even physical injury results from scrupulosity. The health is often permanently affected by the wrong and anxiety, and the nerves and blood become debilitated. Scrupulous people are often disagreeable and sour toward those around them. Moreover, the will is so disturbed by trifles and phantasms that it does not obey divine injunctions. The mind given up to foolish anxieties no longer enjoys prayer. The virtue of fortitude is destroyed; and finally, with the failure of hope, all faith may be forfeited, and the soul eternally lost.

Therefore, one who is scrupulous, should remember that "absolute" certainty in all moral questions must not be sought, and by such, obedience and greater humility and faith in all things must be cultivated. Foolish doubts must be crushed; and, in general, the virtues of hope and common sense must be acquired. —From Gury.

PHILADELPHIA, APRIL, 1896.

The Sinking Fund.

The treasurer of this fund informs us that he has received, since March 1st, 1895, $1,799.95, and that the fund amounts to $2,526.69.

The dedication of Father Maturin's book may revive interest in a matter that was very near to him, the payment of the church debt; while he was here pledges were made which, if they had been paid, would have cleared off the whole of it; but, sad to say, some promised, but never kept to their promise; it is a serious thing to fail in such a pledge, is it not sacrilege? We do not question the conscientious actions of these persons. In some cases the inability was the result of changed circumstances, they could not afford to do it. In others it seems to have been a shirking of a just debt, and that one owed to God; it is still due; they may feel justified, but it is the result of a wrong idea of moral obligations; there is such a thing as a perverted conscience. We might suggest to all in default and who have money to pay, a meditation on Mal. iii, 8, etc.

This leads, naturally, to the consideration of another point: the position of St. Clement's in this city and country; the battle has many times been fought here for privileges that are now freely enjoyed by parishes which led or assisted in the assault on St. Clement's.

The bitterness of those old contests, in many instances, still survives, the hostile temper still remains and shows itself when opportunity offers. We must remember that the Parish has its work to carry on, a witness to God, His Church, His Truth; shall we permit it to fail? The ground rent and mortgage are a burden.

Strange that of the many who have received all that is of value to their soul's life here, few, if any, have remembered the Parish in their wills!

Easter Day.

Members of the congregation only will be admitted at the Cherry street door until 10.15, when all doors will be open to the public. Admission to the gallery will be by card.

Easter Communion.

1. And because it is requisite that no man should come to the Holy Communion but with a full trust in God's Mercy, and with a quiet conscience; therefore, if there be any of you, who by this means cannot quiet his own conscience herein, but requireth further comfort or counsel, let him come to me, or to some other discreet and learned minister of God's Word and open his grief; that by the ministry of God's Holy Word he may receive the benefit of absolution, together with ghostly counsel and advice, to the quieting of his conscience, and avoiding of all scruple and doubtfulness.—English Prayer Book.

2. Every parishioner shall communicate, at the least three times in the year, of which Easter is to be one.—English Prayer Book.

3. This Church is far from intending to depart from the Church of England in any essential point of doctrine, discipline or worship; or further than local circumstances require.—American Prayer Book.

1. Moral sin requires sacramental confession and absolution to quiet conscience and avoid all scruple and doubtfulness.

2. Easter Communion is obligatory upon conscience; can a communicant be in good standing who neglects or disobeys?

3. Our duty is privilege is the same as in other parts of the Catholic Church.

Envelopes have been sent to all who used them during the past year. The new issue has been dated, as well as numbered, and we hope this may enable people to use the system with less trouble. We ought to have many new subscribers; alms giving definite, regular and liberal, is a part of God's religion, one of the three notable duties of the Christian life. Those in arrears with their pledges are asked to pay the amount owed.

The Parish Retreat, on Ash Wednesday, was very well attended. The Retreat for Holy Cross Guild, on the first Sunday in Lent, began on Saturday night with an opening address; a special mass was said for those in Retreat in St. John's Chapel on Sunday morning, but the meditations were all given in the Sisters' Chapel as usual; there was a good attendance.

PARISH NOTES.

Pew rents are due April 1st.

Be sure to attend mass each day during Holy Week.

The election of Vestrymen will be held on Easter Monday.

Photographs of the vestments may be obtained from the Sacristan, either single or a set.

Give an offering for Church expenses, also a special one either for Sinking Fund or Repairs.

We hope that Father Sargent may be able to preach "The Passion" for us on Good Friday.

Let every one prepare themselves for the fulfilment of their Easter duties, penitence, confession, communion.

The hours of the Clergy for hearing confessions during Holy Week may be found on the notice boards in the corridor.

Father Field was with us in the early part of the month on his way to give a mission; he gave the address at the Mothers' meeting.

The Church of the Epiphany is holding services in the Baptist Tabernacle, Chestnut above Eighteenth street; we hope this may be an evidence of the end of a very awkward muddle.

As we look back on this Lent we feel that a most earnest spirit and devotion has been evident among many of the people, the attendance at the different services has been satisfactory from Ash Wednesday to the present time.

The Lent conferences for men have not been largely attended, and yet we think that it has been an effort in the right direction. In a work like ours we realize how difficult it is for people to come on week days, living as they do at great distances.

The clergy hope that after Easter more men may take advantage of Monday nights and come to the Clergy House, and feel at liberty to bring any friends, it will afford an opportunity of better acquaintance, or of asking questions on various subjects.

All communicants who have not already done so are asked to fill out the Easter cards and send them in, that we may make up our list accurately for the Diocesan Convention, and that we may know who are intending to make their Easter communion and at what hour.

The Mothers' Retreat took place on Thursday last, March 26th. The Retreat for St. Vincent's Guild on Passion Sunday; the Men's Retreat is being held on this Palm Sunday. Such spiritual opportunities availed of aught to be of much gain and benefit to the life of God's children, to deepen their penitence and love, and help them to make a good Easter communion.

The Bishop of the Diocese has appointed "the evening of Wednesday, May 27th, for confirmation at St. Clement's." This is in the octave of Whitsunday. Public instructions will be given after Easter and classes will be formed. Those intending to take advantage of this opportunity are asked to give their names and addresses; the Prayer Book places a measure of responsibility upon parents and sponsors to see that the baptized are brought to confirmation.

We learn from the daily papers that the Philadelphia Epileptic Hospital (formerly St. Clement's) has elected an almost entirely new Board of Managers; the Rector and Warden of St. Clement's, who were formerly ex-officio members, we believe, are not on the new board; from the same source we learn that proposals for a merger with another corporation, organized to establish a colony farm, are before the courts. Quite a sum of money is reported to be promised for the buildings. Whatever may be the issue of this movement the credit will belong to St. Clement's; it was the enterprise and zeal and public spirit of our people that organized the hospital and carried it on. The buildings were bought and the money for endowments obtained by members of this congregation or friends whom they interested.

In the Churchman of February 29th is a reproduction of an article in the Musical News, of London, giving the experience of an organist, who signs himself F. R. C. O., Philadelphia. The organist criticises the church organ very severely, and although no church is named, the writer in the Churchman suggests St. Clement's. We are rather surprised that the Churchman should have considered it well, wise or expedient to reprint the latter part of the article, as it seems an ugly and bitter attack on our Parish; and to reprint it without note or comment appears uncalled for and ungenerous, and might be understood by many to be a justification of it, vouching for the truth and justice of it, especially as the attack on the organ builder is resented.

Sale of Work for the Benefit of the Mission Work of St. Clement's Church,

Will be held, D. V., in the Parish Building, Tuesday and Wednesday, April 14th and 15th, from 3 to 10 P. M.

An entertainment will be given each night.

Single tickets, 25 cents; Season tickets, 40 cents. May be obtained from the Committee, the Sexton of St. Clement's Church, or at the Mission House, 2034 Cherry street. Children half price.

We wish that some plan might be suggested by which the mortgage on 2036 Cherry street, which is used as our Mission House, might be paid or reduced, it would be a worthy object for some of our rich fellow-citizens. The Sisters are now responsible for raising the money to pay the interest, taxes and water rent.

The law of the State taxes this property, although used for charitable purposes, and by people who give their services freely and cheerfully, while it exempts other charities, the managers of which are paid good salaries and the corporations well endowed. It is one of the cases in which our laws, in trying to be impartial, are extremely unjust; it is one of the curiosities of the present attitude of some of our laws, that with State funds they practically encourage irreligion and endow unbelief.

The whole idea of unsectarian or nonsectarian institutions is a sham and flagrant injustice to religious and God-fearing people, who are just as apt to be good citizens as agnostics or humanitarians.

Lantern Services.

Instead of the usual chapel service on Thursday nights for the Mothers' Meeting, for the last three Thursdays a service has been held in the Sunday-school room. For aid to devotion in studying some scenes from the life of our Lord, pictures were thrown upon a screen by means of a lantern; scriptural passages suited to the subjects represented were read, and historical and other explanations given. Hymns were sung, and Collects, Creed and Magnificat helped to make it, as it was intended to be, not a mere entertainment, but a service directed to the glory of God and the edification of souls. For the use of the lantern, as well as of the very beautiful slides, we are indebted to the kindness of clerical friends, while Mr. H. Clay Borden gave invaluable assistance in the expert management of the lantern.

District Visiting.

The Guild of St. Lawrence has instituted a plan for district visiting. The section of the city in which St. Clement's is situated has been divided into fifteen or more wards or districts, and several of these have been already assigned to volunteer workers. Methods, within certain limits, are left to the individual visitor; but the aim in general is to reach by Christian ministration and influence any souls in the various districts that may be accessible. Its efficiency will depend largely upon the tact and perseverance of the workers. Merely routine, or statistical, or mechanical labor counts for little in winning souls, yet there must be system, and there must be untiring persistency. Here, then, is a field for mission work of the most real sort. Only a small number of districts are thus far occupied. May we not have a number of active volunteers? As the latitude in methods is so great, and as no special time limit is placed, this request may appeal to some who could not undertake routine work to be done within a specified period.

The Vestments of the Sacred Ministers in Penitential Seasons.

The dalmatica and tunicle being vestments of joy, are considered inappropriate for penitential times, as Advent and Lent. During these seasons (except on the Third Sunday in Advent and the Fourth Sunday in Lent) the Deacon and Sub-Deacon assist at Solemn High Mass in chasubles. In churches not provided with a sufficient number of chasubles, the Deacon and Sub-Deacon should assist in albis. On the Third Sunday in Advent and on the Fourth Sunday in Lent the vestments of the sacred ministers should be of peculiar richness. At Rome and elsewhere rose-colored dalmaticas and tunicles are worn on these Sundays. When the Deacon and Sub-Deacon wear chasubles they should be folded up and worn over the left shoulder, after the manner of the Deacon's stole, in order that they may have the free use of their arms and hands, and be able to perform their functions with greater ease. I. E. L.

Advice as to Confession.

"If you note down your self-examination every night, these should be summarized for confession. You should not repeat the sins of each day separately in your confession."

"A habit of introspection or self-analysis must be guarded against. A good proportion of the time of preparation ought to be given to the deepening of contrition."

"Do not be discouraged if you find that your confessions seem to be always a repetition of the same sins time after time. It may be so, and yet there may be real progress. It is encouraging to consider that many of the sins, which form the matter of confessions now, are not, so to speak, new sins, but the remains of old habits formed, it may be, years ago. Those habits cling on though there is often very little deliberate yielding of the will to them; the irritability, pride, self-consciousness, feelings of jealousy, which seem to spring forth before you are aware of them, are the remains of past sin and now form much of our penance and discipline."

"Those who go to confession regularly will, at an ordinary confession need very little advice if any. They should not expect the Priest to comment upon the matter of their confessions or to be obliged to ask them questions; nor should they suppose that if he does not call attention to, or administer rebuke for any special sin confessed, it is not because he thinks less seriously of it, but rather because he would, as far as possible, leave the penitent to the rebuke of his own conscience."—Father Maturin, in "Confession and Absolution."

The Choir Concert.

The choir has definitely decided to have a concert this year, and it will, probably, be given during the latter half of the month of May. The object of these choir concerts is to provide funds for the maintenance of the Choirboys' Recreation Club. The net receipts or profits of the last concert were comparatively small, owing to the heavy expense caused by the determination of the choir to give a concert that would fully realize the hopes and anticipations of its many warm friends, even if not a dollar was made. It looked for some time as if not a dollar would be made, but when the accounts were settled it was found that the profits were something like $30. With economy this sum was made to cover quite a long period in the expenses of the club, but the money was long ago exhausted, and since then the club has been in a very impecunious condition. From the inquiries received, it is presumed that the choir concerts are "popular," and as the choir is just as determined this year as it was last, to give its friends a pleasant and profitable evening, it is to be hoped that the sale of tickets will be large enough to yield a sufficient return to put the Recreation Club in good financial condition.

A PLAIN STORY.

Told in a Plain Way for St. Clement's Choirboys.

BY A PLAIN CHOIRMAN.

Nursing his bitter and angry feelings, Bertie waited in the street for the boys to be dismissed. For two reasons he did not care to go home. In the first place, he was boiling with indignation, and wanted to relieve himself and vent his wrath upon something or somebody; and, in the second place, he feared that if he went home so early questions would be asked and his misconduct and disgrace discovered. As is generally the case when one is in a passion, the longer he brooded over the matter the more mortified and angry he became.

"I didn't do anything," he muttered, as he paced slowly and moodily up and down the pavement. "It wasn't any crime to whisper a good joke to another boy while old Tracy was making one of his infernal speeches. He might have known I was only joking when I said that. If it comes to that, though," he went on bitterly, "what I said was really true. What show is there in this choir for a fellow with a good voice like mine! Tracy won't give me any chance."

Of Mr. Tracy's remarks, Bertie seemed to remember only those parts that irritated and angered him, and to forget those portions by which he might have profited. He had, evidently, forgotten what Mr. Tracy had said about the necessity of solo boys being reliable and well behaved.

"I don't see," he continued, "why everybody looks upon that fellow Mike as such a model. He's no better than any one else. He's not half as smart as some fellows I know, and he hasn't the voice I have. Yet in school he's always at the head, and the teachers think there's no one like Mike, and in the choir it's the same thing. Old Tracy wouldn't send him from the room. Oh, no! Of course not."

Just then a wretched looking vagabond dog slouched slowly and stealthily past on the opposite side of the street, casting furtive glances about him in that restless, hunted manner so painful to witness in man or beast. Miserable creatures of this kind, whether human or brute, slink through life in fear and trembling, dreading that each corner turned will discover malicious enemies lying in wait to take cruel and cowardly advantage of their wretchedness in order to torment and torture them. And who shall say that these fears are groundless?

Bertie's eye fell upon the unoffending animal across the way as it passed under the street lamp. He stooped quickly and picked up a stone that lay at his feet. Seeing the motion, and regarding all men as enemies, the dog increased his pace and limped along as rapidly as possible. But Bertie was a quick and accurate marksman. The missile sped swift and true and fell with a dull thump upon the creature's side, almost lifting it for an instant off the feet that were at best none too strong to support the wretched body. With a faint cry of agony the animal passed out of the circle of light shed by the lamp and vanished in the gloom beyond. Bertie was again alone.

"I wish that had been Mike," he muttered savagely. "I hate that fellow, and I'll make it warm for—"

But, just here, the boys came trooping out of the door, and Bertie's soliloquy was brought to an abrupt termination.

"Oh, here he is," cried one of the boys as he spied Bertie. "Ah, ha! You will fool with Tracy, will you?"

Bertie gave the speaker a fierce look, but vouchsafed no reply.

"He has sharp ears," said Willie Smith. "I didn't think he could hear what you said."

Still, Bertie said nothing. The remarks annoyed him, and though Willie had spoken consolingly, his words had served only to increase Bertie's irritation and anger.

"Halloa, Bert!" cried Mike, who came out of the door at that moment. "It's too bad that you should have gotten into this trouble. Whatever possessed you to—"

At last Bertie spoke.

"Stop!" he burst out furiously. "I won't take a word from you, Mike Jones. It's all your fault that it happened."

"My fault? Why, I—I—I don't understand," stammered Mike in astonishment.

"Oh, you don't? Well, why do you sit there and sing all evening without once laughing or talking or turning around? What do you do that for, eh? Why, just to get the rest of us into trouble, don't you? And when Tracy gives the boys a lecture, why do you sit there with your mouth and eyes wide open, taking it all in as if it was so much gospel? You're the only fellow that pays any attention, and he knows it; and if he couldn't get any one's attention he'd soon get tired of blowing us up, and wouldn't expect so much of us. If it hadn't been for you he wouldn't have given us that scolding, and if we hadn't got that I wouldn't have been sent out. So there!"

Mike knew that he had paid very close attention to what Mr. Tracy had said, for it had interested him, and he had determined to profit by the advice, still he couldn't quite understand how he was responsible either for the "lecture," or for anything else that had happened. Some of the more turbulent and mischievous spirits, however, apparently sided with Bertie. They accepted his view of the matter, because it in a measure excused their own misconduct and laid the blame upon Mike.

"That's so," cried one. "I never thought of it that way. I believe Mike's afraid of Tracy, or else he wants to stand in with him and pretend that he's better than the rest of us. That's what I call sneaking."

"I think you're very unfair," said Mike. "You know that what you say is not true, and that I don't wish to get any one into trouble."

"Oh, we're all liars, are we? stormed Bertie, advancing threateningly toward Mike, and using the word "we" in order to arouse the resentment of the other boys and array them against Mike. He felt bolder now that he knew he had some support. "Well," he went on in a contemptuous tone that stung Mike like a lash, "we all know that you're the meanest fellow in the choir. You live further away than any one else and get more pay, and yet you'd walk to and from home if it rained pitchforks."

"So he does," cried Willie Smith. "That's a fact, and I call that stingy and miserly."

By this time Mike was beginning to feel irritated and provoked at the taunts and unjust remarks of the boys, but he managed to keep his temper within bounds.

"If I don't ride it's for good reasons," he retorted warmly; "and I don't think it's anybody's business but my own."

"Oh, that means we're to mind our own business, I suppose," replied Bertie. "Well, I think that's impudent. And, as to your reasons, we've told you that we know what they are. It's simply that you're too mean to spend a car fare. I should think," he continued tauntingly, "that mamma would make Mikey ride in wet weather for fear he'd get his feet damp; but," he added recklessly, "I suppose she's as mean as you are."

This was a cruel and uncalled-for taunt. Roger Tracy, though one of the most peaceable boys in the choir, could endure it no longer.

"Thrash him, Mike," he cried hotly to his friend, as he pushed his way through the crowd of boys to where Mike was standing.

But, even as Roger spoke, Mike sprang forward, his eyes blazing, his form quivering with passion, his breath coming in short gasps.

That any one should dare to speak of her in this contemptuous, insulting fashion! It was more than he could stand, more than he would stand. He wouldn't take it. He would resent the insult. He would make Bertie pay dearly for his gibes and jeers.

He planted himself before Bertie.

He felt the blood surging through his veins like molten metal, and seemed to himself to be possessed of the strength of a giant.

"Bertie Brown," he said, and the words came through his clinched teeth slowly and with difficulty, as he glared into Bertie's startled face, "I'm going to give you the worst thrashing you ever had."

"Go for him, Bert!" cried Willie Smith, encouragingly.

But Bertie didn't seem particularly anxious to "go."

"He says he'll thrash me," thought Bertie, "and I know he'll do it if he can. He's such a terrible fellow, too, for sticking at a thing that once he makes up his mind to fight, he'll keep it up as long as he can move a foot or raise a hand."

None of the boys had ever before seen Mike in a rage. In fact, he was usually such a mild, easy, good-natured fellow that they would not have believed it possible for him to lose his temper. Consequently they were scarcely less startled than Bertie at the sudden, uncontrollable passion that mastered him, and the wild light that gleamed from his flashing eyes.

Very often the mildest mannered persons are the fiercest and most terrible when aroused, possibly because they usually have some degree of cause for indignation; but, more likely, because they endure so much before their passion overcomes them that the storm, when it does break forth, is sweeping and devastating, just as a fire that has been slowly, insiduously and invisibly gathering strength and force bursts upon the gaze of the startled spectator with sudden and unexpected fury, rushing on with wild and irresistible leaps and reaching out with death and destruction in its grasp.

"Now," said Mike, in the slow, passionate tones that made Bertie quake in spite of himself, "I'm going to begin, and when you say you're ready to apologize, I'll stop."

"Oh, dear!" thought Bertie, for he felt like a whipped boy already. "I wish I hadn't —."

But he had no time for further thought, for Mike was before him with set, determined face; fierce, angry eyes; clinched hands, and arm uplifted to strike.

Mother Harriet.

On the afternoon of Easter Day at St. Gabriel's Convent, Peekskill, passed out of this world the soul of this saintly and wonderful woman, foundress of the Sister's of Saint Mary; the burial took place on the following Thursday. God gave her the grace to respond to her vocation and to develop the spirit and rule of the community which has known no other head. She was one of that band of holy souls to whom it was given to restore the religious life and communion to, in our own time. Not without a struggle was it accomplished—now it is received as a matter of course, and they who were scorned are honored of men and women as well as by angels and saints.

Still practically, the religious life as such, has not the place in the thoughts and affections of devout people that it should have; sisters are too often looked upon as those who ought to do the charitable work that others do not care to do, and some with evident vocations of God shrink, draw back and sometimes marry. Parents hinder and forbid their children following the call of God. It is a serious thing to interfere.

We ought to pray God during these Rogation days that He may give vocations to some of this congregation for the priesthood and sister life. Strengthen unsettled ones; help any who may be on the point of failing.

A mass was said for the repose of the soul of Mother Harriet on April 13th.

The Home by the Sea.

The summer season is now very near, and the Sea-shore Home at Point Pleasant will soon again be opened to receive guests. A great many people have enjoyed a visit to this delightful summer home, and in a majority of cases it is the only outing and relief from household duties in a hot, dry city. Those who are benefited, cannot, as a rule, afford to pay even train fares, and the managers and friends of the home are compelled to obtain money to conduct it from outside sources. Money realized by subscriptions is not usually sufficient, and to obtain the desired sum some kind of an entertainment was thought to be the most satisfactory way. Wednesday evening, May 6th, a pretty little operetta—Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs—will be given in the school-room. The cast will NOT include Madames Melba, Scalchi, Nordica and MM. Eduard De Reszke, Pol Plancon, Jean De Reszke, but all who will be kind enough to attend are assured of an enjoyable evening.

Tickets are 50 cents; children, 25 cents; and may be bought at 2015 Cherry street.

PARISH NOTES.

The notes in our last issue brought us down to Palm Sunday, The palms were blessed before the 7 o'clock mass. At the 11 o'clock celebration they were distributed to the choir, and the solemn procession took place immediately after. The choir was unusually large, quite a number of men having volunteered for the service. The "Messe des Orpheonistes" was sung. The Deacon and Sub-Deacon of the mass wore folded chasubles.

During Holy Week, in spite of the many services, there was a good attendance at all. The "stations" were said in the evening until Good Friday.

The church was well filled on Good Friday at 11 o'clock, and at the "Preaching of the Passion" it was crowded. Fr. Sargent, Superior of Holy Cross, kindly undertook this, much to our joy and spiritual profit.

Easter day was a very joyous day to us all; 430 communions were made at the early masses at our own altar, and the clergy know of many more made at other altars from force of circumstances, while some necessarily received communion during the octave. At 11 o'clock the church was so crowded that many persons were compelled to stand until the end of the service. The choir was almost as large as on Palm Sunday, and Schubert's Mass in G was sung, with orchrestral and organ accompaniment. At night, again the congregation filled the church. Low Sunday, both morning and night the church was almost as well filled as on Easter Day. The hours of services for Lent and Easter were not printed in the daily papers, and no special effort was made to get a large attendance; it was all natural.

Mission work is needed in a way that would be for the lasting good of the Parish. We have a place in this city, and every communicant ought to be able to bring in one or more persons to share the privileges here. This could be effected by prayer and persevering effort. All it needs is love of God and zeal for religion.

The second mass, on week days at 7.30, we hope may continue until Trinity. More people ought to hear mass daily, and we think they could if they were in earnest.

We have much to be thankful for because of the Easter offertory. From that and the annual report, we seem to be in fair financial condition, and we hope in another year to be in still better. Some "pointing" of stone work ought to be done, and the windows should be looked after.

Every one ought to read Fr. Maturin's latest book, the price has been reduced to $1.25. Copies of "Confession and Absolution" may now be bought from the Sisters.

Letters from Father Maturin speak of a busy and interesting Lent in London, Holy Week and Easter in Scotland, and that he himself is in good health.

A sale of articles in aid of our Mission work was held in the Parish building, April 14th and 15th. A great number of useful and other articles had been contributed. The room looked very inviting and attractive, and great credit is due to the committee for their work and efforts. The hot weather may have interfered with the attendance, as comparatively few persons came. But we hope it is not an evidence of indifference to this important part of our work. In spite of everything, a sum of over $300 was realized. Many articles left over were sold on Saturday evening, April 25th, and the remainder will aid in the sale for Sea shore Home at Point Pleasant.

Every one ought to take time for Rogation intercessions, either at home or in church, as well as attend a mass each day. Continual intercession is kept up in the church day and night during these days.

We are grateful to the correspondent of The Living Church for notices of Palm Sunday services, but we would assure him that whatever may be the custom at the other churches mentioned, at St. Clements' we do not have "acolytes with lighted candles, also veiled in violet," whatever that may mean.

As garden flowers become abundant, we hope that some may be sent for the altar. They should be at the church by 4 o'clock on Saturday afternoons.

The Bishop is to make his annual visitation to this Parish on Wednesday, May 27th, at 8 P. M. Those who desire to receive the Sacrament of Confirmation at that time, are asked to give in their names without delay. General instruction Fridays, at 8 P. M.; classes at other times.

Many persons attend our services regularly. If they desire to become members of the Parish, they ought to obtain a letter of transfer from the Parish to which they have been attached.

It seems as if the report of the number of communicants this year must be smaller than last. We can only report those we know to be in good standing, who have made their communion at least once during the year. All others are unknown, lapsed, suspended or attending other churches. It ought to be a part of Christian courtesy to let the clergy know of changes, removals, etc.

The Convention of the Diocese meets on Tuesday the 5th of May, at St. Luke's Church, Philadelphia.

Guild of St. Lawrence.

Owing to the action of the Executive Committee of the Epileptic Hospital in abolishing the General Dispensary, the visiting in that connection, which was in former years a feature of St. Clement's missionary work, will necessarily cease.

Wedding Bells.

Mrs. Lena M. Garrett was married to Mr. Wm. H. Rule at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, Wednesday, April 8th. The service was quite elaborate. Mr. Gaff played Festal March in C (Calkin) Berceuse in A (Darbruck), and the choir sang the Lohengrin Wedding March going in, and coming out—"The Voice that Breathed o'er Eden."

A very large congregation of friends and invited guests filled the church.

The bride and groom each wore traveling dress, and started on their wedding tour immediately after the ceremony.

They were married by the Rev. Herbert Parrish.

A Musicale for Charity.

On the night of Wednesday, April 22d, at the residence of Mrs. Lytle, 923 N. 42d street, a musicale was given in aid of the charitable work which is carried on by the Guild of St. Lawrence. Mrs. Lytle was assisted in the entertainment by Miss Grace Piper, Mr. H. Winfield Kneedler, Miss Roberts, Mrs. Hughes, Mr. Remi Remont. At the conclusion there was a sale of fancy articles, and refreshments. The proceeds of this musicale will be a most welcome addition to the society's funds, and for this as well as for the pleasant evening's entertainment, the Guild would thank those to whom they are indebted.

The Choir Boys' Recreation Club.

The Choir Boys' Club spent some quiet Lenten evenings, so the boys thought; on the whole they bore well the restraint from noisy games, as well as the being constantly repressed at any outburst of merriment which might have disturbed the chapel services. They were rewarded on Easter Tuesday with a banquet and a lemon race. Prizes were won by experts, and others were provided for less experienced players. A friend helped eke out the little balance in the treasury, and we thought then we were bankrupt until the concert would come off, but the Rector tells us of a gift handed him for us, so we are not quite broken up financially, and may hope for a day at the Zoo or some other out-door pleasure.

We are grateful to the kind friend who remembered us and has done so before.

Note.

Thanks are due those ladies who so quickly responded to the request for help in making choir cottas. Most of them are now made, and were a great help when so many were needed at the festival services. More are being cut out, and perhaps some persons may like to have them for summer work, as by the autumn many of the old ones will have given out and we will again be short.

Cast-off Clothing.

Any gifts of partly-worn clothing, particularly men's, would be much appreciated. Deserving applicants have been sent away daily, owing to the exhausted condition of the Guild's closets.

An Encouraging Case.

The following has been written by one of the faithful workers of the Parish, and its perusal ought to give encouragement to those whose energies flag, where so much effort seems to result in so little good.

Between four and five years ago, a dispensary visitor rang for admittance at a most uninviting looking house on —— street. A refined and attractive looking young girl opened the door. The visitor made the usual announcement that she had been sent to sign a dispensary ticket, and the young girl said, "My sister will see you, it is my mother who is sick." The ticket was signed. The sick woman was too weak to care to see a stranger; but the visit was the most interesting the visitor had ever made for the dispensary. The family consisted of an elderly woman with three daughters (one married, and several children); they had known happier days and had been comfortably off. The father had been a musician of some talent, a composer. The married daughter, they said, had been unfortunate in her husband, and had come home with her children. She was very young and pretty, but with a quiet dignity about her that impressed the visitor, who listened from time to time to a long and sad story. They were Church people, had at one time their own pew, and always occupied it, but for some time they had gone nowhere. The three daughters had not been confirmed, and two children were unbaptized. The visitor was asked to come again, which she did many times. The patient for whom she signed the ticket improved, but very soon one of the children was taken ill with diphtheria, and the visitor who called, not knowing of the child's illness, was shocked to see that there was no time to be lost in going for a Priest. The Rector himself went quickly to the house and the child was baptized. The next morning the other child was taken to the Church and the Rector baptized it also. Before that night the sick child was dead. The Rector read the burial service, and he and the visitor were the only persons allowed to enter the house. The Board of Health urged the family to find other quarters, which they did, but quite far away. Before they could get away, another child was taken so ill with pneumonia that it could not be moved for some time after most of the family were settled in a new home.

With the little godchild to look after, and an unusual interest in them all, the visitor has followed them up. Six months after their removal the youngest of the girls came to see her and to tell her that she would be confirmed at St. ——'s.

At this time the married daughter is living happily with her husband in a pretty home in a suburban town; she has been confirmed; is taking charge of the Infant School of the village Church, and is doing good work there. The third daughter has also been confirmed at St. ——'s, and the two daughters with their mother are under the kind care of the Rector of that Parish.

Few visits are followed by such encouraging results, yet is it not worth the work to find one which leads up to so much?

Sea-shore Home.

Again at Point Pleasant a house has been rented for the purpose of giving some of our people a holiday by the sea. The report of last year is presented for the information of parishioners. The house is more conveniently situated, nearer the ocean, and also the railway station, and it is somewhat larger; the number of persons benefited must depend on the amount of money given. We would ask any who wish to contribute toward the expense of the work to put the money in an envelope marked "Sea-shore Home" and place it in offertory on Ascension Day, or at some other time before the 15th of June.

During last summer 255 persons were given a holiday at the home, and those members of the Guild of St. Mary who could not go for a visit spent a day there.

The Stations with the Lantern.

On the last two Thursdays in Lent instead of the usual Mothers' Meeting, the Stations of the Cross were made by a good number of worshippers, the service being held in the Sunday-school room. A lantern was used, and the pictures of the Stations were thrown upon a screen. The service was in other respects the same as is usual in the Chapel, except that the varying stanzas of the Story of the Cross were sung by a single voice. In this Messrs. Remi Remont and E. F. Remont kindly assisted, and in the management of the lantern, Mr. H. Clay Borden and Mr. Morgan Van Leer.

More Stamps Wanted.

It is not a myth that canceled postage stamps have a market value. They really can be sold for legitimate purposes, and for a price which, if it is small, is still perhaps a fair compensation for those who are willing to cultivate a tender conscience toward the upper right-hand corners of envelopes received. As a matter of fact the charity work of St. Lawrence's Guild is largely carried on from funds raised in this manner. Recently, from some cause, the influx of stamps has diminished. But the need is as great as ever, and we hope the supply will not fail. Stamps may be given to Miss Heylin.

A PLAIN STORY.

Written in a Plain Way for St. Clements' Choirboys.

BY A PLAIN CHOIRMAN.

When I was a boy we had a very simple toy that consisted of an elastic cord with a small wooden ball fastened to one end and a finger-ring to the other. This arrangement was called a "return-ball," because, with the ring upon his finger, a person could throw the ball at any object, or in any direction, and the elasticity of the cord would cause the ball to "return" to the hand it had left, perhaps, at the very moment that a collision between it and some destroying object seemed inevitable. In the window of a little shop on a side street I recently saw this toy for sale, and was surprised to find that it, as well as myself, had survived the ravages of time. Some of you may, therefore, be familiar with the plaything in question.

After carefully studying boys for many years I have become convinced that good boys are, in many cases, simply the "return-balls" of good mothers. The boy is the ball and the mother's love and influence form the cord. This cord may, at times, be strained to the point of breaking, but it does not break. It is so elastic that the ball may be hurled ever so far away, yet it invariably returns. Forces over which the mother can have no control may sometimes carry the boy into the gravest danger; but, just as he is on the point of contact with some great evil and one is trembling for his welfare; just when he appears to have thrown off all restraint and broken loose from all good influences; lo, there is felt the power of that magic cord, the other end of which is planted in the secret depths of a mother's loving heart! The cord, instead of having been broken, has simply been stretched to its full capacity, and the "return-ball," after its swift rush forward, grazes the evil and then, before it can be caught by the latter and held a prisoner, flies irresistibly back to the safety of the heart that is always waiting to receive it.

I say this is often the case with good boys of good mothers. If you don't believe it, observe for yourself.

Well, so it was with Mike. In his anger and excitement he had forgotten everything but the taunts of Bertie and his own desire to punish the offender; but, as his arm descended, a curious thing happened. Between his own face and Bertie's there arose another, a patient face, with lines of care and suffering traced about the tender mouth; with sad eyes that gazed into his with such pained surprise and gentle reproach that the boy's hand fell harmlessly to his side. For an instant he looked at Bertie with angry contempt. Then, with lips tightly compressed, he turned upon his heel and, without a word, forced his way through the crowd of boys and sped swiftly down the street with a fleetness they could not but admire, even as the hisses and hoots burst from their lips when they had recovered from the astonishment that momentarily paralyzed their tongues.

The cord had been stretched, and the "return-ball" was on its backward journey.

Bertie was delighted. The affair could not have terminated more satisfactorily to him. But he concealed his pleasure and said in the most contemptuous tones he could command:

"Sneak and coward! I felt sure he hadn't the pluck to stand up and fight, but I didn't think he'd make such a clean back-down before the whole choir. It's a good thing for him, though," he concluded complacently, "that he didn't stay, for I had made up my mind to give him a thrashing that would put an end to his sneaking tricks around here."

"You're not only a boaster, but you don't tell the truth," cried Archie, impetuously. "You know in your heart that Mike could thrash you with one hand, and we could all see that you were shaking in your boots for fear he'd do it. If Mike didn't give you the punishment you deserve it was because he thought you weren't fit to lay hands upon, and felt ashamed of himself for having noticed you at all."

Bertie's face flushed, and he turned savagely upon Archie. He could scarcely restrain himself from rushing upon his accuser, who was smaller and slimmer than he, and succeeded in controlling himself only because he feared trouble with Mr. Tracy should he strike Archie; though any of the older choirboys could have told him that Archie would die rather than carry tales to his father. Bertie managed at last to remark with some appearance of indifference:

"Oh, you may say what you please, of course, but you can't explain his running away, just when it came to the point, except upon the ground that he's a coward."

Most of the boys, if not all, seemed to be of the same opinion; and, with a heavy heart, Archie realized that the reputation of his friend Mike was ruined, and that, unless something happened to change the course of events, the solo boy of St. John's choir would be forever regarded by his companions with dislike and contempt.

* * * * * *

On and on sped Mike! Street after street was crossed, but he did not know it; the houses glided past him in rapid procession, but he saw them not; the big electric lights gazed at him in solemn wonder, and the gas lights, as he rushed past, flared up and looked down upon him with mocking smirks, but he gave no heed to the curious stares of the former and was totally oblivious to the taunting glances of the latter. He knew not what route he took, nor did he care. All he wanted was to get away from Bertie; to escape from the jeers that tempted him to forget himself and all his principles; to avoid the boys' contemptuous glances, which he had felt as he forced his way through the crowd and fled like a coward from the temptation that assailed him.

Coward? Ay, that's what they would call him now. How could they know otherwise? They could not understand his feelings or sympathize with his struggle, for they were incapable of comprehending his constant effort so to live that he should not add another line of care or shade of pain to the face that always arose before him in the time of temptation.

Perhaps it was habit that guided his footsteps homeward. He rushed into the house, bounded up stairs, and, entering the little room he called his own, closed the door and threw himself, face downward, upon the cot.

BLACK CHASUBLE.

The Confirmation.

We beg leave to copy the following from an article in The Evangelists, the Parish paper of Church of the Evangelists, Philadelphia, and to thank them for the helpfulness of it. We wish that many might read it; the article begins by referring to a Parish custom of signing a card containing a renewal of Christian vows as an evidence of continued faithfulness:

"There is nothing so sad as the thought expressed by the Apostle: 'Ye did run well.' Perhaps it was for years, and then there was a change and carelessness came in—what caused it? No doubt different things in different cases; but many, a great many, instances are explained by the simple word—marriage. After marriage there come home and household duties which are all-absorbing, and so Church is neglected, and then, little by little the sacraments. Confessions are made at long intervals, or perhaps neglected altogether, and communions follow the same course—and thus the whole Christian life is left a wreck. Sometimes it is before marriage, particularly in the case of young men. They fall in with a light, frivolous, vain, if not worthless girl, or (which is still worse) with a religious devotee of some false religion, and the impure heart of the one, or the impure religion of the other, little by little destroys their Christian life. Now all this comes of forgetting that holy marriage is a sacrament. Like Confirmation and holy Baptism it is a means of grace, and so it should be entered into with great seriousness and in the fear of God. The Apostle tells us that marriage is the type or picture of Christ's union with the Church, that as Christ is the Head of the Church so the husband is the head of the wife. In choosing a wife the Christian man should seek for one who will be apt to be his companion and helper in walking the way which leads to eternal life, and one fit to be the mother and trainer of his children. In accepting a man for her husband, the woman should consider whether he is such an one as she can look up to and obey as being her best friend and leader to Heaven, as one to whom she can refer the children God may give her, and say 'follow the example of your father.' If marriages were thus made, and the express command of God obeyed, that they should be 'only in the Lord,' that is among faithful Christians, we should not find men and women falling from grace as soon as they are married. We have written upon this subject because after their Confirmation matrimony is usually the next new sacrament (if I may use the term), people come to receive.

"Confirmation by its gift of the strength and courage of the Holy Ghost should prepare the persons who receive it for the great battle against the world the flesh, and the devil. How much all require that help we need not stop to explain. But we urge our people to consider this subject seriously; to urge their children to be Confirmed, to do all in their power to encourage them in their desire to receive this sacrament, and if they have not as yet received themselves that anointing of the Lord, to be prepared that they may kneel before the Bishop, as did the first Samaritan converts before the Apostles, who shall (as they did) lay his hands upon them and they shall receive the Holy Ghost."

Father Maturin's Latest Book.

"To the congregation of St. Clement's, Philadelphia, U. S. A., in memory of ten happy years' ministry and many kindnesses received from them, this volume is dedicated."

So runs the graceful dedication of the new book of our dear friend, Father Maturin; the book is entitled: "Some Principles and Practices of the Spiritual Life." We are sure that we only voice the feeling of all when we express the grateful and loving appreciation of this honor done to us; that among the crowd of "other friends" and newer interests, that the people of St. Clement's still have a place, peculiar and apart, in his thought and affections It ought to be a wonderful force and power to any earnest soul to have been taught, guided and directed even for awhile by such a Priest; lessons, advice, counsel never to be forgotten; a clear idea of God, the soul, eternity to enkindle one's flagging zeal for holiness; to encourage one to persevere to the end. These words will revive some of the old time counsel that came with all the power and eloquence of his living voice; will suggest to many the message that God gave to them through him that they belong to God and must live for God.

Father Maturin's work here was that of a "Pioneer" of the Spiritual Life, awakening souls, building them up by means of the "powers of the world to come." He realized that the supernatural life was the only life for an immortal soul; he went ahead and the children of God followed. His own life was given to God, and he would teach others the way; some of us knew, partly, what he did; but the most reap the benefit.

Father Maturin had "an ideal," and St. Clement's had a part in the realization of it. It was not given him to accomplish it fully; it remains for others to carry it on.

Copies of the volume may be obtained or ordered from the Sisters at the Mission House, 2036 Cherry street.

Attention is called to the new tract by Father Maturin, "Sin." It is an address given this winter in London. Those who have not already done so, ought to get Father Maturin's "Confession and Absolution." His "Preparation for Holy Communion," would be helpful to many who find it difficult to prepare; these also may be obtained at the Mission House.

The Children of the Church.

The effort which the district visitors of the Guild of St. Lawrence are soon to make, to find and look after as many as possible of the hundreds of children who have been baptized at St. Clement's, is an attempt to realize in practice what the Church teaches very plainly in theory, namely, that Holy Baptism is the sacrament which admits to full membership in Christ's Body. It is, therefore, both for the baptized and for the Church a "sacrament of responsibility." It puts the child or person baptized in touch with the Divine Life, and so implies the great obligation of correspondence with that life. It makes him a member to the Church, and thus imposes a duty on the part of the Church to treat him as such.

This is no new doctrine; it is the evident teaching of the Prayer Book and of Catholic Christendom. But, practically, in our communion, confirmation looms up and usurps the place of baptism as the initial sacrament of Church membership. Statistical returns to convention lay the emphasis upon the number of communicants, and this, by a loose, general interpretation, has often been taken to mean the number of confirmed persons who can fairly be said to be attached to a Parish. Great efforts are made to secure large classes for confirmation. Children and parents get the impression that somehow there is less obligation to serve God if one can avoid or postpone confirmation; and those who, for one reason or another, are baptized but never confirmed, commonly come to regard themselves, and to be regarded, as outside of the pale of the Church, a nondescript and often irreligious class.

Now we venture to say that this is all wrong, and that it is capable of partial, if not complete, remedy. We might dwell upon the duties of sponsorship, and doubtless much could justly be said of the light manner in which those duties are assumed by some and the very imperfect way in which they are fulfilled by many. But, after all, the institution of sponsors is only one expression of the Church's faith in the Divine operation in the Sacrament of Baptism; and it must not be made answerable for the performance of the Church's whole duty to her baptized children. With the best intentions and a full realization of the import of their office, Godparents are by force of circumstances often prevented from doing for their spiritual children more than to make a periodical remembrance of them in their intercessions. This is much, but more is needed. The Church idea demands that a visible relationship shall exist between the body and its members.

Parochial agencies should be directed toward keeping children in touch with the Church's life and influence from the hour of their baptism, and pains taken systematically and frequently to bring home to the growing minds of these little Christians the fact that they are not only "the children of God" in some vague sense, but are already members of His Church, their names enrolled upon its records, their homes well known, their spiritual and earthly welfare are objects of special and definite care to those who feed the flock.

With the realization of these facts, there would come a sense of continuous responsibility. Confirmation would not involve a sudden and abrupt choice of standards, for the child would know himself to be already enlisted as Christ's soldier, and he would welcome any help which God dispenses through His Church for the strengthening and refreshing of the soul.

In all this we do not wish to imply that through Sunday-schools, through the prayers and labors of Godparents and others, nothing is done to accomplish such an end; we only wish to urge that the aim is not kept distinctly enough in view; that there is in many cases a long period of neglect between the time when a child is baptized and the time when any attempt is made to remind him of his spiritual relationships, and in the meantime other influences have entered and occupied the heart and attention of the growing Christian.

Confirmation.

The Bishop of the Diocese has been obliged to postpone the date of our confirmation, owing to his illness, which, although said not to be serious, may be long and tiresome in the convalescent stage. Bishop Coleman, of Delaware, will give the sacrament on Sunday, June 7th, and instructions will continue until that date. If possible, arrangements will be made for those who are unable to wait, to be confirmed elsewhere.

Parish Notes.

Father Page writes: "Please tell my aggrieved relations I suppose I omitted to mention St. Clement's, with the thought in my mind of its being one of the family well known." This refers to his letter of last fall in the Cowley Magazine. He also says: "Father Maturin has been wonderfully well this Lent and at his best in preaching. He has engagements very numerous in England until the end of the year. Please accept the dedication of his book, as a dedication in which we all join, and in some way, I trust, as wiping out my neglect."

Father Puller went to Rome soon after Easter with Mr. Lacey, "to be present there during the sitting of the Commission which has been appointed by Leo XIII to consider whether the usual Roman Catholic teaching about Anglican orders is correct. Some members of the Commission were anxious to have the help of Anglican priests, who might be capable of giving it. Of course, such help is not given to the Commission as a body, but to such members of the Commission as wish to have it."

Father Puller's letters are very interesting, and he seems to have received a kindly welcome in the Eternal City.

Father Puller has contributed three articles on "Anglican Orders and the Sacrifice of the Mass" to La Revue Anglo-Romaine. "This review has been started by those of our brethren on the Continent who are desirous to destroy the ancient prejudices which prevent English and Roman churchmen from seeing the naked truth about each other." (Church Times, May 1st.) "The Archbishop of York has written to the author a letter, which serves as a sort of imprimatur, stamping them with the seal of official approbation."

Another item of interest (Church Times): "The utterance of the Bishop of Salisbury as to non-communicating attendance may be taken as a further indication of the progress of Catholic truth. After a careful study of the history of the Prayer Book he was forced to the conclusion, he said, that the Church of England had nowhere ordered the withdrawal of attendants. This declaration, if cold in the mouth of an advocate, is quite satisfactory in the mouth of a judge, and, coming from the place it did, it partakes of the character of a judicial pronouncement. We welcome it as of good omen for the final triumph of Catholic truth."

We also learn that "the Archbishop of Canterbury has deputed the Bishop of Peterborough to attend the Coronation at Moscow as a representative of the Church of England."

The Bishop of Newark has given permission to certain churches in that Diocese to have the Blessed Sacrament reserved all the time. These notices of permission, for there have been others, prove that the reservation is not contrary to the spirit and intention of our Church as a part of the Catholic Church. One by one Catholic doctrines and practices are being accepted as a fact.

The new church at Cowley was dedicated May 12th, and from photographs and accounts we judge it is very dignified. God's blessing rests on the Society of St. John.

The Convention of the Diocese was in session for two days in St. Luke's Church. As a matter of fact, one day would have been sufficient for the necessary business. In the absence of the Bishop, Rev. Dr. Perry, of Germantown, was elected to preside. There were various rumors circulated as to hostile purposes, but the loaded cannons did not go off.

Mr. Erskine Wright, a member of St. Clement's, is to be ordained Deacon this (Trinity) Sunday. He has just been graduated at the General Theological Seminary. Another member of the congregation is to be ordained at Nashotah, and several others are preparing for Holy Orders. Apparently St. Clement's does her share in that part of the missionary activities of the Church.

If members of the congregation would give their contributions for outside charitable purposes through the offertory, St. Clement's would be spared some of that unkind censure which is semi-publicly given at stated intervals. We believe we were made the subject of a violent attack on a recent public occasion.

The angels, once on St. Clement's altar, are now in the chancel of the chapel of St. Mary the Virgin, Baltimore, and they add much to the general appearance of it.

The "Rogations" this year were well and faithfully kept. About one hundred kept them, according to promise, and many others kept them who did not promise. The church was never empty, and at times quite a congregation was present. Many availed themselves of this special opportunity. The Guild of St. Vincent kept the night hours. Ascension Day at seven, High Mass was sung, and a good congregation was present. Acolytes and choir had breakfast in the school-room, then the choir boys went off for a day's outing.

Monday, May 18th, the scaffolding was put up on the Parish building to do some of the "pointing" of stone work. It will depend entirely upon the amount of money given how much is done, as no debt will be incurred. New windows ought to be put in and the outside woodwork painted. An offering taken up for the purpose on Whitsunday amounted to $208.51, making whole available amount to date, $380.21.

The entertainment for the benefit of the Sea-shore Home was a great success; there was a crowded attendance, and "Snow White" was interesting. Our thanks are due to those who so faithfully worked, and those who kindly took part. We believe a sum of over $100 was realized.

Canon Knox Little, an old friend of St. Clement's, in his new book, "A Treasury of Meditation," which ought to be helpful to many, says in a meditation on "Names of the Sacrament," p. 312:

"I must meditate upon this as the Holy Mass. Think of this name binding us to the whole Western Church as Eucharist to the Eastern. Here I have a name consecrated also by the use of the first Prayer Book, and by the sweet and familiar names of Christmas and Michaelmas. Think how I am reminded how all the Church is bound together in this solemn mystery, when I think, with St. Ambrose, of the Mass. Remember, O my soul, how thou art permitted to show and present before God the great sacrifice of Calvary. Cling to the great duty, neglected by some, of not only making communion at proper time, but also of worshipping God and showing forth before Him the sacrifice of His dear Son, and pleading the sacrifice."

The Sea-shore Home will be opened, D. V., on Monday, June 29th. We are sorry to say that, through some mistake, the names of some of our subscribers last year were not entered in the report, making the balance given incorrect.

The names omitted are given below:

Mrs. Alex. Hemsley	$5 00
Miss E. Hemsley	2 00
Mrs. W. Halsey Wood	3 00
Mrs. De Grasse Fox	10 00
Dr. A. D. Hall for Mrs. Hall	3 00

The Sisters have been much gratified in several cases to receive gifts for the Home from those in whom it was an offering of real self-sacrifice, as in the case of poor, hard-working women, and again a little girl who had saved up her pocket money to the amount of $3.

The following articles are some of those most needed at the Home during the coming season: Books—good novels or magazines, toys, dolls and material for dressing them, table and bed linen, towels, bathing suits, knives, forkes, glasses and pitchers.

Those who wish them can obtain collecting cards to the amount of $1 or $5 at the Mission House, 2034 Cherry street.

An Open Letter.

ROME, April 14th, 1896.

I have just returned from a mass at the Vatican, at which the Pope was the celebrant. A Papal dragoon made his appearance the day before at our hotel with invitations printed on large sheets of paper, notifying us we were to appear the next day, dressed in black, with veils; men in dress suits. After an early breakfast we drove to St. Peter's, where those beautiful fountains shoot up their spray in the brilliant Roman sunshine; then we went along the marble corridor and up that grand stairway which leads into the interior of the Vatican. The mass was held in the Sale Ducale. The chapel was already half filled when we arrived, all the front part being occupied by a pilgrimage from France. Stationed at the entrance and toward the altar were the Swiss Guard, in their curious uniforms. We waited a long while, and then the Pope's choir began to sing, without any organ accompaniment; it was very beautiful, a great volume of sound, one voice especially, a high soprano—very wonderful for a man. And then there was a stir and a push, and the Papal Guard, composed entirely of Italian noblemen, entered; the curtain at the side of the altar was pushed aside, and I saw the Pontiff of Rome. He was dressed entirely in scarlet cassock and cape, with a small white cap on his head. He looked so very old and feeble and bent, as if with much prayer, but with an expression of the greatest sweetness and benignity. He was then vested for the mass. As he began his voice was quite wonderfully distinct. There were two masses; His Holiness assisting at the next; after that was over he left the chapel to reappear again shortly to receive the pilgrims, who were from the dioceses of Limoges and Aquitana, led by Monseigneur the Bishop of Limoges, who, in an address, presented a magnificent repository containing a relic of St. Marziah, Bishop and Apostle of Aquitana, to be placed in the Vatican. The Pope replied at some length, and then received the pilgrims, who knelt to kiss his hand and to receive his blessing. It was then announced that the Papal benediction was given to all present, and to all objects that were brought to be blessed, and then, amidst cries of "Viva Saint Pére," the Pope, with a smile of great sweetness, was borne away in his chair.

The life of Leo XIII may be summed up in two words—work and prayer. It is a very simple life, rising early, eating alone and sparely; his table is said to cost him two francs and a half a day, a contrast to his immense income, said to average about nine million francs a year from the donations of Peter's pence. It is only by special permission he is seen at all now, as he never leaves the Vatican, a voluntary prisoner there, and one cannot but feel when one looks at him, so fragile and with the glow of the spirit within in his deep set eyes, that it will not be long before the chair of St. Peter is vacant.

The Catechism.

The Catechism closed Trinity Sunday afternoon with a fête. Prizes were given to those who had presented the best diligences.

A service for children will be held Sunday afternoons during the summer at 3 o'clock.

The Catechism has had a successful year in spite of the fact that the plan was a new one and there were only a few scholars to start with. The number of scholars more than doubled during the year, and, better than that, it is certain that a good deal was learned. The instruction about covered the round of Christian doctrine, and the children were taught much practical religion.

A PLAIN STORY.

Written in a Plain Way for St. Clements' Choirboys.

BY A PLAIN CHOIRMAN.

Each day, when he came home from school; each evening, when he returned from the choir, the first thing he did was to go to the little sewing-room and kiss the dear face that he loved better than anything else in the world; but to-night he could not do it—at least, not now. He would wait; wait until the storm that raged within him subsided; wait until the consuming fire died out of his heart and the fierce light faded from his eyes.

And so, he lay there. But the tempest, instead of spending itself, seemed to increase in fury and violence, and he gripped the frame of the cot with vise-like clasp, feeling that he had made a great mistake in not thrashing Bertie as he had intended, and thinking that, if his hands now clasped his tormentor's throat instead of the senseless wood about which the fingers were twined, he could strangle his enemy—could and would. Yes, he would throttle him; choke him—choke him till his treacherous face was purple, till his taunting eyes bulged with terror, till his smiling mouth was contorted with pain and his lying tongue cried for mercy. Ah, he would—

He did not hear the door softly opened or detect a quiet step upon the floor, and he knew nothing of the presence of another until a hand was laid gently upon his down-turned head.

Ah, he knew that hand!—knew it as well as he knew his own. There was but one hand in the world with a touch like that!

Then he waited for the voice; the sweetest voice that ever fell upon his ears; a voice which had the power to soothe the wildest tumults of his heart.

Now, some may suppose that the first thing this voice said was, "What's the matter, Mike?"—or something to that effect; but those who suppose this simply show how little they know of mothers and their ways.

Since the death of Mr. Jones, this mother had had a queer way of calling her boy "Pop"—perhaps, because he was now the "man of the house"—and he loved to have her call him so, for it seemed to express her trust in him and her faith in his ability and his willingness to meet the responsibility that now devolved upon him.

So, now, she simply laid her head beside his, and whispered in his ear,

"Pop, you haven't kissed me to-night."

There was silence for several moments. Then, the form before her quivered and a hand stole forth and clasped hers, which was drawn down beneath the hidden face and covered with kisses. Then the face was upturned; the eyes, from which all the hate and anger had been driven by the love that now filled them, gazed into hers through a mist of tears; an arm was thrown convulsively about her neck; and, laying his hot, aching head upon her shoulder, Mike burst into a passion of weeping.

A big boy to cry! exclaim you in surprise. Well, perhaps so; but then it is strange what a child the biggest boy is—when alone with his mother.

She let him have his way, and he sobbed out the story of his trouble.

"Bertie taunted me with being stingy, and said I was too mean to ride. And it's not so; I'm not mean—am I, mother?"

"No, dear; but of course Bertie doesn't know how economically we have to live, and how hard it is for us to get along on what I can earn. He doesn't know that all your choir salary is turned over to me to help pay our expenses?"

"And he doesn't know," added Mike, smiling at her through his tears, "that I walk always because I'm saving all my car fares to give you and Tessie a treat this summer, does he?"

He looked at the hand he still held in his. It was worn and rough, and the forefinger bore the unmistakable marks of the seamstress—marks that represented days and nights of incessant toil and years of persevering labor.

Again the boy covered the hand with kisses.

"Mother," he burst out passionately, "I hate to see you work the way you have to. I help you all I can. I work hard at school so as to get along rapidly, for I realize the value an education will be. I try to do well in the choir; for, whatever money I can make there is a real help to us. But," he concluded, looking wistfully into her face, "I wish you would let me leave school and go to work. It would make things ever so much easier for you."

"No, dear; you could not earn much now. We will struggle on for a few years longer. My health is good, thank God, and I want you to get far enough in school to be able to fill satisfactorily any position that the future may open to you. It would be a great disappointment, in addition to an actual loss, if you had to refuse a promising opportunity because you lacked the necessary knowledge."

Mike felt the wisdom of this and said no more upon the subject.

"But, mother," he went on, "I can't go back to the choir. I can't do it. All the boys will despise me, and I suppose none of them will ever have anything to do with me, or will even speak to me again. No, it wouldn't be possible for me to go back."

She looked at him thoughtfully for a moment. Presently, she spoke; but upon an entirely different subject. She seemed to have forgotten what he had said.

"Come, Pop; let us go in and see Tessie, and kiss her good-night."

Together, they went into the mother's room, and Mike, approaching the bed, bent tenderly over the little figure that lay there. The head upon the pillow was crowned with a wealth of short, fluffy ringlets; and, as the boy stooped and pressed his lips gently upon the rosy mouth, the sleeper stirred; her chubby arms were involuntarily thrown about his neck, and the babyish voice unconsciously murmured in drowsy tones:

"Dood night, bruzzer Mike. Tiss Tessie dood-night."

Again the boy kissed the child; and, when he arose and turned to his mother, the clouds had vanished, and a great load was lifted from her heart as she saw the look of tranquil courage upon the strong young face.

He went up to her, threw his arms about her; and, giving her a little squeeze, said:

"I didn't mean what I said, mother, I'll go back to the choir, happen what may. I'll never give up the fight. I began wrong by getting so angry with Bertie and allowing his taunts to make me forget myself, though I didn't see it at the time; but I think I did right in the end, and I'll face the thing through if not a boy ever speaks to me again."

Parish Notes.

The Rev. W. C. Clapp has taken charge of the mission work of the parish.

The monthly meetings of most of the guilds have been suspended until the autumn. This ought not to mean the relaxation of rules, confessions and communions. God still exists for our worship and religion as the bond of union still claims the faithful.

Permission has been asked of the Council of the C. B. S. for the organization of St. Saviour's Ward. Vespers were sung on the eve of Corpus Christi and a temporary organization effected; Mr. Edward S. Holloway was elected Secretary and Treasurer. Annual dues are now payable to him by all who are attached to this ward.

The new Conventional Church of the Society of St. John Evangelist, at Cowley, was dedicated by the Lord Bishop of Oxford on May 12th. The account as given in the Cowley Magazine for June is most interesting. The new structure is worthy of its association and work. Any work and news of the society cannot fail to be of interest to us.

The 8 o'clock mass on Sundays has been discontinued for the summer.

Children's service at 3 P. M. on Sundays in the chapel.

Mr. Gladstone's letter on the subject of "Reunion" cannot fail to impress many indifferent persons as to the importance of the whole matter. Truth and right must be stronger and higher than opinions and views, even though prejudices may strengthen the latter. Things work out slowly, but in the end results must be reached. The commission may come to no conclusion, but the mere fact of the inquiry, the interest of Roman scholars, the kindness of the Holy Father, are tokens of a change in religious circles.

The Repair Fund.

Progress has been made in the important work of repairs; the roofs, which have not been thoroughly overhauled for a long time, have been put in good condition; all the exposed places of the stone work are to be pointed; the new windows will soon be in position, and the outside wood work painted. Much more might be done, but we must wait for money. The contracts already made are:

Stone work	$350 00
Windows	492 90
Roof	165 99
Painting	85 00
Total	$1,093 89

In answer to the appeal, the offerings on Whitsun Day amounted to $208.39; $234.00 have come in since, and we had in hand $171.70, so that the whole amount at present available is $624 09. We need $469 80 more. Quite a number of people, through absence from the city, have not had the privilege of giving. We hope every one will go without something, and give for this purpose. In every congregation there are some who go without many things that they may give; but all ought to share.

DONATION.

Dolls for Christmas Festival, Mrs. McMullen.

Flowers for the Altar.

We are now dependent on the kindness of our people for flowers to decorate the altar; last summer the supply never failed, and we hope for the same generous thoughtfulness again this year. We would prefer to have garden flowers, for they are a token of thoughtful love; but florists' growths are not refused. The blossoms ought to be at the church by four o'clock on Saturday afternoon.

Ordination.

On Trinity Sunday, May 31st, at St. Simeon's Church, Philadelphia, Mr. Erskine Wright, a member of St. Clement's congregation, was ordained Deacon by the Bishop of the Diocese; he was presented by the Rector of St. Clement's. We are all particularly interested in this, both from past associations and also from the fact that we hope to have the benefit of his services in the parish. The sermon was preached by the Rector of Grace church; a large congregation was present, and they all joined heartily in the singing. The service was unduly prolonged by a number of persons who made their communions. Last year none of the congregation received; this year's change was not an edifying improvement.

Marriage.

The marriage of Mr. Arthur W. Howes and Miss Edith M. Wright was an event of special interest, from the fact that both were communicants of the Parish. There was a mass (pro sponso et sponso) in the early morning, and the ceremony took place at noon. Christian people often forget that baptism is a necessary condition for this holy estate, and that the Church advises the receiving of Holy Communion on the wedding day; parents and persons interested usually think more of the invitations, the display, the attendance, the reception, the presents, and various absurd customs, than they do of the object of the union and the value of the holy sacrifice and prayers.

Confirmation and First Communion.

The Bishop of Delaware gave the Sacrament of Confirmation at St. Clement's on Sunday, June 7th, at 8 o'clock. A large congregation showed their appreciation of the Bishop's presence. The newly confirmed made their first communion on the following Sunday at 7 o'clock; in spite of the heavy rain, nearly all came. The Bishop, learning that several were prevented by sickness, kindly offered to come to us again on Thursday afternoon, June 18th, when he gave the Sacrament of Confirmation to four others. The addresses on these occasions were very helpful.

We desire to call attention to a little book of devotions compiled by the Rev. F. E. Mortimer, of Jersey City, "The Pilgrim's Path."

Confirmation List.

On Thursday, June 18th, by the Bishop of Delaware, in Chapel of St. John Evangelist:

MacSherry, Robert,
Engle, Emma Louisa,
Clark, Eliza (née Shriver),
Reeves, Annie (née Kline).

Total for St. Clement's (males, 14; females, 22) 36; other parishes (males, 3; female, 1) 4.

The charge of the Bishop of Vermont on the "Church's Discipline Concerning Marriage and Divorce," speaks in no uncertain way about the truth of the matter—it is "until death us do part" for Christian people. He also calls attention to the relation of Baptism; this is lost sight of by many who treat of the matter.

The Sea-shore Home.

The Sisters are glad to take this opportunity of acknowledging with many thanks the receipt of $50 sent anonymously for the Sea-shore Home.

The receipts up to date amount to $663.82. Between $800 and $900 more is still needed.

In response to the appeal in June number of MAGAZINE, a quantity of books, some dolls and material for dressing them, and a gift of four dozen towels have been received.

A desk or writing table with drawers that will lock, would be most acceptable.

The first party will go to Point Pleasant on Monday, June 29th. The house accommodates about fifty.

A PLAIN STORY.

Told in a Plain Way for St. Clement's Choirboys.

BY A PLAIN CHOIRMAN.

Ah, marvelous tact of a mother's mind! divine tenderness of a mother's heart! wondrous power of a mother's love! what is impossible to these?

And so, Mike, we have found you out! This is the explanation of many things we could not before comprehend. This is the secret of your perseverance and application; this the cause of your laborious painstaking efforts, this the reason of your consuming anxiety to excel in everything you undertake—behind it all lies a profound love, a wealth of gratitude, and a determination to bring ease and happiness into the life of one to whom you owe all that you may ever possess. Well, we can but hope that you will not be disappointed, and that, some day, you may be able to cherish, protect and provide for the mother who now, while your eyes are closed in slumber and your thoughts wander far away into dreamland, sits alone with her God, ceaselessly plying the flashing needle that wins the bread of life, and as ceaselessly entreating divine aid in the care and guidance of the boy whose happiness, welfare and future constitute the absorbing problem of her existence.
